Mr. STEENERSON. The Post Office Department proposes to reduce the rural carrier service, and they propose to refuse all new star routes and rural routes, and they propose to economize at the expense of efficiency. They propose to get out of the odium by saying that it is all due to the war, which we can not help; but we will show that it is due to blundering Democratic legislation, which we can help and which we will help in the near future. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman, in connection with the parcel-post proposition, whether or not since the Postmaster General has increased the size of the parcels any steps have been taken to pay the railroad companies of the country for the increased expense of carrying that increased weight?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, I believe Congress, on the estimate of the department, made an appropriation of 5 per cent.

Mr. McKENZIE. I mean since the order has been made increasing the size of the parcel.

Mr. STEENERSON. I could not state just now, but I believe that there is great complaint on the part of the railroad companies. How justifiable it is I do not know.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that no steps have been taken to pay the railroad companies, or they have not been paid for the carrying of this matter?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think there is a provision in the pending appropriation bill to pay them by an extra appropriation, and that should be taken out of the fund that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] claims is a surplus, because they have not paid for the services rendered in the last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes additional.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the Postmaster General made arbitrary ruling in increasing the size of the parcels and compelling the railroad companies to carry those parcels, it would naturally result in an increase of business?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. From which the department is going to profit. Now, if they are not paying the railroads for the service in carrying all this, is it not an unfair proposition to credit the department with an increase while they are compelling the railroads to render service for nothing?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is exactly true. That was the reason why I stated, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD], that the alleged surplus of last year is largely fictitious, because they had not paid their debts. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. LLOYD. There have been two weighings since the parcel-post law went into effect, and under the law now one-half of the country is receiving its full compensation for every pound of parcel-post matter that is carried.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I do not see how that can possibly be correct, because it is not four years since the order increased the weight of the parcel post.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman is aware of the fact the country is divided into four sections——

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. One of the four to be weighed each year, so that at the present time the law carries full compensation for two sections.

Mr. STEENERSON. How long ago was it since the last increase of weight?

Mr. LLOYD. Let me finish this. It is also true in the last appropriation bill last year we provided for an increase of 5 per cent on account of the parcel-post matter that——

Mr. STEENERSON. But how long ago was it since the last increase in the size of the package was made?

Mr. LLOYD. That was made nearly a year ago.

Mr. STEENERSON. Nearly a year ago. How, then, can there have been two weighings since that time, when you say they are quadrennial weighings, with one weighing in each section each year, and therefore it will take two years before you could get two sections weighed?

Mr. LLOYD. There has been one weighing since the increase to 20 pounds; there have been two weighings since the increase to 11 pounds.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Let me finish this. It is a bigger jump from 11 pounds to 50 than from 4 to 11, and consequently the weight of the mail has enormously increased by the latter change, which is not accounted for by the weighing; and I do not believe any living man—not even the experts—can tell anything approximately as to the increased volume of the weight of mail, which necessarily involves an increased pay to the railroads, because they are paid by the pound per mile.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to finish my sentence, if the gentleman will permit. They receive as much pay for carrying a pound of goods, whether it is flour or cheap merchandise, as letters. I was told the other day by an official of the Government that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to save appropriations made for his bureau, had shipped flour in 48-pound sacks to the Indian reservations in different parts of the country by parcel post.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not want to be understood as saying they receive the same compensation to-day for carrying a parcel as they do for carrying a letter. The gentleman has evidently made a mistake.

Mr. STEENERSON. I certainly mean to say that the railway-mail pay is based on the per ton per mile or the per pound per mile, and it does not make any difference whether that pound is made up of letters or flour.

Mr. LLOYD. That is the railroad companies.

Mr. STEENERSON. The railroad companies—that is what I am talking about. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LLOYD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman has gone astray. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Now, when you increase that kind of matter upon which the revenue, the postage, is very small, you do not increase the income of the Government but very little, but you increase enormously the expenditure of the Government, because you have got to pay the old rate, the same per pound per mile rate you always have paid. Now, you have hitherto been unable to change the railway-mail pay; of course, I am not going to enter into that discussion, but if you are going to make the Post Office Department show anything near a self-sustaining basis, you will have to change it or discontinue that heavy traffic——

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON (continuing). Because they can not continue to lay the blame on the European war. Yes; I will now yield to the gentleman—for a question.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Well, I am asking a question. Does not the gentleman know that we are paying for the movement of parcels at the rate of 10 cents per ton per mile to the railroads when the express companies are paying at the rate of 5 cents per ton per mile or less on the average? That wherever we pay we have to pay twice as much as the express companies.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no doubt. I will take the gentleman's word for it, and that shows why we are doing an unprofitable business when we are shipping flour and brick around the country by mail.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Another question.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman will please excuse me. That shows why there is such anxiety on the part of this administration to change the basis of railway mail pay, because they know they are getting into a hole, and they come up here through the leader of the majority and threaten us with a $14,000,000 deficit because of the foreign mail, when, as a matter of fact, the foreign mail has fallen off but very slightly.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STEENERSON. For a question.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Is it not a fact that the parcel-post rates are made upon bases which include full payment for railways and all the expenses of the service, besides a margin of over 10 per cent for profit? Is not that a fact?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not know anything about it. The gentleman is supposed to be the legal adviser in parcel-post matters, and there has been some blunderer at work or we would not be in the boat we are. So I am willing to give him credit for it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I have no doubt some theorists have been at work, and in order to get out of the trouble they will again bring up that awful goat with the long beard and lay all their sins upon it. But I want the American people to understand that you can not play that game twice in the same evening. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I insert the letter of the Second Assistant Postmaster General as to the falling off in volume of transatlantic mail. Also an editorial from this morning's Washington Post, and an editorial sent to me commenting on my former speech from the Portland Oregonian, one of the ablest papers in the country.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, February 18, 1915.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request of yesterday by telephone, I have the honor to inform you that it is estimated that the weight of all mail matter included in the regular mails from the United States for trans-Atlantic destinations dispatched during the months of July to December, 1913, inclusive, was 6,663,624 pounds, and for the same months of 1914, 5,186,480 pounds.

Yours, very truly,

JOSEPH STEWART,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Editorial in the Portland Oregonian of January 24, 1915, commenting upon the speech of Representative STEENERSON, of Minnesota, in the House of Representatives on December 31, 1914:

DEFICIT DUE TO BLUNDERS.

In a plain recital of facts Representative STEENERSON disposed of the fiction that the war is responsible for the decrease in revenue and in the Treasury balance. He showed that the cause has been Democratic blunders in overestimating income and in underestimating expenses.

In his final speech on the tariff bill on September 30, 1913, Representative UNDERWOOD estimated customs revenue for the fiscal year 1915 at $249,000,000, revenue from the income and corporation tax at $122,000,000, and total revenue at $1,026,000,000, while he estimated expenditures for that year at $1,008,000,000, leaving a surplus of $18,000,000.

President Wilson has attributed the deficit in revenue to a falling off in imports and, consequently, in customs revenue due to the war, but Mr. STEENERSON showed that the actual revenue from that source for 11 months of 1914, with an estimate for December added, fell short of Mr. UNDERWOOD'S estimate by only between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. Had Mr. UNDERWOOD'S other estimates proved correct, there would still have been a surplus of more than $12,000,000, and no deficit taxes would have been necessary. But revenue from income and corporation taxes fell short of the Underwood estimate $51,000,000, while appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 reached a total of $1,094,168,102 instead of $1,008,000,000.

Thus total revenue fell short of the estimate by more than $57,000,000, and total expenditures exceeded the estimate by more than $86,000,000. This explains the decrease in the Treasury balance from $144,000,000 to a little more than $66,000,000. Had the much maligned Payne tariff remained in operation, it would have produced more than enough additional revenue to offset the deficiency from income and corporation tax, for it produced in excess of $311,000,000 in the fiscal year 1912, or $68,000,000 more than the Underwood tariff produced in the calendar year 1914.

Indisputable figures prove that the Democrats fall short $57,000,000 of making the tariff produce enough revenue to meet the expenses of the Government under what they term Republican extravagance. They fall short $125,000,000 of meeting expenses under Democratic extravagance. They always promise a tariff for revenue only, but their tariffs never produce enough revenue. They always promise economy, but they always practice extravagance.

SOUNDING THE CALL.

Almost coincident with the official announcement that the administration does not recognize any harm done by the tariff to business, and that there will be no tariff relief so long as the present administration remains in power, there comes a call for action from New York and Pennsylvania.

The Pennsylvania House of Representatives has just passed a resolution calling upon Congress to repeal the present Democratic tariff act, and attributing to this legislation the business and industrial hardships which have thrown hundreds of thousands of men and women out of employment. It is proposed that the legislatures of other industrial States shall take similar action.

In New York the Republican Club, which is one of the largest political organizations, has adopted the following resolution:

"We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection, and we protest against its destruction by the existing tariff law. This law serves the interests of foreign nations; we support the interests of the United States of America. We accept the issue thus made and we confidently appeal to the people for their judgment. The protective system must be restored and maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests. We denounce the existing law as destructive to general business, to labor, and to the farming interests of the country. We heartily indorse the patriotic efforts of Republican United States Senators and Representatives in Congress looking toward a repeal of the existing low tariff law and the enactment of a protective tariff that shall restore to American labor and industry their full rights in the American market."

By standing pat on the existing tariff law the Democrats have made the tariff issue inevitable in the next campaign. While it is true that the stoppage of some of the imports, due to the European war, has been equivalent to a protective tariff, except in the raising of revenue, the greater danger of the present low tariff will be encountered after the present war is over.

If industries have been harmed by the tariff under present conditions, what may be expected when the war ends and millions of workers now on the field of battle return to the mills and factories to work at wages that will be lower than ever before in the history of Europe? They will be willing to work for anything. The United States, under the present tariff, would have no protection against cheap labor competition.

No wonder the call to arms is being sounded by the Republicans. The tariff battle is beginning early, but this is because the tariff has become an issue which even the man in the street understands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LINTHICUM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7515. An act to reserve lands to the Territory of Alaska for educational uses, and for other purposes; and

S. 7188. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Garden City, Kans.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. SWITZER, and Mr. BRYAN were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER].

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, in some remarks I placed in the RECORD on February 15 I called attention to the fact that four firms, which constitute the War Trust in this country, have drawn down $175,000,000 worth of contracts from the Government for munitions of war, and that Army and Navy officers have permitted these four concerns to outrageously overcharge the Government for these supplies. I called attention to the fact that Gen. Crozier, the present Chief of Ordnance, who does the buying of these supplies for the Ordnance Department of the Army, was formerly in partnership with the Bethlehem Steel Co.; that he was in partnership with them on the day that he was made Chief of Ordnance; and that ever since he has been Chief of Ordnance he has been awarding that concern contracts running into the millions of dollars annually and has been paying that concern from 20 to 60 per cent more than those millions of dollars worth of supplies could have been manufactured for in the Government arsenals.

My attention has been directed to an answer by Gen. Crozier to the charges which I have made, and in fairness to Gen. Crozier and in order that his views may be in the RECORD, as mine have been placed in the RECORD, and since he states that he is contemplating asking for an investigation, I send the following clipping from the Chicago Tribune to the Clerk and ask that it be read in my time. My only purpose in rising was to put his answer in the RECORD so that it may be compared with the specific statements that I put in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Wednesday, Feb. 17, 1915.]

GRAFT CHARGES STIR UP CROZIER—ORDNANCE CHIEF ASKS INVESTIGATION OF ACCUSATION MADE BY TAVENNER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 16.

[Special.]—Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, contemplates demanding an investigation, either by the Secretary of War or by Congress, of the charges involving his reputation which were made in the House yesterday by Representative TAVENNER of Illinois.

Mr. TAVENNER charged that a ring of war-munitions manufacturers is raking off $7,000,000 in exorbitant and illegitimate profits, and that Gen. Crozier, Gen. Humphreys, and other Army and Navy officers are closely connected with these concerns.

Friends of Gen. Crozier in the House are preparing to present his defense, either in a reply to TAVENNER or in a demand for a congressional investigation.

ROORBACK, REPLY TO TAVENNER.

It will be alleged that TAVENNER is disgruntled because of the action of Gen. Crozier in introducing some of the Taylor-system methods into the Rock Island (Ill.) Arsenal, which is situated in the TAVENNER district.

On behalf of Gen. Crozier it is asserted that he never has allowed his former relations with the Bethlehem Iron (now steel) Co. to influence him in passing on questions affecting war-munitions contracts awarded to this or any allied concern. He had a half interest in the patent on the Crozier disappearing gun carriage, which was sold to the Bethlehem company for $10,000 and royalties on foreign orders. He relinquished his interest after he was appointed Chief of Ordnance and never realized from the patent more than $5,000, inasmuch as no foreign orders were received.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. I do not yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. MOORE. I ask whether the gentleman will yield or whether he insists on this alleged statement of Gen. Crozier being read at this time in full. It is not a statement of Gen. Crozier——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, and he declines to yield. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORCES CUT IN MUNITIONS.

That there was any impropriety in selling the carriage to foreign Governments is denied on the ground that any engineer could duplicate it from the existing photographs. Gen. Crozier also had a patent on a wire gun, which he relinquished to the United States Government voluntarily without compensation.

Gen. Crozier admits that the manufacturers of war munitions have extorted unreasonable prices from the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield time enough to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER], in order that the Clerk may read the balance of the article.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——
Mr. COOPER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?
Mr. BARTLETT. Time enough for the Clerk to read the balance of the article.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know how much time that is.
Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MOORE. What is the motion before the House?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman.
Mr. MOORE. What is the motion before the House?
The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion before the House.
Mr. MOORE. Under what rule are we proceeding?
The CHAIRMAN. We are proceeding under the agreement for general debate.
Mr. MOORE. I ask if there will be an opportunity for anyone to make a statement with regard to this publication?
The CHAIRMAN. Not unless you get time from gentlemen who have control of the time.
Mr. BARTLETT. I insist that the gentleman can not stop debate.
Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. COOPER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania can not make a parliamentary inquiry while the gentleman from Illinois has the floor without his consent.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just announced that the time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BARTLETT. I have control of the time, and I have yielded to the gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. MOORE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Chair has announced that the time of the gentleman has expired. I make the point that the gentleman from Illinois has no time——
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has yielded to the gentleman from Illinois sufficient time in which to finish the reading of the article. The Clerk will continue the reading of the article.
The Clerk read as follows:

He contends, however, that he has introduced Government manufacture of many classes of arms into the arsenals and by that competition forced the private manufacturers to reduce their prices.

Mr. MOORE. Now, Mr. Chairman——
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], a member of the committee.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is recognized for 15 minutes.
Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——
Mr. COOPER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman——
Mr. MOORE. Would it be in order at the present time to ask unanimous consent?
Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has no right to interrupt the regular order.
Mr. MOORE. I have made a parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is not in order in doing it.
Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is setting up a man of straw. He is attacking a man who is not here.
Mr. TAVENNER. Gen. Crozier is represented here and so is the Steel Trust.
Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is representing what is not true. The gentleman is setting up a bugaboo.
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order.
Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has no right to make that parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. MOORE. I ask if I was called to order; if I was violating the rules of the House?
Mr. GORDON. Of course you were. You have no brief from Crozier, have you?
The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.
Mr. BORLAND. I am entitled to the floor, I believe, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order.
Mr. MOORE. I am very glad to be called to order, because I am acting in the cause of justice and fair play. But go ahead and gag. That is the way to do it.
Mr. FOSTER. If the genteman wants to defend the Steel Trust, let him take his time.
Mr. MOORE. You have the power. You put things in the RECORD. Go ahead and encourage the gag. Do it brutally. Go ahead; I defy you.
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman to order.
Mr. MOORE. I am willing to be called to order.
Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is violating all orderly rules of parliamentary conduct.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] will proceed.
Mr. GORDON. Are you Crozier's attorney? Why are you acting in this way?
The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.
Mr. GORDON. I think that is outrageous on the part of a man who has been a Member of this House as long as the gentleman. It is an insult to the House.
Mr. MOORE. That is an insult to an individual.
The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be seated.
Mr. MOORE. Very well; I respect the Chair and will take my seat.
Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, when I rose I was about to remark that I would yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to make a request for unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD——
Mr. MOORE. I do not care to do that. The time to do that is right now.
Mr. BORLAND. But I soon saw that the gentleman did not want to do that, but wanted to inject into the RECORD something that the rules of the House would not permit him to put into the RECORD, and at that point I withdrew or abandoned my intention to yield to the gentleman. When the proper time comes, he can defend the Steel Trust or anybody else.
Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?
Mr. BORLAND. No. The gentleman can reply in his own time.
Mr. MOORE. I do not care to.
Mr. BORLAND. Now I want to discuss two phases of this pension appropriation bill, which is supposed to be under debate in this House. It is always a matter of surprise to the American people to learn the amount that is paid out by this Government for pensions 50 years after the close of the Civil War. But there are more surprises than that in the pension law. I find that there is scarcely an American citizen anywhere who understands that the Government is to-day paying more than a million dollars to nonresident foreigners under the operation of the present pension laws.
Away back in 1893 an attempt was made to correct this evil, and a report at that time shows that about 3,000 foreigners were drawing pensions under the Federal pension laws, and that the amount paid them was between $350,000 and $400,000. To-day more than 5,000 persons who are nonresident foreigners are drawing pensions, and the amount paid them is over a million dollars.
Now, the only justification that ever was given for this payment of foreign pensions was that a few men might have come to this country from foreign countries and lost their lives here and left dependent widows or children or mothers in the old country. But if any men lost their lives 50 years ago under the American flag and left dependent widows or mothers in the old country, the number of such dependents would decrease rapidly in the generation following the Civil War. The explanation of the fact that the amount has increased rapidly and steadily is that men who are drawing pensions have expatriated themselves and have become citizens or subjects of other countries.
Now, in fact, that is the case. We are sending abroad to-day a million dollars of American money, and we are doing what no other nation ever did, and, I undertake to say, what no other nation ever will do, namely, continuing the payment of pensions to men who are no longer citizens of the country they served. Twenty-six hundred of these men live in Canada; about 500 of them live in Germany; some 900 of them live in the British Isles. This country could not become involved in a war with any country on earth without seeing its own money and sometimes the men who draw its own money opposing it in that contest. No nation ever did that.
I purpose and reserve the right to offer to this pension appropriation bill when it reaches the amendment stage an amendment forbidding the payment of pensions to nonresident foreigners, except for disabilities contracted in the service. Gentlemen will recognize that we have a dual system of pensions in this country, which differs from the pension systems of other countries. All countries pay pensions. All countries pay pensions on the basis of disabilities contracted in the service, and that is the true basis for pensions. Any man who entered the service of his country and suffered a permanent disability thereby has a claim upon the gratitude of his fellow citizens as long as he or those dependent upon him live. But we entered upon a much wider field than that. We entered upon what no nation has ever done—an old-age pension, limited to those who appeared upon certain muster rolls, and under that old-age pension system the number of foreigners drawing pensions has almost doubled.

Now, if we are going to pay old-age pensions, I do not see any legitimate reason why we should not pay them to the man who served his country by pushing the plow and to the man who served his country by laying brick and to the man who in an engine cab served his country by driving an engine and who has done it efficiently and honestly for 40 or 50 years. I do not see why an old-age pension is not coming to the man who builds up his country in time of peace, if it is purely a question of old-age pensions. But we have limited these old-age pensions to a certain class of our citizens, and, under that system, the most liberal proposition that any nation ever advanced, we still continue to extend an old-age pension to men who are not citizens of the United States.

It was objected when this matter was up in the Sixty-second Congress that the old soldier must have some advocates on this floor; in other words, politics—partisan politics—demanded that no possible reduction or correction be made, even of the most flagrant evils in the pension laws, for fear that the sensibilities of the old soldiers might be hurt.

Now, let us consider what the old soldiers themselves think about this thing. You will not find an old soldier in your district who will justify the payment of pensions to men who have renounced and abandoned the flag under which they fought. The man who is to-day the Commissioner of Pensions of this Government is an old soldier, and a good one, and he recommends that the payment of pensions to nonresident foreigners cease. Here is what he says about it:

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to ask a formal question, and I do not ask the commissioner to answer it if he does not desire to do so: In your judgment, Mr. Commissioner, is it proper for a man who rendered service in the Civil War or any other military service for the United States Government, and who because of that service was placed upon the pension roll, to be deprived of that pension because of the fact that subsequently he declared his allegiance to some other country than the United States? In your opinion, Mr. Commissioner, should or should not that fact bar him from receiving the pension that he obtained as a service pension because of his service to the United States? You need not answer that question if you prefer not to do so.

Mr. SALTZGABER. I have an opinion on the subject, and it is this: I am so thoroughly American that I believe that a man who abjures his allegiance to this country ought not to receive any reward from it.

Mr. DONOHOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DONOHOE. The gentleman of course knows that it does not follow that because a man has decided to reside abroad he has renounced his allegiance to the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. This does not affect him, then?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman will see very readily that this would not affect Americans temporarily abroad for business, or official positions, or anything else. It is confined to men who are not Americans and possibly never were.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Has the gentleman any information as to how many of these 5,000 men have renounced their allegiance to this Government? To that extent I agree with him. No pensioner who has expatriated himself and is not crippled or in bad health from service origin should be carried on the rolls.

Mr. BORLAND. The greater part of the 5,000 have renounced their allegiance. The commissioner said in answer to a question in a former hearing that those who were abroad for business or pleasure or as foreign representatives of American houses, or as American consular representatives were a very trifling number.

Mr. BARTLETT. About 30.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many are living in Canada? Of course the gentleman knows that a large number of our citizens have gone to Canada, and I want to know if they have renounced their citizenship.

Mr. BORLAND. The greater part of them have become Canadian citizens.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest that most of those who came to this country from Canada at the time of the war and fought in the Federal Army have gone back to Canada and taken up lands there.

Mr. BORLAND. Under the homestead laws of Canada they had to renounce their allegiance to this Government.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I propose to support the gentleman's amendment. I think it is on the right line. Heretofore that amendment has not included men who were disabled in the service. The gentleman's amendment does. So there can be no possible injustice to any pensioner—any soldier who served during the war. Now, I understand that a great majority of the Canadian soldiers who were with us in 1861–1865 have sworn allegiance to the British Government. Those men are drawing pensions. In case of a war with Great Britain we would have men fighting against us who were pensioners under the United States.

Mr. BORLAND. I am very glad to have this statement from Gen. SHERWOOD, the man who occupies the honored position in this House of being the only general officer on the Union side in that great struggle who is now a Member of Congress and who represents as thoroughly as any man can the feelings and sentiments and patriotic views of the American soldier. He says that this amendment so limited is an absolute justice to the American pensioner.

Mr. DONOHOE. How would the gentleman feel toward a man who rendered military service here, became a citizen, resided here for 8 or 10 years after the close of the war, went back to Germany, and has never renounced his American citizenship?

Mr. BORLAND. He would not be affected by this.

Now, there is another matter I want to speak of in the brief time I intend to hold the attention of the House, which has always seemed to me to be a gross evil in the pension laws, but which has never seemed to other gentlemen to be as clear an injustice as it has seemed to me. I purpose to offer another amendment providing that no part of the pension appropriation shall be paid to any person who is drawing salary or emoluments of any kind from the Federal Government in excess of $1,000. [Applause.] I place the amount at $1,000 because I believe a man who is drawing $1,000 or over from the Federal Government is doing it on the theory that he is performing a man's full work and that his disabilities, if any, contracted in the service have not decreased his earning power. If a man who was in that great struggle is to-day alive and able to hold a full-salaried position, he is fortunate beyond the average run of mankind.

But the worst evil is simply this: The men who are the beneficiaries of this system do not want any investigation made as to how many men are drawing emoluments from this Government. I know a case—I will not call the name because I do not care to be invidious in a public speech—where a man is drawing a pension as an officer of the Federal Army and is drawing $6,000 a year from the Federal Government as a retired United States judge and $7,500 as a Member of the great legislative body of the Nation. He is drawing three separate salaries or emoluments from the Federal Government. I know of another case where a man is drawing $6,000 a year as a retired Federal judge, $50 a month as a pension, and is engaged in the practice of law, representing large railroad and corporate interests. Those are the men who will resist with all the force of which they are capable, even the proposition to investigate into this thing. I believe that there are approximately 3,000 to 5,000 men, at least 3,000, upon the pay rolls of the Federal Government under one guise or another, many of them as retired Federal judges and other officials of that kind, who are drawing pensions. These men have enjoyed, to a large extent, the rewards and profits of their military service and their military renown, and they are drawing pensions which are needed in many cases by many men who have been less fortunate.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman make any distinction between a soldier who is drawing a pension for a disability incurred in the service and one who is drawing a pension merely on account of age and service?

Mr. BORLAND. The distinction could be made easily. The surprising thing about the American people is this: We are spending to-day nearly twice as much for the pension roll as we are for the maintenance of a standing army in a nation of 100,000,000 people. That is 50 years after the close of the war. The people are going to demand that we spend a little more for national protection and a little less for partisan politics. Gentlemen will not dodge that issue when the people begin to wonder where their money has gone that has been spent under the guise of military armament when they find that we have not the national protection for the money expended.

To-day, 50 years after the war, nearly twice as much is spent for pensions as is spent for military purposes. If the pensions we are paying would guarantee the safety of the Nation, we would be the best-protected Nation under the sun; but nobody believe that it does. It has dwindled down into an old-age pension, possibly deserved in most cases; but I would like to have it expended in all cases for those who deserve it, and to cut out men who are getting $6,000 as retired Federal judges, and cut off the men that have renounced and abandoned the country that pays them the pension. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, we are now considering the annual appropriation bill, making appropriations to pay the pension roll to the extent of $165,000,000. That does not cover all of the actual pensions that the Federal Government pays; it does not cover $43,500 that is spent down in the Arkansas national forests in the way of pensions under the pretense of salaries for men engaged in conservation.

In that connection I want to call attention to a letter published in the Danville Democrat, Danville, Ark., an excellent newspaper, which was received by me this morning. The editor of the paper refers to the writer of the letter as follows:

The writer of the above article is a college man, a young man, and with his wife and babies lives on a homestead in Yell County, and knows the conditions of which he writes.

In other words, this is a letter from a college-bred man, of a man who has gone into that country, entered a homestead on the identical lands which certain gentlemen claim are not fit for agricultural purposes, has made him a good home, and who knows something about the conditions that exist there, and certainly has the knowledge and ability to discuss the things considered in that letter. I shall not take time to read the letter at length, but I will ask unanimous consent to print the newspaper clipping in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing the matter indicated in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to above is as follows:

FOREST RESERVE SHOULD BE ABOLISHED—A HOMESTEADER 30 MILES FROM THE RAILROAD IN YELL COUNTY SAYS ALL OF THE GOVERNMENT LAND COULD BE MADE A GOOD HOME FOR SETTLERS—READ HIS LETTER.

BLUFFTON, ARK., January 29, 1915.

Mr. T. L. POUND,
Danville, Ark.

MY DEAR SIR: Facts and figures proven by carefully kept books on my homestead for the past three years show that even the roughest land is worth taking, and a very little capital is necessary to keep a farmer going here till his land properly handled will.

Let us compare the tenant farmer and homesteader. The tenant gives one-third to one-fourth of his profitable time to his landlord. He is busy producing, harvesting, and marketing his crop but about three-fourths of his time, and he is fortunate, indeed, if he makes expenses during the rest of the time. Therefore the tenant farmer gives away or loses at least 5½ months or 143 working days each year and wonders why he does not get anything ahead. But if a man in any other business lost 143 days annually from office or shop, how soon would he be bankrupt? Is it any wonder "landlordism and the tenant farmer" ruined Ireland, caused the Mexican revolution, and is the greatest problem before the United States to-day?

Now for the homesteader on a hilly, rocky tract of land "away back in the sticks." His cash investment is practically nothing, and in this is the only likeness to the tenant farmer, for the average 40 acres here has 200,000 feet in pine alone, enough for house, barn, and fence. The same 40 acres produces enough grass for a team of horses and several cows, enough mast-bearing trees to produce 1,000 pounds of pork three years out of five, enough berries and wild fruit for an ordinary family, and has enough table-land with a clay subsoil so that two or more 5 to 10 acre fields can be tilled. Now, let the homesteader give 143 days each year to clearing land, building, hauling rock, filling low places with brush and rock, hauling leaves and wash to the hilltops where the soil is light, and in a few years he has a valuable farm, and has produced a good living also if he has planted the crops to supply his table and feed his stock and the big cotton raiser in the bottom lands.

This is no idle dream, but a fact proven by my books and the experience of other farmers here.

But our homestead land is practically all taken. Yes! but our national forest is made up of exactly the same kind of land my neighbors and I have been fortunate enough to get. Room for thousands of farms; for good, industrious, homeless families who, wasting 143 days each annually instead of using this time to improve their part of our great State and Nation, is being held in idleness, and why? Not because a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people wish to conserve our resources instead of developing them, but because the organization controlling our national forest is such that political jobs are in the balance and the question is not conserve or develop, but of keep or lose the job, and the forester is human like you and I, and like you and I, has a family to support; and, like you and I, if he does not look out for his business nobody will. As an example, take the following incident to which I can and will if necessary make oath. My friend Mr. X, wishing to homestead a very good agricultural tract in the national forest, made application for same. His case was referred to the local forest ranger, Mr. Y, also my personal friend. Mr. Y spent perhaps two hours in his investigation in which he never saw the land Mr. X wanted, and reported that he had failed to find level land enough for a building site. Consequently, Mr. X and his large family lost no less than 400 valuable days last year, will lose as much or more this year, and the land which should now be a good farm producing a good living for X and his family is being carefully conserved as a national reserve by the forest organization, because Mr. Y knew if Mr. X made a success in a part of the forest Mr. Z would in another part, and so on, till soon Mr. Y would have no forest to supply him a job, and do you blame Mr. Y? I do not, but Mr. Y should not be the man to decide whether Mr. X could make a living on a certain piece of land or not, only Mr. X can do that, and he should have the chance.

Our national forest with all its land and timber is now producing nothing.

Only a few men are benefited by it, and they are paid from other sources, while similar country in France and Germany is producing more than our richest communities. The home is the real basis of a country's wealth, and not the hoarded millions of a few.

Each tenant farmer is losing 143 days annually, which if properly used would in a few years put the territory now held as national forest in Arkansas in a class with the hill country of Virginia, Pennsylvania, or New York State, so far as productiveness goes, and the tenant be glad to use the time he is now wasting to develop the resources of our forest if he was permitted to homestead it. If he is not permitted to homestead this land, what will be done with it? If the Government sells it to individuals or corporations, no matter what amount of cash the Government might get it would lose in the end. Our tenant problem would be increased instead of diminished, because the lumberman would become a landlord and more tenant farmers and farming would be the result.

Then why delay? As a State and Nation we are not producing too much—not producing enough. When we consider that almost half the producers of our land are losing 143 days annually, the move to lessen this terrible waste of time, to lessen the tenant problem, to produce more homes, to raise men's efficiency as producers and citizens, is the move that will produce more and lasting profits for a Government of, for, and by the people than any other, no matter what the cash in the transaction might be. And opening the forest to the homesteader is this one great move.

H. C. SHORT.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KIRKPATRICK].

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, as one of the survivors of the Civil War between the States I simply ask leave to extend my remarks on the subject of the payment of pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew my earnest protest against the proposed national child-labor legislation. The bill proposes to prevent the employment of children under 14 and 16 years of age in mines, quarries, mills, canneries, manufactories, workshops, factories, and mills of all kinds of enterprises. It further proposes to limit the hours of labor per day. Heretofore no one has seriously contended that this question should be taken by the Federal Government from State jurisdiction. I rise for the purpose of requesting the membership of this House to send for the so-called child-labor bill and some time at their leisure read it and study it carefully. This bill was taken up and considered under suspension of rules, which prevented the usual discussion. Only 40 minutes were given to the consideration under a rule, and therefore the membership of the House had no opportunity to give this bill proper consideration. I never heard of this bill until it was up for action. Those opposing the bill had no opportunity to present views in opposition to it on account of the limit of time, and we resorted to the only method we had, and that was to filibuster against the passage of the bill. I have no apologies to make for the part I took in trying to prevent the passage of the bill by filibuster tactics. I consider the bill the most flagrant violation of constitutional rights of any bill that has passed this House since I have been here. It absolutely absorbs all State rights guaranteed by the Constitution and turns over to Federal authorities complete jurisdiction to direct the internal affairs of the States.

Those of you who have been to sawmills and to rock quarries and have heard the familiar call, "water boy," if this bill becomes a law, will hear that call no more. It will be for "water man." Under the provisions of the bill a boy under 16 years of age can not give water to a mule or ox used at a rock quarry or mine. No boy or girl can be employed in any capacity, in any kind of work where peaches, tomatoes, beans, or any agricultural product is being prepared for interstate shipment, because if children are so employed the man who ships the goods produced where the boy who gave water to mule or worked in the cannery will be indicted by the Federal Government. In my State agriculture is being promoted very rapidly through the Agricultural Department, and one of the greatest means of promotion is the canning club.

The school-teachers are organizing associations in every county, and you can read in the agricultural bulletins where little girls 12 and 13 years of age have had tomato patches and have canned their tomatoes in association with others and have shipped them to the State of New York and other places and have received enormous profits, and this method has encouraged others to raise tomatoes. I do not think there is any question but that this bill will prevent little girls or boys under the age of 14 years from associating themselves together with a teacher or any other person for the purpose of raising tomatoes and canning them and shipping them out of the State, because one of the provisions of the bill is about canneries. The definition in the bill says that a dealer is an individual. A little girl is an individual within the meaning of the bill if she is raising tomatoes. It also uses the phrase "unincorporated association," and these people who are associated together for the purpose of raising and canning tomatoes, peaches, beans, or anything else are an "unincorporated association" of people brought together for the purpose of promoting this industry.

The bill reads as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any producer, manufacturer, or dealer to ship or deliver for shipment in interstate commerce the products of any mine or quarry which have been produced, in whole or in part, by the labor of children under the age of 16 years, or the products of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment which have been produced, in whole or in part, by the labor of children under the age of 14 years, or by the labor of children between the age of 14 years and 16 years, who work more than eight hours in one day.

* * * * * * *

The word "dealer" as used in this act shall be construed to include any individual or corporation or the members of any partnership or other unincorporated association.

This bill not only proposes to regulate cotton mills, knitting mills, and all kinds of factories by Federal statute, but it reaches out and takes in farming and mining institutions. The conditions in the New England States are entirely different from conditions in the South. The work done by children of reasonable age in mills, saw mills, cotton gins, canneries, and the various other enterprises of the South should not be prohibited by Federal laws inspired by philanthropists knowing nothing about healthful and honorable employment in the South. It is a very embarrassing situation in which the Democratic Party finds itself advocating this kind of legislation. It has always contended for State rights, and now pretends to believe in State rights. Now the Republican Party can say, "Oh you Democratic Party, what have you done with your States rights Jeffersonian doctrine?"

If this bill becomes a law, the next move will be to prevent the interstate shipping of cotton when children under 16 years of age participate in making or picking the cotton. Those good philanthropists will be here in a few years demanding that the farmer be prevented from employing on his farm boys under 16, and they will tell this Congress about the illiteracy of children that should be in school. Then this so-called humanitarian legislation will be enacted by the Federal Government compelling education of all races and restricting child labor on the farm to 16 years of age. The negro matures rapidly and makes a good farm laborer at 12 years of age. At 15 they are strong men. The whites mature early in the South, and many boys perform a man's labor on the farm before they are 16 years of age, working on the farm and attending school during the school periods.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also launches the eight-hour day law, to be applied by the Federal Government to agricultural enterprises. I knew that agriculture would some day be confronted with the Federal Government fixing the hours of labor and making it a criminal offense to labor over eight hours each day even on the farm, but I did not expect the question to come up so soon. There are seasons when the farmer must work or gather his crops or he will almost lose it. I hope I will never see Congress enact laws prohibiting the shipping of cotton from my State unless the farmer complies with eight or seven hour day regulation of labor, and yet that principle is in this bill. Should a cannery, quarry, mill, factory, saw mill, cotton gin, or any kind of mill enterprise violate the child-labor restrictions or work them over eight hours any day the products of such an enterprise can not be sold out of the State. A severe Federal penalty is provided for both the seller and the purchaser.

Some gentlemen were disposed to criticize me for filibustering against this bill. Permit me to assure you that as long as the people of Georgia keep me here to represent my State and district I shall speak, filibuster, and use all legitimate means to prevent legislation giving the National Government the power of exercising the prerogative of the States in the restriction of labor.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, do you propose to exclude the orphan on the humanitarian appeal from honest work and doing honest labor in the industrial pursuits of the farming districts, that they may live honestly and independently?

I thoroughly agree with gentlemen that there should be restriction of child labor in factories. The restriction should be reasonable and humane. What is reasonable and humane is a question for the respective States to solve. There are no doubt abuses; but, Mr. Speaker, we should not trample upon the Constitution to reach abuses the States should correct. Besides, there are some provisions in this bill I can not espouse, even by State enactment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield further time to the gentleman.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I think that the States only have a right to legislate on this question. It is a question for each State to settle; it is not a Federal question. The States can better solve these industrial questions. I am willing to abide the action of the State of Georgia on these and all other questions delegated to the State by the Constitution, and I think other Members should be willing to abide the action of their States. Several times I have defended the laws of my State on this floor, and no man can assail the laws of my State on this floor unchallenged; and like Ruth said to Naomi, I stand here to-day and say in regard to Georgia, "Whither thou goest I will go; where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people and thy God my God." [Applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Georgia to yield me five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not the time, I am sorry to say to the gentleman.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] has just been yielded time in which to make an attack on a bill which was passed in this House two or three days ago.

Mr. TRIBBLE. But the gentleman did not give me any chance to oppose it when it was passed.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman did not use all of the time he had.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not the time.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect, of course, to discuss the child-labor question to-day. I did not expect that anybody who was opposed to the bill and who failed to use all of the time which was allotted to those in opposition to the bill when it came up a couple of days ago would find it necessary——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Not now—would find it necessary after the bill had passed by a vote of about 6 to 1 discuss the bill and complain of the action of the House. It is true that it was not discussed at any great length in the House, but I doubt if any bill which has been before the House during this session has received more attention from the country, and I doubt if Members have received more communications and information about any bill which has been before the House this session than they have about this child-labor bill. When it came into the House the Members all knew what the bill was. They knew that extensive hearings had been held before the Committee on Labor, that there had been a unanimous report of that committee in favor of the bill, and that the standard fixed by the bill was the same in many respects as had already been adopted in nearly 40 of the States in the Union with which Members here were all very familiar. It is a significant and interesting fact that the only objection to the bill, voiced upon the floor in speech and by vote upon the roll call, came from three or four States in the South which are notoriously lax in child-labor laws, States which have been exploiting the little children for years in order to swell the profits of the manufacturers and employers of labor there. In the other States of the Union, where attention has been given to the matter, Members were familiar with the standard employed, and, in sympathy with the feeling of the people in those States, were unanimously for the bill. I did not consider it necessary that there should be any fuller discussion about a measure on which the feeling of the House is so overwhelmingly in its favor as this child-labor legislation.

Now, the gentleman says it is not fair to a State like Georgia to enforce this kind of a law, and the arguments which he presents are, in fact, a just ground for Federal legislation. It is absolutely necessary in the interest of fairness, because the friends of child-labor legislation have discovered that in every State where they plead for laws which will protect the little children they are met with this answer from the employer of labor, that it is not fair to put us in competition with a producer of other States where a less rigid standard is enforced. There is force in that argument, and it shows that interstate commerce is at the very root of this question of child labor. I grant that 30, 40, or 50 years ago, when transportation facilities were not so adequate, when business between the States was not so common, it might have offended my own sense of the rights of the several States to have urged this kind of legislation. But times have changed and we must change with them. The days of railways, of rapid express freight trains from one end of the country to the other, have come and commerce between the States is as common as commerce within the States, and in fairness to those who produce in one State and send their products into the commerce of the other States, the same standard of labor ought to be employed everywhere.

Now, the gentleman's objection that this would prevent a boy or a girl from canning tomatoes in company with a half dozen other children is all bosh, as the gentleman must know——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Read your bill.

Mr. PALMER. I have read the bill; I know all about the bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. So do I, since I have studied it.

Mr. PALMER. It provides against labor of that kind in workshops, canneries, manufacturing establishments, and factories, and the gentleman will not say that the circumstances to which he refers could make a factory or a workshop or a cannery. It will not interfere with work upon the farm, it will not interfere with work in the household, it will not interfere except in places where labor is employed somewhat en masse—in factories, canneries, and workshops, and places of that character—and there I submit that the law ought to lay its hand in order to prevent employers of labor in every State from grinding down the little children against the interest of future generations of American men and women. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, about a half an hour ago the eloquent gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], speaking to this bill, made the statement that there was no possibility of our Government going into war. I hope that that statement is true. There is no one in the United States who desires such a fatality as war. I want to speak just briefly of what seems to me a very dangerous parallel with the days preceding the War of 1812. I seize upon this time to do it because to-day is the day that the German order, announced February 4, blockading the island of Great Britain takes effect. I should like to recall to the House some of the diplomatic orders prior to the second war of independence. It was early in 1806 that Great Britain blockaded portions of the French border and declared the mouths of four rivers in a state of blockade against all neutral territory. Those rivers were the Ems, the Elbe, the Weiser, and the Trave. That decree of Great Britain was followed by Napoleon on the 11th of November of the same year by the famous Berlin decree which blockaded the island of Great Britain against all neutral vessels. That was in November, as I have said. Then, in January, 1807—to be specific, January 6—there was a retaliation on the part of Great Britain in her famous orders in council, and this was to blockade all of France by forbidding neutral vessels from trading between ports of France or her allies. Then, in November following Great Britain issued a second order in council more sweeping, which included the obligation to blockade all the possessions of France and all her allies. It forbade trade with the ports of France or her allies, or even with any port of Europe from which the British flag was excluded without a clearance obtained from a British port. This was followed by the most sweeping order of blockade in our history. It was the second order of Napoleon in the famous blockade of Milan. The decree in November, 1807, went thus far: It declared that all vessels submitting to English search or consenting to a voyage to England or to the payment of any English tax, as well as every vessel that should sail to or from a port of Great Britain or her possessions, or in any country occupied by British troops, would be deemed a lawful prize.

These four decrees, or rather five, if the first partial order is included, on the part of Great Britain and France literally swept the commerce of neutral countries from the sea. Our own country suffered most. While the measures were aimed at others, they hit us hardest. It was at this time that President Jefferson finally resorted to the famous embargo act which was nicknamed "O-grab-me act." He believed that if the embargo act could have been made effective by receiving support from this country it would have prevented the war of 1812; but it was so unpopular, especially in certain sections of the country in which commerce was almost totally destroyed, that a revulsion of public opinion was worked against the administration, and in 1808, when Madison was a candidate for election to succeed Jefferson, an issue was made before the country against the embargo act. However, Madison won upon a promise that relief would be granted. This was attempted when he modified the act by the famous nonintercourse act of 1809, two years after the embargo act. The nonintercourse act had the effect to limit the shipping of goods from this country to the belligerent countries, or to those at war, instead of to all the countries then involved in the former decree, the embargo. Finally war came. It came in obedience to a declaration on the 18th of June, 1812. Jefferson feared it and did what he could to prevent it. He but deferred it. Madison had opposed war to the point where the people said, "Madison can not be kicked into a war." This statement was employed as a slogan by those unfriendly to the administration. Finally public opinion became so strong that he literally was forced into the struggle. It did not require any overt act to induce it—no sinking of a vessel—but only an employment of such maritime rights as England claimed as hers. This produced war in 1812. McKinley in 1898 tried to prevent war and was successful up to a certain point, but at the cost of the most abusive language, and he ultimately went into war as a response to the demands of the people of the country which he could no longer restrain. In obedience to what was done then and in the light of 1812 and 1898, I wish that the membership of the House, especially that portion of it which believes sincerely that there will not be war, hoping at least that the President can prevent war—for nobody would think for a moment that the President would do anything knowingly that would precipitate it; everybody agrees to that—I wish that the membership of the House would notice the events that have taken place since the 1st of August last, with special reference to the possibilities confronting us as a Nation at this hour.

On November 4 Great Britain pronounced the North Sea in a blockade, to take effect on November 5, the day after. On February 4 Germany pronounced the blockade about the British Isles, including not only the water surrounding the isles but also reaching out to all vessels that would sail the sea destined to England. While it does not so specify, it really means that. That order was to take effect not the day after, but on the 18th, which is to-day. I do not believe that anyone would question England's right to make such an order, however hurtful it must be to neutral commerce. I do not believe that many will seriously question Germany's right, so far as international law will go, to do what she proposes to take effect to-day, however hazardous it may be for neutrals.

On the 26th of last December our President sent a note to England through the State Department which, to say the least, was simply to the effect of "Come, let us reason about this matter." It was not in a spirit of jingoism, but it, in a friendly spirit, called attention of England to the disturbance that her exercise of power on the sea over neutrals was placing our commerce. Over this England seemed, in a sense, to be surprised. But while everyone will admit that Great Britain has the right to stop our vessels for the time and to search for contraband of war, we have rights which must be respected, which can not be violated on mere suspicion. Notice the question of conditional contraband and the hauling into port of our vessels upon mere suspicion. This has seriously harmed our rights upon the seas. Conditional contraband can be so expanded by mere suspicion to cover all foodstuffs. When food goes to Germany in a vessel like the Wilhelmina, it will be held up in order to see whether it has conditional contraband. Although it is not to be used by combatants, it is held as though it were so destined. Germany declares that all food that goes to Germany must be held in her possession. In other words, the German Government will take possession, but has assured our Government it will be turned over to noncombatants. Great Britain feels her right to forbid the food to go to Germany because of that order, for the conditional contraband in this case, according to her interpretation, would become absolute contraband. Note the situation as it increases in complication. These decrees, passing as they are, and with Great Britain running up our flag over an English sailing vessel, are indicative to me and to you that events are traveling fearfully, rapidly toward what I fear may be a brink where the unexpected may take place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has expired.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

I simply want to call the attention of the House to this dangerous parallel. Compare the decrees of France and England prior to 1812 with the following decrees:

WAR ZONES COMPARED.

A comparison of the British and German war-zone orders disclosed these striking facts:

First. The British Government on November 4 notified the United States Government that its war zone would be effective from November 5—one day's notice.

Second. The German Government issued its war-zone proclamation on February 4 and communicated it to Ambassador Gerard on the same day, announcing that the German war zone around the British Isles would be effective after February 18—15 days' notice.

Third. The British war zone covers the whole of the North Sea.

Fourth. The German war zone covers the entire English Channel and all the territorial and high sea waters around the British Isles.

Fifth. The British war-zone order sought to close the north of Scotland route around the British Isles to Norway, the Baltic, Denmark, and Holland.

Sixth. The German war zone seeks to close the southern or English Channel route around the British Isles to Holland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and the Baltic.

Seventh. The British war-zone decree drew an arbitrary line from the Hebrides Islands, along the Scottish coast, to Iceland, and warned neutral shipping that it would cross this line at its risk, but that ships of neutral nations might go to Holland and other neutral nations along the eastern littoral of the North Sea by taking the English Channel and Strait of Dover route.

Eighth. The German war zone declares that neutral vessels will be exposed to danger in the English Channel, but routes of navigation around the north of Scotland islands in the eastern part of the North Sea and in a strip 30 miles wide along the Dutch coast are not open to the danger zone.

Ninth. The Germans make the southern channel route dangerous and declare the north of Scotland route safe, while the British declare the north of Scotland route dangerous and the English Channel route safe, the effect of this being that neither the northern nor the southern routes around England will be safe for neutral vessels.

Tenth. The British war-zone order was based on the discovery of mines in the North Sea, while the German decree is based on England's attitude toward contraband, the Wilhelmina case, and England's establishment of a war zone.

While we all hope that there will be power enough to maintain a peaceful basis against what may take place in a few days to prevent this Nation going into trouble, yet no Member of this House can close his eyes to what took place prior to 1812, and to what might take place here in our own country. Suppose one of our vessels flying the American flag goes into the neutral waters which they are forbidden to enter by this decree, and suppose that vessel should be sunk, what will be our attitude? Suppose some of our citizens are on such a vessel, what will be our attitude?

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not let the vessel for the time being stay out of this war zone?

Mr. FESS. That would be my advice. However, the Nation has not agreed to lay an embargo; it is loudly demanded by some citizens. And I want to clinch what I am saying by this statement. I opposed the ship-purchase bill generally on the ground of the danger that we are courting. The following is a statement from the London Times, to which I wish to call your attention. I simply want to warn our people.

The possibilities of international trouble which it contains are at least as clear. Questions of contraband, and of search for contraband, are difficult and delicate enough between belligerents and neutrals, when the neutral ships are in private ownership. It is manifest that they would be very gravely complicated were the neutral ships themselves the property of a neutral State. The acquisition of a number of interned belligerent vessels for the purpose of employing them in the service of a neutral State would certainly afford ground for controversies which it must be the wish and the interest of real neutrals to avoid.

When you say the President can prevent war, you are putting a good deal of obligation upon him if something might happen in this country. [Applause.]

It will not do to pride ourselves upon professions of peace and talk and vote for war-making measures. It is the crassest ignorance to depend on the head of the Nation for peace. The Executive is not the war-making body of this Nation. Let some overt act of war take place and note what will happen in this country. Wilson could no more hold this people at bay than could Madison in 1812 or McKinley in 1898. The Democrats here would be among the first to demand action.

This is no time to multiply opportunities for international disputes, for when our honor is at stake not all the powers of President or Congress could stay the sword of the Nation. Hence the importance of our keeping our balance at this juncture.

Before we abdicate our rights as Members of this body to carry out the capricious wish of a Cabinet member, or even the head of the Nation, we should weigh the consequences of our acts and measure the forces now at play upon the sea, which can not be overlooked from the standpoint of our national welfare. Our international situation is strained by our Mexican situation, largely due to a lack of policy.

The open-door policy in China is seriously threatened by Japan's aggression, and, as it appears, with the permission of her ally. The situation with Europe, in view of the counter-decrees of the belligerents, ought surely to open our eyes to the necessity of the most careful guarding of the rights of this House.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH].

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me I should like to have the Clerk read an article written by Capt. Wilson I. Davenny, of Pontiac, Mich., entitled "Glory-Crowned Gettysburg."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk reads as follows:

GLORY-CROWNED GETTYSBURG.

(By Capt. Wilson I. Davenny.)

"Gettysburg is a thrice-hallowed name. On the historic days in July half a century ago the Federal forces under Meade and the gallant and faithful followers of Lee mingled their sacrificial blood in the baptism of that most memorable field. And here, on a November day that was made forever notable by speech, Abraham Lincoln delivered his immortal address dedicating a portion of that field as a final resting place for the men who had yielded their lives that the Nation should survive. And within a lifetime more than 50,000 of the men who had been grim, determined actors in a death-inviting drama are met again upon the same consecrated soil and under the scorching rays of a July sun, but not in hostile ranks; not as foes, but as friends. The days of conflict and carnage are done, and the eyes that then were sighted along a glistening rifle barrel now dimmed by mists of years seek and meet the responsive and full forgiving glances of an erstwhile foe. The chasm of half a century is bridged. The asperities of years agone are submerged in an unbidden flood of mutual tears. The full and throbbing hearts of the veterans now beat in unison. There is no North, there is no South.

"The actual participants in the war of the sixties have themselves sealed the record of their privations and sacrificial suffering. Let no man open the book but to learn the splendid lessons of devotion to duty, as each man saw it, whichever section of our now united and common country may have claimed his service.

"It is worthy of serious reflection on this semicentennial anniversary of the third day's battle at Gettysburg that it is as true as when the 'great commoner' paid his tribute to the fallen sons of the North that while honoring the dead we should cherish a reawakened interest in 'that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion,' and that we 'highly resolve * * * that the Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.' And in making this high resolve let us clearly understand that it is no idle pledge, but a dedication to civic endeavor, social uplift, and the advancement of practical patriotism. With the conspicuous inequalities in our social fabric, incident to the accretions in recent years of great wealth in the hands of a few and the daily exposures of venality and dishonest methods under our political system, the question, 'Whether or not a nation dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal' is still biding its solution. There is still need for a sturdy, uncompromising, high-minded, patriotic citizenship, and there must be enough of it to give healthful direction to the all-encompassing commercial spirit of the times, if the American democracy is to endure as a permanent institution.

"God grant that the lessons of glory-crowned Gettysburg, thrice consecrated to duty, patriotism, and peace, shall strengthen and sustain the pillars of the Republic." [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I yield back any time that I may have left.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to continue the remarks which some days ago I delivered on the subject of rural credits, and I wish to put into the RECORD some statements touching this subject.

There are 12,000,000 farmers in these United States. Their aggregate wealth, including all property, is $41,000,000,000. They owe $6,000,000,000. Their farms are mortgaged for $3,000,000,000 of this sum. Annually they pay interest amounting to $510,000,000, an average interest rate of 8½ per cent. Statistics show they can pay only 5½ per cent and prosper. They should pay, therefore, if they are to prosper, instead of $510,000,000 annually for interest, only $330,000,000 on their borrowed money. In other words, there is wrung from the farmers an annual interest charge of $180,000,000 in excess of what they can afford to pay. Industrial 5 per cent bonds now sell at par. Panama 3 per cent bonds are quoted at 99. The farmer, notwithstanding he produces all the wealth, and in the last analysis possesses it, pays 8½ per cent interest. This he can not afford to do, and under just economic laws would not be required to do. For that reason they demand of us, their Representatives in the American Congress, and have the right to demand of us, the enactment of a law to right this wrong. I myself am glad to acknowledge this obligation, and here and now pledge myself to that service. When we shall have dealt justly with the farmers of this country they will have had their interest rate for agricultural enterprises reduced from 8½ per cent, the present rate, to not to exceed 3½ per cent, and thereby retain for themselves and their families $300,000,000 annually, which they now unjustly are compelled to pay as excess interest on this borrowed money. This is the sum they now pay to a system which is not adapted to their needs and which the enactment of a just rural credit law would avoid.

Rural credits, as the name implies, is a system of credits devised to meet the needs of agriculture. No other subject is of such importance, not only to the people directly affected, but to all the American people, the producers and consumers of farm products that now pay tribute to commercial banking. On the 23d day of January I made a short speech in this Chamber briefly calling attention to a bill I had introduced on the 12th day of January of this year, proposing a rural credits system for this country. In the short time then available a full explanation of its provisions was impossible, although the bill itself is extremely brief and simple. Since that time, I am pleased to say, the legislative committee of the National Farmers' Union met in the city of Washington and indorsed this bill and made it the concrete demand of the farmers' union of the United States for rural credits. Inasmuch as the system is designed primarily for farmers, they should be consulted with reference to the provisions of any proposed legislation. Since the success or failure of the system would more directly affect farmers than any other class of people no legislation touching this subject should be enacted that does not meet with their entire approval. To deny them the right to have enacted a law the provisions of which they approve is to arrogate to ourselves a superior intelligence or to deny to the farmers the intelligence to understand and comprehend their own needs. None of us, I am sure, is willing to assume that attitude, and therefore let me hope all who are sincerely desirous of the enactment of a just and adequate rural credits bill will join in the advocacy of this measure. I have in it no pride of authorship. Embodied in this plan are the ideas and ideals of the National Farmers' Union, the organization that has done as much or more than any other for the advancement of farmers. In its provisions are crystallized the labors of the best years and most devoted efforts of such men as the Hon. Charles S. Barrett, the president of the national association, and men of his cabinet, as well as others, and I am happy in being authorized by them to say its provisions meet with their approval and the approval of those for whom they speak, and that its enactment would free the farmers from bondage to a system from which they have long suffered. To show in what complete accord its provisions are with the demands of farmers as expressed through their organizations upon this subject, I will have inserted in the RECORD the remarks delivered before a committee of Congress some months ago by H. S. Mobley, State president of the Farmers' Union of Arkansas, and in passing I want to pay to him a deserved tribute. No man more accurately and sympathetically reflects the hopes and aspirations of the people for whom he speaks or expresses those views in more clear and forceful language.

This bill seeks to accomplish four things, or rather to accomplish one thing directly, and indirectly three others. The first object sought, of course, is to procure for farmers long-time loans at a rate of interest so low that agriculture can afford to pay that rate and prosper. The second object, and not less important, is to make it unprofitable, and therefore improbable, that large landed estates should be acquired, certainly a most desirable result, for no country has ever prospered as it should where the lands are held by a few and the great mass of the people are tenants, not that tenants are not good men, but the very condition under which they labor prevents them from developing the best there is within them, and withholds from their families the fruits of their toil.

A third object sought is to enable the farmers to receive the benefits of this act without at the same time disturbing local interest rates and thereby destroying local banking and commercial business, the importance of which is so obvious that no comment is needed.

The fourth is by permitting a loan of 25 per cent of the value of the improvements on the land to encourage those residing upon the land to erect adequate buildings and other improvements thereon.

Section 2 of this act provides that there shall be created in the Department of the Treasury a commission to be known as a rural credits commission to be comprised of five men. Three of them are to be farmers who have no other occupations, and two to be men of large affairs. The entire system, its development and operation, is intrusted to their wisdom and discretion. Plenary powers are given them to make such rules and regulations as will best conserve the objects sought to be attained. Three farmers are named on this board, because it is necessary, in my judgment, to have men whose sympathies are solely with the farmer, and whose experiences have made them fully acquainted with all of his conditions, and by that means keep ever in view the object for which this act is proposed; that is, the betterment of the farmers of this country. The other two members are to be men of large affairs, because expert training and knowledge that goes with the handling of large business interests will enable them at all times to promote the sale of these securities, and to direct the investments of the amortization fund so that the best results from this fund may be obtained.

Section 3 fixes their tenure of office at five years, the object being to make it impossible that this commission shall be swept out of power at each change of administration. It is hoped that this commission shall always be preserved from partisan politics, and that fitness for the duties to be performed shall be the sole reason for making these appointments. The salary is $6,000 each per year, and is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Section 5 gives the commission the power to select its agents and to employ all necessary assistants. No reference is made in the section to civil service, because it would doubtless happen that men most qualified to deal with problems confronting the farmer would be less able to pass a technical examination. We all know that it frequently happens that the ability to spell correctly and to recite dry facts of history are indicative not of executive capacity, but are merely the acquirements of one who has no inclination to labor and no ability to rise.

Section 6 makes postmasters the agents of the Government for performing whatever services may be required of them touching this measure without additional compensation. The reason for selecting these men is that they are already in the employ of the Government; they are men of ability and honor; they are selected from the people, and are familiar with the conditions in the locality where they serve. No additional compensation is granted them, because the duties are light and involve more of honor than labor, and for the further reason that the expense attendant upon a loan should be made as light and as little burdensome as possible to the borrower. All of us owe a duty to the public and should be willing to render some services without direct compensation, and I know this great body of patriotic men will be willing to perform whatever duties may be required of them by this commission without additional recompense.

Section 7 defines a "farmer" as one who actually resides upon a farm and is engaged in the business of producing agricultural products. The benefits of this act are extended to everyone of that class and denied to all others. It also fixes periods for which loans may be made at 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, and 30 years, and provides, further, that a farmer may pay his loan at any time after the expiration of five years, or may pay $100 or any multiple thereof after that period at any interest-paying period, and upon any sum so paid the interest thereon shall cease. Section 7 further provides that any farmer who is entitled to a loan at all under the provisions of this bill, shall, if he desires, receive a loan of not less than 50 per cent of the value of his lands and not less than 25 per cent of the value of the improvements thereon. This provision is arbitrary as to the amount the farmer shall be entitled to receive, if entitled to receive anything, only so far as it fixes the minimum that he may be permitted to borrow. If he is entitled to more, the commission may extend it. It leaves within the power of the borrower to determine the number of years which his loan should run. However, it is not to be less than 5 years nor more than 30 years, but at any time within that period he may terminate it at his pleasure. The object in fixing a loan value upon his improvements is obvious. While 40 acres of land, or any other number, will produce as much corn or as many bushels of wheat or pounds of cotton with a shed in which a family may exist and without any shelter for live stock, yet it does not meet the requirements nor the deserts of the producers of America's wealth. Therefore, not only to encourage the erection of comfortable homes and adequate outbuildings, but to make possible these improvements a loan value for that purpose is provided in this measure.

Section 8 provides that deeds of trust or mortgages shall name the chairman of the commission as trustee for the use and benefit of the United States of America. This instrument shall name the amount sought to be borrowed, the number of years the loan is to run, but leaves the interest rate blank. This provision is for the purpose of permitting these evidences of indebtedness to be sold at par to the one who is willing to pay par therefor and accept the lowest rate of interest procurable. This section further provides the manner in which the borrower shall furnish evidences of his title. An abstract of some recognized agency shall be furnished, but examined by officers appointed by the commission, and without expense to the borrower. This provision, in my judgment, is necessary in order to make it possible for small borrowers to acquire a loan without having the expense incident thereto made prohibitive. The section further provides that in those States where the Torrens system of registration of land titles shall have been adopted, the certificate of the State shall be evidence of title. This would rid the farmer of the necessity of procuring an abstract, and the costs incident thereto would be eliminated. Of course, this will arouse the antagonism of those who are commercially engaged in preparing abstracts of title or of attorneys who pass upon titles, but it will hasten the day when that system of registering land titles shall be adopted in every State of this Union.

Section 9 provides the method by which the applicant for a loan puts into motion the machinery to accomplish that purpose. He shall first apply to his local postmaster and procure the necessary blanks. He shall execute these blanks under oath, setting forth the amount of the loan he seeks, the security he has to offer, and the purposes for which he seeks the loan, the number of years he desires it to run, and all additional information that the commission may desire and direct. Upon receipt of this application the postmaster shall appoint two committees, of three men each, and the first named of each shall act as chairman of his committee. The first committee shall consist of three farmers, who reside in the immediate vicinity of the land upon which the loan is sought and who are familiar with it as a farming proposition. They shall make a secret appraisement of both the lands and the improvements, but separate. This appraisement shall be made under oath and filed with the postmaster. The second committee shall consist of men of affairs who are familiar not only with the value of the lands but are acquainted with the farmer applying for the loan, and who will know the general conditions in the community at large, whether land values are advancing or depreciating, and other things necessary to be known by the commission to determine the hazard of the loan. This appraisement shall be made in secret and under oath and filed with the postmaster. Upon receipt of the two appraisements the postmaster, together with the chairmen of the two committees, shall open the two appraisements and shall revise and make out a just and fair appraisement of the lands, and also the improvements, which shall be forwarded to the commission at Washington, together with all additional information the commission may desire. The commission at Washington, upon receipt of this appraisement, shall determine the amount, if any, of the loan to which the applicant is entitled and return to the postmaster the necessary deeds of trust to be executed by the applicant. This shall name the time for which the loan is to run and the amount, but leave blank the interest rate, because the interest is to be determined by the sale of the security. This deed of trust shall designate the chairman of the commission as trustee for the use and benefit of the United States of America. Upon receipt of this deed of trust, duly executed, the commission shall sell at private or public sale this evidence of indebtedness at par within the city of Washington or elsewhere, as in its judgment the most advantageous terms for the borrower may be procured, and at the lowest rate of interest procurable. The borrower shall pay the rate of interest for which his security is sold and at the times specified therein, and, in addition thereto, shall pay whatever per cent as an amortization fund the commission in its judgment may fix.

Section 10 provides that this amortization fund shall be a common fund; that is, it is the fund from which the interest due upon any loan, when due, shall be paid, and also from which shall be paid the principal of any maturing obligation. The object of making it a common fund is obvious. It will enable the commission at any time to pay any interest payments when due, or any loan upon its maturity, and therefore will make the security more desirable, and the interest rate the same in every State in this Union, because the lender can have no interest in the location of the lands or to whom the money he loans shall be paid. He merely files his voucher with any postmaster of the first, second, or third class, or any national bank, and the same will be cashed, and in the same manner his loan at its maturity will be paid. Thus no one will hesitate to loan money to one who applies through this system, and the failure of crops, the death of the borrower, or any other misfortune or disaster can not delay the payment of the interest or the cancellation of the loan itself at its maturity.

Section 11 provides the manner of foreclosing a mortgage when the borrower shall have failed to meet his interest payments or the payment of his obligation upon its maturity. The land shall be seized through a foreclosure procedure had in the district court for the district wherein the lands are situated. All officers of said court are made the agents of this commission, and to serve without additional pay. Any time during the pending of the suit the borrower may pay his arrears, and the suit will be dismissed, or if he fails to do so, and his lands are sold, he has one year from date of sale in which to redeem the same. The sale, under the provisions of this bill, is not a sale in the sense that the obligation shall be paid in its entirety, but only its arrears, so that the tenure of the loan upon the land for a period of years shall not be disturbed. The purchaser at said sale shall merely pay the sum in arrears, together with what costs, if any, may be accrued to this amortization fund and assume the obligations of the original borrower. Whatever in addition to this that he may bid for the land shall be paid to the holder of the equity therein.

Section 12, in my judgment, is the most important section in the bill, and one against which the most bitter opposition will be waged. In this section the Government guarantees the payment of these loans, interest and principal. In this section of the bill the Government does for rural credits what it did for commercial banking in the Federal reserve act; that is, guarantees the observance of all its contracts and the redemption of all its obligations. This will make a farmer's loan as much to be desired by the investing public as a bond of these United States, and in many respects more to be desired, because in addition to the credit of these United States he has the real estate of the borrower, which is the best security that can be offered, and in this country, where prices are constantly increasing, this security will be more valuable as the years go by. If section 12 is permitted to remain in the bill—and without it the bill should not pass—there is no reason to believe that the rate of interest which a farmer will be compelled to pay will ever be in excess of 3½ per cent. Industrial securities, such as the bonds of the Pennsylvania Railway system, are now selling at par at that rate, and the obligations of this Government have sold at par, with an interest rate below that, and, therefore, in my judgment, the maximum interest rate would not exceed this, and might be considerably lower. When farmers shall enjoy the benefits of this provision and procure capital with which to operate on long-time loans at not exceeding that rate, not only will the farmers of this country prosper, but all the people who consume the products of the farm will, to an equal extent, reap the benefits of this act.

Section 13 limits the amount of a loan to any one person to $5,000. The object sought by this limitation is to make it impossible for one to build up or maintain large landed estates under the favorable conditions provided for borrowers under the provisions of this act. Were there no limitations it would be not only possible but profitable for men taking advantage of the low rate of interest procurable under the provisions of this bill to acquire large landed estates and thereby defeat the very object of the bill, which is to enable the men who till the soil to become the owners thereof. It provides that where lands upon which a loan has been procured shall pass into the hands of some one not a bona fide farmer, under the provisions of this bill said loan shall become due and payable. If this were not true, it would be possible by use of dummies for one to acquire loans under the provisions of this act, while in fact he was not entitled thereto. It further provides that where anyone shall acquire lands on which mortgages in excess of $5,000 procured under this act rest the excess of $5,000 shall become due and payable. This is also a provision to prevent accumulation in the hands of one man large estates purchased with money secured under the advantages of the low rate of interest made possible by this bill.

The entire intention of the bill is that it shall assist farmers to become the owners of their own homes; that those who till the soil shall own it. It is as necessary to shield farmers from the greed of land speculators as from the exactions of an unjust economic system. The country rests, and must rest, for its security and preservation upon the farmers of this country, and conditions must be made possible whereby every man who farms shall own the lands he tills. When this bill shall have become a law that condition will have been created and that result will follow. Therefore this bill should receive the unqualified support of all who have at heart the interests and the desire to protect from unjust conditions that class that founded and must preserve this Government and the free institutions we enjoy.

A bill (H. R. 20841) to provide for a low rate of interest and long-time loans in aid of agriculture, and for other purposes.

Whereas experience has demonstrated that a banking system suitable and adequate for the transaction of commercial banking is unsuited and inadequate for agriculture; and

Whereas the rate of interest that prevails in commercial transactions is in excess of that agriculture can pay; and

Whereas it is desired to establish a system whereby those bona fide engaged in agriculture may obtain a loan at a low rate of interest and long-time payment; and
Whereas it is not desired to disturb local banking conditions; and
Whereas it is in the interest of agriculture and good citizenship that large landed estates be not acquired; and
Whereas those who actually reside upon the land and till the soil should be the owners thereof: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the short title of this act shall be "A rural credits act."

SEC. 2. That there is hereby created in the Department of the Treasury at Washington, D. C., a commission to be known as a rural credits commission, said commission to be composed of five members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. These commissioners shall be selected from the various sections of the United States, and three of whom shall be actual bona fide farmers, who reside upon their farms and have no other occupations. Two shall be men of business affairs and recognized financial ability. The said rural credits commission shall herein be referred to as the commission. They shall elect one of their members chairman.

SEC. 3. That at first said commissioners shall be appointed for one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, and after that their terms of office shall be for five years each unless removed by the President for cause. The salary shall be $6,000 each, payable quarterly.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall assign them rooms for the conduct of their business, and they shall have power to appoint clerks and employ assistants that may be necessary for the transaction of the business of the department.

SEC. 5. That said commission shall have power to prescribe all rules and regulations necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act and for the conduct of the business of the department.

SEC. 6. That all postmasters throughout the United States and Territories thereof and the District of Columbia, for the purpose of carrying this act into effect and for the proper conduct of its business, shall be the agents of the commission and perform whatever services may be required of them without pay.

SEC. 7. That the purpose of this act shall be to enable farmers to procure long-time loans at low rate of interest to purchase farms or to develop and extend their agricultural productiveness. The word "farmer" as herein used shall mean one who actually resides upon his farm and is engaged in the business of farming, and the benefits of this bill shall be applicable to farmers residing in any State or Territory of the United States of America or the District of Columbia. The loans herein contemplated shall run in series of 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, and 30 years, at the option of the borrower, interest to be payable annually. The terms of such loan shall provide that at any interest-paying date beyond five years the borrower shall have the option to pay the principal, or to make payment of $100, or any multiple thereof, and upon such payment being made the interest on the amount so paid shall cease. Payment may be made at any post office or national bank. No person shall be entitled to a loan unless he actually resides upon his farm, or shall use the loan in payment of lands upon which he shall immediately fix his home. The amount of the loan shall be determined by the commission herein created, except anyone applying who is entitled to the loan shall, if he desires, receive as a loan as much as 50 per cent of the actual value of his lands and 25 per cent of the actual value of the improvements thereon, and as much more as may in the judgment of the commission be safe and prudent to extend him.

SEC. 8. That all securities or deeds of trust executed by anyone to secure a loan hereunder shall be made payable to the chairman of the commission as the trustee for the United States of America. Said instrument shall recite the amount of the loan and date of maturity, but shall not name the rate of interest to be paid thereon. Said instrument must be executed by the borrower according to forms of the State or Territory in which the lands are situated and in conformity with the rules and regulations prescribed by the commission. In addition to executing the said instrument herein referred to the borrower shall execute notes with coupons attached for interest periods named in said deed of trust and in the form that may be prescribed by the commission. These coupons are redeemable or payable at any national bank or any post office of the first, second, or third class. These notes, securities, coupons, and obligations and funds shall not be subject to taxation, municipal, State, or national. The title to said lands shall be shown by a suitable abstract, which shall be forwarded with the application for the loan, except in those States where the Torrens system may prevail, and in those States the certificate of the State shall be sufficient evidence of title. There shall be proper officers appointed for the examination of titles, for which services no fee shall be charged.

SEC. 9. That a farmer desiring to avail himself of the provisions of this act shall file with the local postmaster a written application under oath, setting forth the security he has to offer, the amount of the loan he desires, and the purposes for which he desires it, and such other facts as may be required by the commission. Whereupon the postmaster shall appoint two committees, consisting of three members each; the first named of each shall act as chairman of his committee. The first committee shall consist of three farmers residing in the immediate vicinity of the farm upon which the loan is desired, and who shall be familiar with its value, and they shall make an appraisement of the value of the lands and the improvements thereon separately. Said appraisements shall be under oath and secret, and shall be filed with the postmaster appointing said committee. The second committee shall consist of three men of affairs who are familiar with the land and improvements upon which the loan is sought and with the general conditions in that vicinity, as to whether values of real estate are advancing or declining, and whether the applicant is a progressive farmer or otherwise. They shall likewise appraise the farm and improvements and give whatever other information may be necessary to determine the hazard of the loan. These appraisements shall likewise be secret and made under oath and filed with the postmaster appointing said committees. When these appraisements are received by the postmaster, the postmaster and the chairmen of the two committees shall proceed to open the appraisements and to make therefrom a just and accurate appraisement of the property, both lands and improvements, and transmit the same to the chairman of the said commission at Washington, together with whatever other information may be necessary with reference to the applicant in the loan sought, to enable the commission to determine the amount to be loaned, if any. When the application is received and approved by the said commission, it shall cause to be forwarded to the postmaster from whom it was received the necessary notes and instruments to be executed by the borrower, who shall execute them in the manner prescribed by the commission and return to said commission. Thereupon said notes and instruments for the loan shall be sold in the open market for par at the lowest rate of interest procurable. The proceeds of said sale shall be transmitted to the borrower. The borrower shall not only pay the rate of interest agreed upon in said sale, but shall pay whatever per cent may be necessary for the amortization of said loan at maturity thereof. The per cent for amortization shall be fixed by the commission.

SEC. 10. That the moneys paid in under amortization herein provided for shall be a trust fund available for the payment of any interest or principal that may be due and unpaid on any loan made under the provisions of this act, and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States or put out at interest, as may be determined by said commission.

SEC. 11. That if any borrower shall make default in the payment of principal or interest under the provisions of his loan, then, under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, his lands shall be seized and sold subject to the terms of the loan, and for the purpose of said seizure and sale suit may be brought in the name of the commission, and all district attorneys are hereby authorized and commanded to prosecute said suits without fee. Said suits shall be in the United States district court for the district in which the lands are situated. From the proceeds of said sale all costs shall be first paid, and accrued interest and principal, if due, and the residue, if any, shall be paid to the borrower. Real estate sold under the provisions of this act may be redeemed from said sale by anyone holding the equity therein within one year from the date of sale.

SEC. 12. That the United States of America shall guarantee the payment of all interest and principal of loans procured under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. That no loan shall be in excess of $5,000. If the premises mortgaged under the provisions of this act shall pass into the ownership of anyone who is not a bona fide farmer, the indebtedness shall at once become due and payable. If anyone shall acquire lands upon which there is a loan under the provisions of this act in excess of $5,000, the excess of $5,000 shall at once become due and payable.

SEC. 14. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

The remarks of H. S. Mobley are as follows:

In my argument before your committee at various times I have outlined the idea which we farmers have of the reasons why a rural-credit system separate from the commercial banking system is necessary. I do not suppose it is necessary for me to go into that at this time. The plan which we propose for rural credits is different from anything which has been presented to the committee; that is, that I have knowledge of.

One objection to all the plans which have been presented to you is that they propose, in some measure at least, that the source of the credit to be extended to the farmer is to be derived from money which is payable on demand. Not one of them, so far as I am aware, proposes to bring, in an available way, in reach of the borrowing farmer real investment money. Another general objection to these plans is that, almost without exception, they would bind the farmer to the necessity of paying for his investment loans the rate of commercial interest prevailing in the State where the borrower resides. And, gentlemen, these two things are fundamentally wrong, and we are prepared to say that a rural-credit plan providing for long-time loans, whose source is demand capital and charging commercial interest, instead of being a help to the farmer, would be a detriment; and if this is the only kind of rural credits which your committee or the Congress and Senate of the United States will enact on behalf of the farmer, we believe it would be better to drop the whole matter and leave things as they are.

Any actual farmer to be permitted to approach some officer of the Federal Government in his immediate locality—possibly the postmaster—and on prepared blanks make application for a loan on his land for either part payment on his farm or to discharge a previous lien, the Federal officer to have authority to appoint two sets of appraisers, of three men each, each set to operate independently of the other and to be appointed by the Federal officer at separate times, so that one set of appraisers will not be officially in existence at the time the other set makes its appraisement; no member of the two sets of appraisers to be related to the proposed borrower nor connected with him by business relations or otherwise; the first set to be three actual farmers who have had a personal knowledge of the land offered as security and the one asking it for a period of five years, they to make their appraisement of the value of the property and to reveal nothing to anyone concerning the result of their finding, but to make a sworn report in writing and file it, sealed, with the local Federal officer; after their report, this officer to appoint another set of appraisers, who are to be men of affairs in the business relations of the community, they to make an appraisement according to their judgment and report to the Federal officer in like manner; the Federal officer then to call in the chairmen of the two appraising committees, and they three to open the sealed reports of the two committees and make a final appraisement and recommendation for the loan on the property.

There to be established in the Treasury at Washington a commission of 12 men, to be known as the rural-credit commission, 7 of these men to be actual farmers who have had five years continuous experience in deriving their living from the soil immediately previous to their appointment, the other 5 men to be men of affairs in the financial life of the Nation. Their salaries and expenses to be paid by the United States Government.

The local Federal officer will report to this commission the recommendation of his appraising committees, and this Federal commission, if it be satisfied that the recommendation is for a reasonable and secure loan on the property, to cause to be filled out a form of mortgage, which shall be returned to the local officer for acceptance and signature by the borrowing farmer. This mortgage to be then returned to the Federal commission. When the commission shall have accumulated a sufficient number of these mortgages, they to offer them for sale, with the guaranty of the Government behind them, at par or face value, and at the least rate of interest for which they will be accepted by the investing public.

When such mortgages are sold the sums derived from their sale to be forwarded to the local Federal officer or officers and paid over on receipt to the borrowing farmer or farmers, and the date upon which the borrower receipts for the money shall be the date from which the mortgage is to begin, and the rate of interest at which the Federal commission has sold the mortgage shall be the rate of interest on the mortgage. The commission to collect, in addition, at each interest period, a percentage for amortization; and in addition to this, the commission to collect annually from each borrower a sum of not to exceed one-tenth of 1 per cent, which is to be held in the United States Treasury as a guaranty against loss on the part of the Government for its guaranty of these mortgages.

I am aware that here the objection will be raised that the Government should not guarantee these mortgages; that it is unprecedented, etc.; but if you will consider that these loans would be made at not to exceed 50 per cent of the value of the property, that each year a certain per cent of the face value of the mortgage will be paid by the borrower, and that in addition there will be collected from all the borrowers in the United States a sum of money each year which at the end of a 35-year period, at one-tenth of 1 per cent, will amount to a 3½ per cent guaranty deposit in the Treasury, it will be seen that there can be no possible risk to the Government in guaranteeing these mortgages. I believe I will ask you to consider this a little more fully. The Government will have as a guaranty two dollars for one in property value; it will also have the appreciated value of the property from year to year (and no one can doubt that most farm lands will constantly appreciate from year to year); it will also have the amortization paid by the borrower reducing the face value of the mortgage, and, in addition, this 3½ per cent at the end of a 35-year period.

If this system of appraisement and security does not constitute an absolutely safe business deal, it is impossible for us to conceive of one.

Now, gentlemen, we have presented the outline of our plan, and desire to make some further explanations and arguments in behalf of it. The kernel of the whole matter of rural credits for investment is that the loans must be for a long time and the source of these loans be investment and not demand capital. All investment loans for agriculture should carry the amortization feature, and the most necessary feature of the whole is that they should bear a rate of interest considerably below the commercial rate.

Now, as I have said, I have not found among any of the plans any that proposed rural credits in line with this idea. Gentlemen, agriculture can not pay commercial rates of interest nor prosper under short-time loans, nor long-time loans derived from demand capital. As evidence of this last, banks do not, as a rule, seek to lend the permitted 20 per cent of their capital on long-time loans. The plan which we here propose meets all the demands above set forth.

This plan does not bring the necessarily low interest of agricultural loans into competition locally through neighborhood cooperations with the commercial interest charged by the local banks. This should be gravely considered by you.

Strong emphasis is laid in most of the plans proposed before you on some form of local cooperation among farmers of a financial nature before they can secure any form of rural credits. If local cooperative banks are to be our only source of farm loans, they must compete with local commercial banks, not only as regards the rate of interest but also with regard to the use of local capital. Therefore these cooperative banks of a local nature, being more or less in competition with local commercial banks for local capital, would have a tendency not to lower but to actually raise the local rate of interest. And this further result would follow that the higher rate of commercial rate of interest would attract the local money supply, and would not only serve to raise interest locally on all classes of loans but also would attract local capital more to commercial loans by reason of an increased interest which could be paid by money used for commercial purposes in that locality.

And, again, local cooperation by farmers in order to obtain investment loans is not wanted by the American farmers any more than by American merchants. There is no more reason for the American farmer being compelled to cooperate with his fellow farmers in order to obtain a loan of investment nature on land of known value than there is for cooperation among merchants to obtain loans of a commercial nature on their property of known value or on their credit.

This cooperative feature would tend to destroy the incentive for the individual to build up his own credit according to the laws of credit, individual wealth, trade ability and integrity, and have a tendency to communize him. I am speaking now, of course, of land loans and not personal credit for purely agricultural productive purposes.

It may seem strange that a nation-wide organization purporting to teach and practice cooperation should object to a cooperative system of rural credits. But this is only apparent. Those among us who have studied cooperation realize that, broadly speaking and as applied to agricultural efforts, according to American ideals, it is to be divided into two kinds—one may be called productive cooperation and the other distributive. Now, productive cooperation may not necessarily be communism, but it is at least communistic and tends toward communism. The organization which I have the honor to represent before you has in no way any inclination to enter into productive cooperation, but confines its efforts solely to the advancement of the idea of a distributive cooperation among its fellows. It presumes that the individuals composing its membership will be able to provide their own homes, tools, land, or, that is to say, their own investments, according to the capacity of the individual, and that the individual will use his own judgment as regards his investments and his production. After he has produced a commodity of a kind, the farmers' union undertakes to teach him to cooperate to find a market; but even in that cooperation the individualistic idea is steadfastly maintained so that the individual among us producing the less number or amount of commodities or inferior commodities can not derive any benefit through his cooperation with his fellow cooperators, who have been able to produce a greater amount of marketable commodities of a better grade. In other words, we are purely an American farmers' cooperative organization and scarcely at all tinged with the idea of productive or communistic cooperation, which can not but tend to bring about a leveling of individualistic character among its membership; but, as I have intimated, we strive constantly through our cooperative ideas of a distributive nature to bring out and develop the very best in each individual among us by a competitive system of cooperation. Therefore, we are opposed to cooperative land banks or cooperation of any nature that tends even to transplant to American soil the peasantizing and communistic farm cooperation ideas and practices of the European countries.

Our plan for rural credits places the individual on his own resources for a loan on his own property without involving either the limited or unlimited liability of his neighbors. But there is in this plan a cooperation which is American in its nature; it is not local, but is Nation wide. Each borrower pays a small assessment to the Federal commission as a guaranty for every other borrower, and after all our plan is cooperative, but does not affect the individual nor his personal ability to obtain a loan perceptibly. And, involving as it does all the borrowers in a national liability, constitutes in our plan a far better security for a loan than could possibly be had under any system of local cooperation where only a few men relatively stand liable or as security for loans in a locality. The whole guaranty fund distributed among all the borrowers in the Nation assembled at one point as guaranty for all loans would certainly be better security than any local cooperative plan could offer. This plan certainly would act to stabilize all the loans, whereas under local cooperation some loans would be amply secured and some possibly would not, which would tend to depreciate the value of all farm loans and thereby tend to increase the rate of interest at which they could be secured.

We advocate a limit to the amount that can be borrowed by any farmer in this way. If the amount is not limited, this condition could arise: The large landholders, by reason of better business ability, could borrow more easily than the man who is perhaps not so well informed and who is occupying all of his time in a struggle to support a family and pay for a home, and the result would be that while the rural-credit law would be ostensibly for the help of such home-owning farmers it would become, in effect, a real help toward extending landlordism and syndicatism in farms throughout the country, and the genuine purpose of the rural-credit law would be defeated. Also, in this connection, a rural-credit law which does not actually provide for a rate of interest below the commercial rate would aid to this end, since the more competent men of larger means and greater ability in handling money could necessarily make greater profits and could, therefore, pay a higher rate of interest.

As I have intimated, our plan preserves:

First. The individuality of the borrowing farmer and does not tend in any way to communize him.

Second. Is cooperative at last, but not directly in a communistic or joint-liable sense.

Third. Its guaranty is distributed over so wide a field as to be not burdensome on any borrower.

Fourth. Its security or guaranty is better, as I have intimated, than any local guaranty of a cooperative nature could possibly be.

Fifth. The system of appraisement can not but arrive at a secure valuation and eliminate all reasonable doubts as to the value of the property as security for the loan.

Sixth. The Federal commission, composed as it is of actual farmers and business men, can act as a safeguard to farmers in other matters of a national nature pertaining to agriculture, somewhat after the plan of the German Landwitshaft-rat.

Seventh. This plan insures a low rate of interest on agricultural loans by using the Government to bring the owner of investment money and the small borrowing farmer together without the intermediary of any profit-taking form of business whatever. The big point in this is that the small borrower could reach the investor of long-time money with perfect ease, whereas no plan which I have heretofore heard proposed offers to do this nor to provide a real method for lowering interest on agricultural loans.

Eighth. This plan of obtaining money at low interest would not affect the local commercial rate of interest in any way.

Ninth. Does not admit of the possibility of loss to the Government that all other plans I have heard proposed seemed to.

Tenth. Does not use any demand money for long-time loans.

Eleventh. Would relieve local banks of their present necessity of striving to carry the long-time loans of their communities on demand money.

Twelfth. But would permit local banks to use all their capital for commercial or personal credit or for productive loans, thus going a long way toward providing a means for personal credits in the community where much money was borrowed by the farmers for investment.

Thirteenth. The money loaned as we have outlined on farms in any community would largely find its way into local banks of that community, and thus increase their resources for commercial and personal credit uses.

Fourteenth. A large factor in this plan is that it gives efficient aid, as I have said, to the small borrower to reach the investor of long-time money and borrow for a low interest.

In conclusion I wish to say that the theory of all law, as I understand it, is that every man is equal before the law, both as to its opportunities and to its restrictions; that an opportunity offered by a legal enactment may seem to be fair and open to all, but this fact is true, that wherever the law offers men opportunities those men of best business ability and resources are the ones who profit most and necessarily the great masses of less resourceful men profit less.

American farmers have as much ability as any other class of our people, but our ability is not usually what is termed business ability. Our occupation consumes our interests and ability in other directions than those of a strictly commercial business nature. Therefore, when we are left to compete with commercial business of better business resources and ability than ourselves, we always stand to fail to get our share of the opportunities, which, in theory, we should share equally with others, because the other classes are better trained and skilled in business than are we and can secure to themselves the benefits more readily.

Therefore we farmers here and now ask this Government to cure in this matter of rural credits this disadvantage in finances under which we labor. In substance, we ask the Government to act as our middle man and create for us this opportunity of securing credit based on investment money and to bring us in touch with the investors under such statutory legalization as will secure to us that which we are unable to secure for ourselves in competition with these more resourceful and better trained men. This, gentlemen, in substance, is our plea, and we feel that the more serious consideration you give to this subject the more benefit you will confer upon American farmers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct my attention, first, to the statement that there are pensioners now living outside the United States numbering 5,163, and to the amendment which has been offered to continue the pensions to those only who are now and continue to be citizens of the United States.

I do not understand that our liberal pension laws were enacted as a matter of inducement or reward for anything that was to occur in the future, but they were intended as a fair remembrance and evidence of gratitude on the part of this Government for services which had already been rendered by those who took part in the preservation of this great Government of ours. So that it matters not, it seems to me, where they live, or what their occupation may be, or what their present allegiance may be, that if they or those whom they represent upon the pension rolls did perform the service for this Government, then their obligation and contract with this Government is complete, and no penalty should be inflicted upon them because for any reason they see fit to live under another flag or in another land. [Applause.]

I call attention to the fact that of the 5,163 members on the pension roll residing outside of the United States 2,692 reside in our neighbor country Canada, 504 live in the fatherland of Germany, 415 live in the little green isle that furnished a greater percentage of fighting blood for the northern army based upon its area and its citizenship than any other part of the world outside of the United States itself. [Applause.] These three divisions contain 70 per cent of all our pensioners abroad.

There are many reasons, perhaps, why the old mother in Ireland or the old father in Germany or the dependents in Canada should be permitted to live where they are while we continue to simply carry out the contract which this Government made with them or their representatives. Nay, more, Mr. Chairman; there is a most important reason why this House should under no circumstances penalize anyone who has seen fit either to go to a foreign country or to remain in a foreign country and enjoy this pension. Since I have been a Member of Congress, which is now nearly four years, there has been a definite policy followed by this House which was expressed most tersely in the Underwood tariff bill report, where it was said:

> The future growth of our great industries lies beyond the seas.

And if that is true, it is the strongest kind of an invitation to the people of this country, if they want to better their condition, to go beyond the seas, because there the future growth of our great industries is to be.

I want to call attention to Canada. Of course, that is not beyond the salted seas, although it is beyond the unsalted ones, where they have had for years the most liberal homestead laws, and where under our present tariff laws the embargo has been taken down so that they can accept the invitation of the majority of this House and go into great agricultural Canada, live there, and produce agricultural products on cheap soil, and, with the American tariff either removed or very substantially reduced, send their products back to America for sale or consumption here. And the party in power, having so placed itself on record, pointing out the advantages of removal to foreign lands, should not inflict a penalty upon any of our patriotic sons and daughters or their grandsons and granddaughters for simply following out the invitation so legislatively made. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, then, I want to say further that when we were accepting these men who died and left dependents, or those men who survived to draw pensions, we did not ask in what land they were born, or what they expected to do after the war closed. Every man who offered his services to this country in its time of need was accepted for the work that he proposed to do during the war, and after that all that we have a right to exact of them, or of those who represent them is absolute equality, and that is due from us to them.

I want to say further that we should not long hereafter refrain from recognizing the widows and the orphans of our recent Spanish-American War. I want to compliment the House—and in doing that I give due credit to the majority—for its liberal action in doing what it could at this term to recognize the just claims of the widows of the Spanish-American War. I hope that before this session closes the shackles, or obstructions, or whatever you may see fit to call them, will be removed from the other Chamber, so that legitimate legislation may be enacted; and that as a part of that legitimate, much-desired, and just legislation there will be passed by that legislative body the Spanish-American widows' pension bill, already passed by this House. This should have the favorable action of that other body and the ratification of the Executive of this Government.

Beneficiaries of the Spanish-American widows' bill will be in part the wives of the young men who left their homes for Cuba or the Philippines in a great humanitarian war. These men risked their lives to disease in foreign swamp and fen as well as before foreign guns. The toll of death was not overlight, and many a young wife was left to mourn. Many more have been bereft of protection by death among those who were honorably discharged in health.

It is more than 15 years since many of these young men, returning with new and proper sentiments of responsibility, joined their lives and fortunes with sweethearts whose letters had cheered them in the long nights and on the weary marches in the far-off islands of the seas. Many of these young men have been called hence and left widows to battle with an unsympathetic world. This Government owes these women a duty. I hope it will be performed by this Congress. It will be an act of justice. It will be a proper recognition of the service of that superb army of laborers, clerks, students, farmers—classes all—which added such a rich contribution to our country's glory.

I desire further to say that I hope that within a few years—and the time is here now, though it seems progress has not been made in recognizing the widows of the Civil War soldiers where matrimony was contracted between them and the soldiers since 1890—legislation to take effect at a period following that date such as will be fair and liberal to the large body of persons so interested should be enacted. I would not favor classifying the recipients of that bounty so that fraud might be perpetrated upon this Government. But a bill could be passed and should be passed which would give the widows who contracted matrimony with soldiers between 1890 and 1900, and even later, the benefit of the widows' pension law, which is denied them at the present time. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the amendment to which I have mainly addressed myself has come up for consideration at various sessions of Congress. It will come up for a vote now, and I trust that the same firm, patriotic stand will be taken by the membership of this House that has been taken heretofore, and that we shall not, because of the residence of the recipients of pensions, lose sight of the patriotism which they have displayed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOWLER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a bill has been introduced into the Legislature of North Dakota providing that the prescriptions of all physicians shall be written in English. I presume there was a time when such a law might have been necessary. There was a time when the standards of ethics in the medical profession were not as high as they are now. Even the younger men here can remember when the doctor handed out a prescription in a mysterious way, containing the words "hydrocarbonate" and "aqua pura," meaning sugar and water. Or perhaps the prescription included the words "magnesium sulphate," which is high brow for epsom salts.

At that time we had a great many more quacks in the medical profession than we have now. I have a profound respect and admiration for the medical profession, and would not want to be understood as criticizing them. No one, however, despises a quack more than does an honest practitioner. A quack has been defined in the Century Dictionary as follows:

> One who make vain and loud protestations; one who pretends to skill or knowledge of any kind which he does not possess; an impudent and fraudulent pretender to medical skill.
> To tamper with dishonestly; to use fraudulently.

Well, Mr. Chairman, there are quacks outside of the medical profession. Perhaps the best illustration is found in the people who do the grading of grain, who are responsible for the grading system of the State of Minnesota.

Ten years ago I was serving in the Legislature of North Dakota. Shortly previous to that the wheat crop across the line, in Canada, was supposed to have been very seriously damaged. A snowstorm came during the early part of September, 1903, and was supposed to have done very great damage to the quality of the wheat that was raised there, to such an extent that while the wheat was being marketed those who sold it were docked 10 cents per bushel. It was called "shock frozen." Afterwards chemists examined this grain; that is to say, after the grain had gotten out of the country, the results of the experiments became known, and it was found that this frozen wheat which they had graded as No. 3 northern made more bread, and of just as good quality, as No. 1 hard. That bulletin was sent to me by a constituent, Mr. Wylie Nielson, while the legislature was in session, and as a result I introduced a bill providing that at the agricultural college there should be chemical tests made of wheat and baking tests of flour to determine the real intrinsic value of the wheats which were grown in our State.

After much opposition the bill was finally passed. The bill, which I shall not stop to read, but insert in the RECORD, if there is no objection, made it the duty of the agricultural college, at Fargo, to make chemical tests of wheat and baking tests of flour, and to publish in bulletins the result of the tests. A copy of the bill follows:

CHAPTER 113—LAWS OF NORTH DAKOTA—1903.

(S. B. 163—George M. Young.)

An act to provide for the making of tests of wheat and flour to determine the comparative milling values of the different grades of wheat.

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota: It shall be the duty of the North Dakota Government Agricultural Experiment Station to conduct experiments and determine the comparative milling values of the different grades of wheat and baking tests of the flour made therefrom. A record shall be kept and published of the different grades of wheat received and by whom graded, the name of the person from whom received, with address, the nature of the soil, previous cropping, and number of years which the land has been cropped, unless it appears that the wheat tested has been received from a dealer and consists of blended or mixed wheat, in which case the record shall so state. The result of the chemical analysis of each sample shall be kept, which shall show the total weight of the sample, total weight of flour, total weight of feed, total weight recovered and per cent of flour, also data as to the moisture and proteids in the different grades of wheat, and analysis of the flour made from the different grades of wheat, and the yield and quality of bread made from the different grades of wheat. In addition to such information it shall be the duty of the said North Dakota Government Agricultural Experiment Station to obtain, tabulate, and publish such other and further information in relation to the comparative values of the different grades of wheat and flour made therefrom as shall be of value to the wheat growers of this State.

The experiments made under this law were conducted by Dr. E. F. Ladd, one of the greatest chemists in the United States; one who has been called to Washington frequently in consultation; and in Bulletin No. 14, issued in January, 1915, the results of certain investigations made last year are set forth. It will not be possible to read this report fully, or even to give all the figures contained in the tables, but I think it is well worth while to anyone who is interested either in selling wheat or in buying bread, wherever he lives in the United States, to examine these tables. Their significance can not be appreciated from a mere reading, but a study of them will show that as a matter of fact there is not any very great difference in the milling value of wheats that are graded No. 1 northern, No. 2 northern, No. 3 northern, No. 4 northern, and rejected, although, as everybody knows, these numbers make a tremendous difference when a man has any wheat to sell. And it is of interest to every man who buys bread, or buys flour, because the middleman's profit is made excessively large by reason of this supposed difference in the actual value of the grades, as shown by the Minnesota grading system, but which does not exist, as shown by these experiments with the actual wheat itself.

I will say that at the agricultural college at Fargo they have a complete flour milling plant, from which the flour is made, and a laboratory that is very complete, in which these experiments are made.

Does the producer receive a fair price for all grades of wheat, asks Dr. Ladd.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Do these experiments with regard to the bread-making value of these different wheats show the value per bushel of the different grades of wheat, or per pound, or on what are they based?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The tables are given first on the basis of bushels and then afterwards in other figures to make it easier to carry in the mind on the basis of 100 pounds.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman mean to say that there is very little difference between No. 1 hard and No. 4 wheat per pound as to their value for bread making?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is precisely what I claim, and that is precisely what is demonstrated in this bulletin.

Mr. PLATT. Do not the poorer grades of wheat contain more weeds or something else that makes them grade low? Or what is the basis?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; that is an element that should be considered, and it is considered in this bulletin. Dr. Ladd, in determining the value of the wheat, attempts to show how much flour it will make and shows exactly what the by-products are and what their value is in the market and what the entire value of the wheat is on account of its content of flour, bran, shorts, and even the value of the screenings.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman is quoting Prof. Ladd?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; I am quoting Dr. E. F. Ladd. To show the basis of the calculation of Dr. Ladd, permit me to read a few lines from the report:

Results from five different grades of wheat have been studied, namely, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 northern and rejected grades. Ten samples of each of these have been received from the crop of 1914, except No. 1 northern, of which only four samples were received, and our conclusions are based on the average of each of these 10 samples, which confirm the findings of previous years.

In other words, this bulletin confirms experiments made in former years by Dr. Ladd.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CLINE). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Dr. Ladd continues:

A comparative study of the data presented for the several grades show that there is practically no difference in the money value for the higher as compared with the lower grades. The wheat buyer, however, will raise several objections. He will immediately call attention to the weight per bushel and the small per cent flour produced by the light-weight wheat. He might also mention the color score for the baked product. The grounds for this objection appear to be sound, and the majority of wheat buyers would make the same objections—their reasons being based upon previous experience and the requirements of grade which have been established under conditions not now existing. For this reason the rule has been generally accepted until it has become firmly established and has given us our present system for the grading of wheats.

Now, coming to his first table in which he gives certain results of the grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 northern, and rejected, which is a separate grade, I want to read a few of those results. As to the milling tests the percentage of flour in No. 1 northern is 67; No. 2, 67; No. 3, 68; No. 4, 63; and rejected, 63 per cent.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is of flour content?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes. Now, then, as to bran. In No. 1 northern, it is 16 per cent; No. 2 northern, 16½ per cent; No. 3 northern, 17½ per cent; No. 4 northern, 18 per cent. The figures are quoted in round numbers. Rejected, 18.64. In other words, the rejected produces more bran than No. 1 northern, and the same is also true of No. 4 northern and No. 3 northern.

Now, as to the contents of shorts. No. 1 northern, 15.32; No. 2 northern, 14.69; No. 3 northern, 14; No. 4 northern, 18.83; rejected, 17.34.

Now, as to water absorption. The bakers who buy flour always want a flour that will be capable of large absorption; that is one of the points that a buyer of flour to be made into bread and sold commercially always takes into account.

Absorption of No. 1 northern is 58.87; No. 2 northern, 56.31; No. 3 northern, 59.91; No. 4 northern, 59.22; rejected, 58.98.

You will see from these figures that the water absorption of No. 4 northern and rejected is greater than in the higher grades.

Now, as to the volume of the loaf. It will be seen by figures that I am going to read that the lower grades are superior in that respect: No. 1 northern, 2451; No. 2 northern, 2425; No. 3 northern, 2514; No. 4 northern, 2600; rejected, 2885.

It will be seen in the size of the loaf the so-called lower grades of wheat—and I put the accent on the word "so-called"—produce a larger loaf than the so-called higher grades.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. In these baking tests which the gentleman is giving, does not the matter of nutriment enter into it largely; is not that an essential part of the test outside of the volume of the loaf?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is gotten by taking into account the gluten and the proteids, and so forth. Those matters are all given consideration by Dr. Ladd.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does he find that the amount of nutriment in the low grades of wheat is perceptibly less than in the higher grades of wheat?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. No; he says not. In this bulletin the results of his experiments are not given in detail, but in a former bulletin he goes into that question very thoroughly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say that there is no greater mystery in the world than this mystery of bread. The Minneapolis mills take Canadian and Minnesota wheat and mix it with Kansas wheat and claim that it makes a better baking test than wheat of one variety.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Dr. Ladd would agree with them in that. This bulletin shows that by the admixture of a hard wheat with a soft wheat a better bread is produced.

Following this table further as to the color, No. 1 northern is quoted at 100; No. 2 northern, 96.04. This is as to color.

Mr. NORTON. The color of the wheat or the flour?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The color of the bread. They do not make flour from bran, and that is the only thing that a man can see with the naked eye when he looks at wheat. No. 3 northern, 94.02; No. 4 northern, 95; rejected, 94.5. There is a slight difference in these percentages, but very little, as between No. 1 northern and rejected.

But it must be borne in mind that with the bakers the lower limit of the standard as to color is 88, and all of these grades, even the rejected grades, produce flour that is considerably above 88. The rejected shows up in this test at 94.5. The bulletin gives valuable information as to the value of the mill products, giving the market quotations for bran, standard middlings, flour middlings, and screenings. Then the calculation is carried further to show the value of the wheat and mill products for the several grades. It gives the value of the flour and the bran and the shorts and the screenings, and the results of this second table, which I will put in the RECORD, show that the value per 100 pounds of No. 1 northern was $2.28; No. 2 northern, $2.27; No. 3 northern, $2.34; No. 4 northern, $2.31; rejected, $2.31½.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me that the gentleman has proved, if he has proved anything, that it is not worth while to grade wheat at all. Does the gentleman maintain that?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be much fairer to the farmer and very much fairer to the average flour mill that buys wheat if there was no grading of the wheat at all. That is the chief cause, it seems to me, of all this manipulation by which the middleman is getting an excessive profit.

Mr. PLATT. And the gentleman actually contends that No. 1 northern is not any better wheat than rejected wheat?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I commend the gentleman to a careful study of this bulletin prepared by Dr. Ladd, who is not only a great chemist but a man of integrity and honesty.

Mr. PLATT. If that is true, then there is no reason for giving any attention to improving the quality of wheat at all.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly there is.

Mr. PLATT. That can hardly be true. I think the gentleman is proving too much.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I think it is important to always raise the best quality of wheat.

Mr. PLATT. But the gentleman says there is no difference in the quality.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. If the Government grades wheat this year and next year and from year to year, the standard of value of the wheat, based upon its value for making flour and the value of its by-products, would have to be determined by the Government, and if the quality of wheat were gradually on the increase from year to year, the Government would naturally take that into account. The purpose of grading it seems to me would be to simply state what the different grades of wheat are, where there is any real difference, and it would not be to create a lot of grades to represent a lot of imaginary differences such as are now in operation in Minnesota, but just have enough grades to represent what the real differences are, so that when the flour mill buys it, or when anyone buys it, to make into flour, he will know what he is getting, and the farmer who raises it will know what he is selling.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not a fact that No. 1 hard and No. 1 northern will make more flour at a less cost than any other grade?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is not the fact. I commend again the gentleman to a careful study of this bulletin, which clearly demonstrates that it is not a fact.

This analysis also attempts to show what it has cost the farmers in our State for the crop of 1914, because of this manipulation, and it runs into the millions. Of course, Dr. Ladd does not attempt to show what it costs as applied to the entire wheat crop of the United States. I think this is a subject to which Congress ought to give its attention, because I think it concerns every man who has a bushel of wheat to sell and every man who buys a loaf of bread. It is not a sectional question. It is not a question that is of interest only to the people of the Northwest.

Mr. KINDEL. Have you no terminals in your State which would give you a way of controlling the wheat?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. We have no terminals in North Dakota. That is one of the difficulties with us. We can not reach the situation by legislation in North Dakota, because our wheat is naturally graded at the place where it is emptied into the boats or where it reaches the big mills where it is ground into flour.

Mr. Chairman, the reading of this bulletin stirs the blood. It makes one feel like arming himself with a gun when he heads toward the elevator with a load of wheat. That is not the thing to do. There is no use and no justice in shooting the local wheat buyer. He is not responsible for grades fixed by the Minnesota authorities. It is the Minnesota grading system which we must fight, and that can not be done by State laws. The North Dakota Legislature can not change such grading laws, nor can the legislatures of South Dakota, Ohio, nor New York. The State legislatures are helpless to cope with this phase of the marketing problem. So it is the plain duty of Congress to enact a national grain-grading law.

Who gets the enormous toll disclosed by the figures of Dr. Ladd's bulletin? The time allotted to me will not permit me to go into that feature of this subject. The big fact which stands out is that somewhere in the middle a large slice is appropriated and that the farmers and consumers both suffer. The farmer wants what his wheat is really worth. The flour millers, taken as a whole, without stopping to consider exceptions, want the wheat as near as may be as it leaves the farm without mixing or juggling of grades. The cost of the wheat to him is passed on to the consumer. He wants honest wheat and prefers to buy it under a grade which will mean something. In a great trade, such as this is, which might be carried on honorably and profitably by the two classes mentioned, it has been a matter of great surprise that the people of and general business interests of the great terminal centers have sided with the grain quacks as against the farmers, and that too, in spite of the fact that their very existence depends upon their general trade with the same farmers and their success is measured by the success of the farmers.

John McCutcheon told a good story a couple of years ago which at least reminds one of the Minnesota grain-grading quacks. It was about a band of highwaymen who had operated so long and so successfully that they became very bold. They plundered the people right and left and when the poor victims cried out in helpless despair the robbers uttered peal after peal of mocking laughter. (Pronounced lofter.) So powerful did the band become that they controlled by secret and sinister means the very Government itself, and thus enjoyed great prosperity. Some of the prosperity was distributed to quiet the people, but of course the robbers kept most of it themselves. When they pounced upon a hapless wayfarer the poor man would meekly yield because of his helplessness before such powerful enemies. He would raise his eyes in despair and sigh, "Let me have the sacks back." The sentiment of the people became very bitter, but what could they do? They could not express themselves except in helpless fury. But one fine day in June a determined farmer of stout heart walked down the highway toward the place where the robbers assembled, and when the latter perceived him they nearly split their sides laughing. They leaped upon him with loud shouts of merriment. They robbed him in broad daylight, so bold had they become. But to their surprise the victim, instead of submissively yielding as all the others had done, at once began to put up a mighty fight. He fought so vigorously that the robbers were quite taken aback. "What is this?" they gasped. "Who is this brash person who dares fight back?"

In the meantime the noise of the fight had attracted a great crowd of people who came rushing up and were muttering angry threats against them. "What do you think of this?" exclaimed the robbers, appealing to the crowd. "Here we were robbing and beating this person and he is setting up an awful roar. He's a poor loser. He's a poor sport. Why doesn't he take his medicine like a man instead of squealing? When a man gets robbed he ought to be a graceful loser and acknowledge that he has lost."

In other words, it is not good form to make an outcry when your substance is being taken.

There is a lesson, and perhaps a prophecy in this. The farmers have become aroused. They are alive to their interests, and they have stout, resolute hearts. They know that they are being victimized, and they know we can help them by national legislation. They are organizing. They mean business. But best of all the consumers of wheat products are waking up to the fact that they have been and are being held up. In the past the demand for a national grain-grading law, for that is our only relief, has been considered a sectional question, one of interest to a few grain-raising areas. That is far from true. It is of interest to every man, woman, and child in our great Nation. It concerns vitally every man who raises a bushel of wheat and every man who buys a loaf of bread. The poor factory worker who has difficulty in making his pay check cover the actual needs of his family, and the farmer, whose work is never done and whose problems are real and burdensome, excepting to the writer of poetry, have a like interest and should make common cause against State grain-inspection systems. They should work unitedly for a national grading law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. This question concerns too many people to be lightly brushed aside. It must be settled, and it must be settled mighty soon. The farmers want it settled. The consumers want it settled. It is to the real interest of the flour millers that it should be settled. Commercial organizations in terminal cities, if they have breadth of view, should look to the welfare of the farming constituency, from whom their merchants and bankers draw custom, and take a stand for them rather than for the swollen profits of a comparative few. The time is coming when the farmers and the country merchants will deal only with those cities which will practice the golden rule. The time is coming, and I hope it will arrive quickly, when the flour manufacturers will cry loudly for relief from the monopolists who thrive under State grain-inspection systems. Perhaps it is too much to hope that these commercial bodies and the flour millers will see their permanent advantage, as well as duty, of standing by the wheat producers and flour consumers. If they do not, then let the struggle go on, anyway. Let the mighty army of farmers on one side and the city consumers on the other fight for this legislation and give no quarter to those who stand between, such as commercial organizations, that ought to know better. That kind of fight should win. That kind of fight will win. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask for permission to print Dr. Ladd's bulletin in full.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bulletin is as follows:

[North Dakota Agricultural Experiment Station, Agricultural College, N. Dak. Special bulletin, food department. Volume III. January, 1915. No. 14. E. F. Ladd, commissioner.]

IS THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF GRADING WHEAT EQUITABLE?

[By E. F. Ladd.]

NOTE.—This article contains data gathered as the "Joint cooperative work of the experiment station and the Office of Grain Standardization of the United States Department of Agriculture."

Does the producer receive a fair price for all grades of wheat? This question has been repeatedly asked, and in comparing the different types and grades of wheat coming under observation one has been forced to take note of this question in previous years, but never before has the question been so forcibly presented as with the 1914 crop.

From the data before us it seems safe to answer the question that the present system of grading wheat is unfair and that the purchaser does not get an adequate price for the so-called lower grades of wheat. If this be true, what is the reason for such a condition? Our present system of grading wheat is one of gradual evolution; one change after another has been added; and perhaps when a change was made in the classification for grading there existed sufficient reason for making such changes. When some of these changes were made the prices for mill products, feeds, etc., were relatively low as compared with what they are to-day. Other products were scarcely utilized, but to-day conditions are changed and each product has its market value, and should be considered in the adjustment of grades.

This is not wholly a new question. Other investigators have previously considered the same point. Saunders (Canadian Exp. Farm Bulletin No. 50) and Shutt state that "millers could pay relatively higher prices for the intermediate grades of wheat"; that is, the grades between No. 1 northern and the wheat that is so badly damaged as to render it fit only for feeding purposes.

Wilson (S. D. Exp. Station Bulletin No. 90) and Skinner show results with feeding experiments on hogs with wheat that weighed 44 pounds per bushel and 57 pounds per bushel. Their conclusion is that there are but 6 cents per bushel difference in feeding value between the two; that is, in favor of the heavyweight wheat.

Harcourt[1] gives as his opinion that there is very little difference in the real value of the different grades of wheat, and similar conclusions are arrived at in his studies of the comparative values of the different grades of wheat for 1903 and 1904.

If we study the data presented by other investigators who have laid no stress on this matter, we find their figures confirm the same conclusion.

Results from five different grades of wheat have been studied, namely, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 northern and rejected grades. Ten samples of each of these have been received from the crop of 1914, except No. 1 northern, of which only 4 samples were received, and our conclusions are based on the average of each of these 10 samples, which confirm the findings of previous years. A comparative study of the data presented for the several grades shows that there is practically no difference in the money value for the higher as compared with the lower grades. The wheat buyer, however, will raise several objections. He will immediately call attention to the weight per bushel and the small per cent flour produced by the light-weight wheat. He might also mention the color score for the baked product. The grounds for his objection appear to be sound, and the majority of wheat buyers would make the same objections—their reasons being based upon previous experience and the requirements of grade which have been established under conditions not now existing. For this reason the rule has been generally accepted until it has become firmly established, and has given us our present system for the grading of wheats.

The rules generally followed are those issued by the Minnesota grain inspection department, and being governed by these rules our classification has been made on the same basis, and if there is any criticism it is that possibly we have given the highest possible grade to each wheat. The weight per bushel as given before cleaning is the weight as shown by a standard chronometer as the wheat was received, and the weight after cleaning was taken when the wheat had been cleaned over separators and scoured twice before tempering. This latter weight would show at least 1 pound, on the average, more than if cleaned by the methods usually employed by inspection departments. If we consider only the question of the low per cent of flour obtained, the objection appears quite reasonable, but this is an unfair comparison, and the value of all the mill products should be taken into consideration, as has been done in the preparation of this report.

The third objection of the wheat buyer, with regard to the color score, is not as great as would seem to be on first consideration. The color score as used here is fully up to the standard for the Minneapolis patent flour as tested in the commercial laboratories. The results from all these straight flours are well within the class of the Minneapolis standard patents in color, and when we consider all the other factors shown by the baking test, the texture, volume, etc., the bread from Nos. 3, 4, and rejected wheats are found to be superior to the bread produced from the flours of the Nos. 1 and 2 northern wheats. These facts are substantiated in the data which is presented.

With the foregoing conclusions accepted, as based on actual tests, the problem then resolves itself into one of simple mathematics. The true value of the different grades, computed according to the value of the different milling products obtained from each, will furnish the desired information.

Now let us see what the findings are for the milling and baking tests for the several grades of wheat, as shown by the average for all the samples tested, 10 in each grade, except for No. 1 northern, where only 4 samples have been received this year.

Grade of wheat.	Weight per bushel.		Milling tests.					Baking tests.
	Before cleaning.	After cleaning.	Per cent loss in cleaning.	Per cent flour.	Per cent bran.	Per cent shorts.	Per cent loss in milling.	Water absorbed, per cent.	Volume of loaf, c. c.	Color, per cent.	Texture, per cent.
No. 1 N	57.75	61.12	2.51	67.33	16.30	15.32	1.05	58.87	2,451	100	93.25
No. 2 N	55.8	59.10	3.72	67.02	16.68	14.69	1.61	56.31	2,425	96.4	93.4
No. 3 N	51.85	55.95	6.14	68.15	17.62	14.10	.13	59.91	2,514	94.2	90.45
No. 4 N	45.65	52.55	12.21	63.22	17.98	18.83	.03	59.22	2,600	95	94.7
Rejected	41.95	50.85	13.96	63.68	18.64	17.34	.34	58.98	2,685	94.5	94.7

From the data in table No. 1 it will be observed that in the baking tests the texture for Nos. 1 and 2 averages below that for the other three grades, considerably below the rejected even. In color Nos. 1 and 2 northern show somewhat better than the other three, but even here the rejected comes well above the lower limits for second patents, which is placed at 88 in the commercial laboratories. In volume of loaf the three lower grades are much superior to bread produced from Nos. 1 and 2 northern, the flour from the rejected making the largest volume.

The market prices for the various mill products are taken from the Northwestern Miller of Minneapolis, under date of December 9, 1914, where we find the following quotations:

Second patent (straight) per barrel	$5.45 to $5.85
Bran, per ton	20.25 to 21.00
Standard middlings	20.50 to 21.00
Flour middlings	26.00 to 28.00
Red Dog	30.00 to 30.50
Mill screenings	12.00 to 14.00

The average for straight flour is, therefore, $5.65 per barrel of 196 pounds, or 2.88 cents per pound.

Mill products, in our case, have not been divided into just the same classes as quoted above; but for convenience, and that our figures may be low rather than high, we take the following:

Flour, per barrel, $5.65; per pound, 2.88 cents.
Bran, per ton, $20; per pound, 1 cent.
Shorts, per ton, $25; per pound, 1.25 cents.
Mill screenings, per ton, $12; per pound, 0.60 cent.

Or, to state these figures in another way, the market price for 100 pounds would be as follows:

Straight flour	$2.88
Bran	1.00
Screenings	.60

The foregoing will, therefore, serve as a basis for our conclusions.

In the same publication will be found the market quotation for eight days, the average being as follows:

	Per bushel.	Per 100 pounds.
No. 1 northern	$1.17	$1.95
No. 2 northern	1.143	1.905
No. 3 northern	1.115	1.858
No. 4 northern	1.073	1.789
Rejected	1.048	1.746

We may bring our data into a table for easier comparison, showing the value of the wheat and mill products for the several grades, as follows:

	Grades of wheat—average.
	1 N.	2 N.	3 N.	4 N.	Rejected.
Average cost per bushel	$1.170	$1.143	$1.115	$1.073	$1.048
Cost per 100 pounds wheat	$1.950	$1.905	$1.858	$1.789	$1.746
Pounds of product per 100 pounds wheat:
Flour	67.33	67.02	68.15	63.22	63.68
Bran	16.30	16.68	17.62	17.98	18.64
Shorts	15.32	14.69	14.10	18.83	17.34
Total recovered	98.95	98.39	99.87	100.03	99.66
Milling loss (pounds)	1.05	1.61	0.13	+0.25	0.34

[1] Annual Report Ontario A. C. and Exp. Farm No. 30, 1904, and No. 31, 1905.

	Grades of wheat—average.
	1 N.	2 N.	3 N.	4 N.	Rejected.
Amount net from 100 pounds wheat:
Flour	$1.9391	$1.9301	$1.9627	$1.9207	$1.8339
Bran	$0.1630	$0.1668	$0.1762	$0.1798	$0.1804
Shorts	$0.1915	$0.1836	$0.1762	$0.2353	$0.2167
Screenings	$0.01506	$0.0223	$0.0368	$0.0732	$0.0837
Total value	$2.3087	$2.3028	$2.3519	$2.3090	$2.3147
Loss or gain in milling	$0.02475	$0.0306	$0.0024	+$0.0004	$0.0059
Net returns	$2.28391	$2.2722	$2.3495	$2.3094	$2.3148

The above gives the figures for the several grades in easy form for comparison, but they may be summarized to show the amount of increase in value for each 100 pounds of wheat and the mill products therefrom, as follows:

	No. 1 northern.	No. 2 northern.	No. 3 northern.	No. 4 northern.	Rejected.
Cost per 100 pounds	$1.950	$1.905	$1.858	$1.789	$1.746
Receipts	2.28391	2.2722	2.3495	2.3094	2.3148
Increase per 100 pounds	.33391	.3672	.4915	.5204	.5688

It will be observed from the above that for each 100 pounds of wheat the returns above the original cost are as follows:

	Net receipts.
No. 1 northern	$0.33391
No. 2 northern	.3672
No. 3 northern	.4915
No. 4 northern	.5204
Rejected	.5688

The returns, therefore, for the rejected, or for Nos. 3, 4, and rejected, are considerably better than the returns for grades Nos. 1 and 2 of hard spring wheats.

We assume that the average profit on the grades for hard spring wheat, Nos. 1 and 2 northern, is enough to cover the charges of manufacture and the profit for the manufacturer, because grade No. 2 northern is generally accepted on contract.

On the same page of the same journal is to be found the quotations of receipts by car lots at Minneapolis for the several grades of wheat for the week ending Saturday. The receipts by cars were as follows:

Grade.	Cars received.				Per cent of different grades received for week ending—
	Dec. 5.	Nov. 28.	Dec. 6, 1913.	Dec. 7, 1912.	Dec. 5.	Nov. 28.	Dec. 6, 1913.	Dec. 7, 1912.
No. 1 northern	506	381	801	1,424	24.57	20.78	65.90	46.75
No. 2 northern	480	448	292	1,251	23.30	24.40	24.05	41.07
No. 3 northern	587	564	105	279	28.49	30.70	8.65	9.16
No. 4 northern	417	360	.....	.....	20.25	19.60	.....	.....
Rejected	70	83	17	92	3.39	4.52	1.40	3.02
Total cars	2,060	1,836	1,215	3,046	100	100	100	100

If we assume that each car contained on an average 1,000 bushels, then the following table shows the number of bushels of wheat, price per bushel, and the amount that will be paid for the several grades for the week ending December 5, 1914.

	Number of bushels.	Price per bushel.	Amount paid.
No. 1 northern	506,000	$1.17	$592,020.00
No. 2 northern	480,000	1.143	548,640.00
No. 3 northern	587,000	1.115	654,505.00
No. 4 northern	417,000	1.073	447,441.00
Rejected	70,000	1.048	73,360.00
Total	2,060,000	.....	2,315,966.00

The following table shows the amount that would have been received for the products manufactured from each of these grades of wheat, excluding the screenings, together with the profit thereon:

	Amount per bushel.	Amount received.	Per cent profit.
No. 1 northern	$1.3613	$688,817.80	16.27
No. 2 northern	1.3499	647,952.00	18.01
No. 3 northern	1.3876	814,521.20	24.44
No. 4 northern	1.3417	559,488.90	25.04
Rejected	1.3386	93,702.00	27.73
Total	.....	2,804,481.90	.....

As showing what would be received for the same wheat, and the profit thereon, including the screenings which now have a market value, we present the following summary for the same samples:

	Amount per bushel.	Amount received.	Per cent profit.
No. 1 northern	$1.3703	$693,371.80	17.12
No. 2 northern	1.3633	654,284.00	19.27
No. 3 northern	1.4097	827,493.90	26.43
No. 4 northern	1.3856	577,795.20	29.13
Rejected	1.3789	96,523.00	31.47
Total	.....	2,849,567.90	.....

The average profit therefore for grades Nos. 1 and 2 northern, excluding the screenings, would be 17.14 per cent. If we include the screenings, then the profit on Nos. 1 and 2 northern would be 18.19 per cent, whereas the profit on the other grades ranges from 26.43 per cent to 31.47 per cent. The loss therefore to the farmer on this basis would be, without the screenings, $91,459.33, or, including the screenings, $136,645.33—this on the report for a single week in one market. The range for other quotations for the several weeks is even far greater than indicated above.

In the same manner we might take the figures for each of the weeks and show the loss to the producer by the present method of grading wheat. If we assume that the crop, in round figures, would amount to 81,500,000, and that the entire crop would grade as shown from the calculated results of the data herewith given, we should have as follows:

	Per cent.
No. 1 northern	24.57
No. 2 northern	23.30
No. 3 northern	28.49
No. 4 northern	20.25
Rejected	3.39

Calculating in the same manner as in the preceding tables, and we have as the value for the 1914 crop, assuming the same per cents, as follows:

	Number of bushels.	Price paid.	Amount paid.
No. 1 northern	20,024,550	$1.17	$23,428,723.50
No. 2 northern	18,989,500	1.143	21,704,998.50
No. 3 northern	23,219,350	1.115	25,998,575.25
No. 4 northern	16,503,750	1.073	17,708,523.75
Rejected	2,762,850	1.048	2,894,466.80
Total	81,500,000	.....	91,735,287.80

In the same manner the amount received for the wheat without screenings and with screenings is shown as follows:

	Without screenings.	Including screenings.
No. 1 northern	$27,253,412.55	$27,439,640.86
No. 2 northern	25,633,926.05	25,880,385.35
No. 3 northern	32,219,170.06	32,732,317.69
No. 4 northern	22,143,081.37	22,867,326.00
Rejected	3,697,751.01	3,837,732.36
Total	110,947,341.04	112,765,262.27

The amount of profit in milling grades Nos. 1 and 2 northern was 17.18 per cent. On the basis as above given, therefore, Nos. 3, 4, and rejected wheat should have netted the producer, excluding the screenings, an additional $3,453,477; or, including the screenings, the additional value for these lower grades above that which was received for the same would be $5,271,398.23. If our figures are correct—and they are based on actual experiments and bear out the claims made by the other investigators already referred to—then the present system of grading wheat would appear to be antiquated; perhaps adequate for a time when mill products sold at from $8 to $10 per ton and the weight per bushel as now graded was first established. The advance in price of mill feed since that time has made no difference in the weight per bushel regarding grade of wheat. Consequently at the present time the method employed in grading and buying wheat does not seem to be as equitable as it was before there were any grades and wheat was just wheat, without any classification.

A large amount of additional data bearing on these questions will be found in part 3 of the twenty-third annual report of the food commissioner for 1912, page 391, tables 43 and 44, where there is shown the average grades for a period of four years.

In the milling of light-weight wheat, of course, there would, in the mills that are short on bolting surface, be reduced somewhat the capacity and a slight allowance might there be required. For the average mill, however, the difference would be very little, and, on the whole, would not amount to 1 per cent of the total cost of raw material. Even admitting that this would amount to as much as 1 per cent, we would still have a balance of $3,000,000 in favor of the light-weight wheat, and, if we consider the screenings, of over $5,000,000. The producer of wheat might well look to a saving of some of this enormous sum not only in the lower grades of wheat but for the screenings, and then to this would be added, were we to carefully consider the question, the cost of transportation from the farm to the terminal market; also, if the feed is to be used upon the farm, the item of freight charges back from the terminal market to the farm.

In this report our purpose has been to present the summarized data with regard to the relative value for the several grades of wheat as found in our experimental work, and to point out apparent discrepancies in the present system of wheat grading. It should also be borne in mind that the commercial mill is able to so blend different types and grades of wheat as to get more favorable end results than could be had in the milling of individual samples of wheat—that is, a rather starchy, soft spring wheat, grading No. 1 northern, would be improved by blending No. 4 and rejected grades of high gluten and large loaf volume, and the quality of all made better thereby.

There are many other problems in connection with wheat studies that need investigation, but lack of funds has prevented our enlarging the scope of work undertaken.

Again, it would be desirable to cooperate with the small mills of North Dakota in a way that might furnish them information with regard to the better utilization of the different grades of wheat produced in the State, thus encouraging the development of the milling industry within the State.

I am indebted to Mr. Sanderson, the miller, for the data gathered and presented in the foregoing article.

VELVET CHAFF AND DURUM WHEATS.

On several occasions we have pointed out the merits of Velvet Chaff and durum wheats as grown in North Dakota. In the past there has been considerable discrimination against these wheats, at times as much as 27 cents per bushel, some of which was due to a lack of knowledge as to how to handle durum in order to secure the best results in milling the same. The fact also that durum has come to be in demand for the manufacture of macaroni and semolina products has insured a better market for the better grades of durum wheats.

It is interesting to note that under date of December 25 the Sharon Reporter quotes the local price for the several wheats on the Sharon market as follows:

No. 1 northern	$1.12
No. 2 northern	1.09
No. 3 northern	1.06
Velvet Chaff	1.12
No. 1 macaroni (durum)	1.28

It is interesting to note that Velvet Chaff, in this quotation, stands the same as No. 1 northern and that Macaroni tops the prices.

At about the same date Minneapolis quoted the price of durum wheat for exportation at $1.45 per bushel.

We are just beginning to realize the real value of the durum wheat, and more and more as we understand its properties or come to manufacture in this country the various high-grade macaroni products we shall find the demand for this class of wheat growing, and North Dakota should be able, from the character of its soil and climate, to produce a superior product.

Even though the local quotation is the same for Velvet Chaff as for No. 1 northern, nevertheless Velvet Chaff wheat is at times still being discriminated against at the terminals. The time will come, however, in the near future, in my judgment, when we shall realize the full value of Velvet Chaff wheat as a crop for the farmer and for flour production.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally arose; and Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17907. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Bridge & Terminal Co., of Muscatine, Iowa, to build a bridge across the Mississippi River; and

H. R. 17765. An act to regulate details of majors in the Ordnance Department.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. PAGE and Mr. LANE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Navy Department.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a bill that I have pending on the woman suffrage question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is such a large number of Democrats on the other side, nine in all, that I shall have to raise the point of no quorum. Of course, I realize that a great many of them are going out on the 4th of March in any event——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota make the point of no quorum?

Mr. NORTON. No; I will not make the point at this time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, before I begin I want to ask unanimous consent to make extensions of my remarks in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use the brief time available to discuss our foreign relations, and particularly our relations with the Far East. At this juncture our foreign relations are perhaps in a more critical condition than they have been for many decades, possibly for more than a century. The importance of those relations is not confined to Europe, the chief theater of war. The most important and critical situation of all is the one in the Far East, as it has developed in the course of this war.

Space is annihilated. The nations of the world must find a way to live together as neighbors. The immediate result of the annihilation of space in the era of militarism has been a rush to arms in five countries. Out of the great war the nations will adjust themselves and find a way by which they can live peaceably as close neighbors.

What applies to nations of the same race, as found close together in Europe, will apply to the great races of the world, and especially to the great yellow race and the great white race. These two great races must find a way by which they can live together peaceably, in harmony with each other and with the world.

China embodies the bulk of the yellow race. In fact, in the Chinese Republic now live approximately one-third of the whole human race. China is the Republic of the yellow race. America is the Republic of the white race. Those two nations have already established between themselves a condition of peculiar friendship and amity. America has interested itself in the welfare of China for various reasons. I will not go over in detail the various disinterested steps that our country has taken which have drawn close the ties that bind us to the great Chinese people. The relations of China to America and to the world are threatened by a violent change of status following the capture by Japan of the German possession or leasehold of Kiaochau and its port of Tsingtau.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman speaks of the annihilation of space with relation to the races. Why does not Japan as the ally of England take part with their land forces in the present European war if space has been annihilated?

Mr. HOBSON. Well, I do not think it is a question of space which keeps her from taking part, because there are troops taking part in the European war that have come from longer distances than would be required for the Japanese troops.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. I yield.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. As I understand, the alliance between England and Japan is that Japan is not supposed to take any stock in the war only as an adversary of Great Britain might affect Japan in the Far East. In other words, Japanese belligerency is confined to the Occident, and Japan is under no obligation to take stock in the war in Europe.

Mr. HOBSON. Well, my understanding is that the articles of alliance which were made public prescribe military cooperation in the regions of the Far East, but I understand Japan has announced her readiness to send troops to Europe under the obligations of the treaty. Now, this change of status in China by the substitution of Japan for Germany has suddenly opened up the whole far eastern question in a form to affect the very life of the Republic of China, and involves the relations of America to China, and ultimately the relations of the white race and the yellow race.

In 1899 and in 1900 the United States entered into negotiations and exchanged notes with the various nations of the world with a view to coming to a common ground in their attitude toward China. The object was clearly stated by Secretary Hay in a communication to the Chinese Government dated July 3, 1900, as follows:

The policy of the Government of the United States is to seek a solution which may bring about permanent safety and peace to China, preserve Chinese territorial and administrative entity, protect all rights guaranteed to friendly powers by treaty and international law, and safeguard for the world the principle of equal and impartial trade with all ports of the Chinese Empire.

Our Government's efforts were crowned with peculiar success. Definite written agreements were entered into with all the great nations to maintain the open-door policy in China and to respect the integrity and sovereignty of that Empire, it being then an Empire. I will not recite the correspondence here, but for purposes of reference I will put it in my remarks as an extension. The first Government to confirm those articles was Great Britain, then France, Russia was next, and then came Japan, followed by Italy, then Germany. All agreed with our Secretary of State in his attitude and his recommendations. In the case of Japan it is a peculiarly happy note of confirmation, and substantially to this effect:

Viscount Aoki to Mr. Buck: I have the happy duty of assuring your excellency that the Imperial Government will have no hesitation to give their assent to so just and fair a proposal of the United States, provided that all the other powers concerned shall accept the same.

When all the great nations had pledged their acceptance there was established the most unanimous part of international law thus far adopted by the civilized nations of the world, the just and humane principle or doctrine known as the open-door policy in China, which in principle has the same foundation as the other great American policy, the Monroe doctrine, based on respect for the rights of weak peoples and the establishment of equal opportunity for trade.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. HOBSON. I am quoting from treaties, conventions, international acts, protocols, and so forth, between United States and other powers, volume 1, Malloy. I will put these in my remarks as an extension.

Now, in 1908 our Government exchanged an identical note with the Government of Japan making more binding the open-door policy. This note had five provisos. It was exchanged between the two on November 30, 1908.

1. It is the wish of the two Governments to encourage the free and peaceful development of their commerce on the Pacific Ocean.
2. The policy of both Governments, uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies, is directed to the maintenance of the existing status quo in the region above mentioned and to the defense of the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.
3. They are accordingly firmly resolved reciprocally to respect the territorial possessions belonging to each other in said region.
4. They are also determined to preserve the common interest of all powers in China by supporting by all pacific means at their disposal the independence and integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry of all nations in that Empire.
5. Should any event occur threatening the status quo as above described or the principle of equal opportunity as above defined, it remains for the two Governments to communicate with each other in order to arrive at an understanding as to what measures they may consider it useful to take.

There could be no agreement more specific, more solemn, more binding or sacred to the good faith of the two Governments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Could I have an extension? A good deal of time has been taken by asking me questions.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no more time to yield.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I yield to the gentleman five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. In 1858 the treaty of amity and commerce was negotiated with China, and the first article of the treaty reads as follows:

There shall be, as there have always been, peace and friendship between the United States of America and the Ta Tsing Empire, and between their people, respectively. They shall not insult or oppress each other for any trifling cause, so as to produce an estrangement between them, and if any other nation should act unjustly or oppressively the United States will exert their good offices, on being informed of the case, to bring about an amicable arrangement of the question, thus showing their friendly feelings.

The relationship of our Government to the Chinese Government as established by this article is peculiar and intimate—that of an elder brother holding himself always ready to help in time of trouble. The reliance that the Chinese Government places in us is shown in the following:

CHINESE RELIANCE ON UNITED STATES—CHINESE GOVERNMENT TO UNITED STATES MINISTER AFTER BOXER TROUBLES.

Now China, driven by the irresistible course of events, has unfortunately incurred well-nigh universal indignation. For settling the present difficulty China places special reliance in the United States. We address this message to your excellency in all sincerity and candidness, with the hope that your excellency will devise measures and take the initiative in bringing about a concert of the powers for the restoration of order and peace.

It was perfectly natural for our Government, acting under this obligation and under the obligation of section 5 of the joint note with Japan cited above, to ask for a statement of intentions when the Japanese proceeded to the siege of Kiaochow. Our Government was informed, so the papers stated, that the purpose of the Japanese Government was simply to remove Germany as an element of discord from the Far East, and that the intention was to restore Kiaochow and Tsingtau to the Chinese Government.

I will not here review in detail what has happened since the fall of Tsingtau, though I will put in my remarks as an extension various newspaper chronicles. Step by step a grave crisis has been created. The Chinese Government requested the Japanese Government, when the Germans had been removed, to withdraw her troops, abolishing the war zone, since no war further existed. The Japanese Government responded by making certain demands upon the Chinese Government—21 in number. Secrecy as to their nature was insisted upon by the Japanese Government, but it soon became known that Japan had very serious designs upon the sovereignty of China. The Chinese Government was not permitted to give out officially what these demands were, but the Japanese Government proceeded to give out official information that was incomplete, that omitted the very demands that struck at the integrity and sovereignty of China as a whole, such as the demand that the Chinese Government employ Japanese advisers for conducting administrative, financial, and military affairs, and the demand that the Chinese Government employ Japanese for policing China. The Japanese information likewise omitted demands striking at the principle of the open door, such as the demand for exclusive concessions in the Yangtze Valley and the heart of China.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to get the truth in this matter, I introduced a resolution on the 10th day of February, in line with the treaty obligation our country owes China, as pointed out here, and carrying out the spirit of section 5 of our specific agreement with Japan to discuss such questions together. The resolution called on the State Department to supply Congress with the correspondence and the facts and the information relating to these demands that are reported to have been made on the Chinese Government.

Mr. MURDOCK. Was that resolution privileged?

Mr. HOBSON. The resolution is privileged. I requested the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House to give me a hearing and to act upon this within the seven-day limit prescribed by the rules of the House. My impression was that the chairman of that committee at first was very amiably inclined to grant my reasonable request for a hearing and to take the action within the appointed time. I am informed that afterwards he conferred with the State Department and at its instance decided to ignore the regular procedure and to deny my request for a hearing and to cover up the whole question as far as practicable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have undertaken at various times on the floor of this House to speak about conditions in the Far East. Mr. Chairman, the hiding of the truth can serve no good purpose, particularly in a republic. The people are entitled to know the truth about this question. If the demands in question are just and do not conflict with the principle of the open-door policy and do not seriously affect the status quo, then there can be no objection to this information being made public. If my demand is unjust and would invade the rights of American citizens in violating the principle of the open door and threatening the sovereignty of China, then not only our Government but our people are entitled as a right to the truth and the whole truth. The future course of China, the future course of the world, may depend upon America's doing her full duty in this crisis. A definite expression of our position would tend to relieve the situation and might avert action by them that could only lead ultimately to war. I have therefore to-day introduced a second resolution, citing our peculiar responsibility for the existence of the open-door policy in the Far East, and stating that we would view with disfavor the overthrow by any nation of the status quo during the period of the war that is distracting so many of the nations we prevailed upon to establish the open door, and stating in simple terms our adherence to the principle of the open-door policy in the Far East and that we would view with grave concern, as an unfriendly act, any offensive movement striking at the integrity and sovereignty of China.

Further on, under the five-minute rule, I will add to my remarks.

[Mr. HOBSON'S address under the five-minute rule is as follows:]

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to pursue further the question of foreign relations and the crisis in the Far East.

I lived in China for about a year and a half. On an average more than 1,000 Chinese worked for me during that period. We were rebuilding Spanish gunboats sunk at Manila and brought over to China to be reconstructed. This residence in China and close contact with its people led me to gain an intimate knowledge of Chinese character. I was very deeply impressed and returned with a profound and even affectionate regard for China and things Chinese. All my observations and investigations have lead me to conclude with Secretary John Hay "that the key to the world's politics for the next five centuries is China." My colleagues can imagine the solicitude I felt in reading the following extract from an article by Count Okuma, prime minister of Japan, which forecasts the ruling of China by Japan:

We must be careful to keep this point in mind and prepare ourselves with power to meet the struggle for existence.

The people who can not meet this struggle will be crushed. Some one may say that even though a country fall, the people of the country may survive. But a race whose country has fallen, being unable to stand in the struggle for existence, is bound to be oppressed by other races and their increase stopped. If one can not earn a competence, he can not marry, and human increase will cease. In that way an unseen human slaughter is perpetuated.

Thus those who are superior will govern those who are inferior. I believe within two or three centuries the world will have a few great governing countries, and others will be governed by them, will pay homage to the mighty. In other words, about four or five great countries, each having a population of 500,000,000 and an enormous territory, will be developed, and the other countries will be attached to these great ones. For instance. England, Russia, Germany, and France may be such countries. There may be one or two other independent countries.

In that event, woe to the nations which are governed. We should from now on prepare ourselves to become a governing nation, not a nation governed.

The estimated average wage throughout the Chinese Empire is about 10 cents for a hard working man, perhaps a little less. I do not hesitate to say that if the Chinese were working in the open markets of the world, according to the world's scale, that this would increase fivefold and even tenfold. The foreign commerce of China now averages less than a dollar per capita. This would increase fivefold and tenfold, with a correspondingly tremendous increase in the purchasing capacity of that people.

Now, about one-third of the human race live in China—they have about them, where they live, the richest natural resources yet undeveloped in all the world. There is no such combination elsewhere on the face of the earth. Most of the undeveloped lands of the earth elsewhere have no industrial population ready to supply the labor for development. China has. I can not help foreseeing that the great commerce of the world, the great course of the world's civilization, is going to swing around the Pacific Ocean. As important as are the events in Europe now occurring, the great futures for our children and our children's children and the human race are to be determined around the great Pacific Ocean.

It so happens that in the fullness of time America was placed in the Far East without ever having done violence to any far-eastern country. We fell heir to the responsibilities of the Philippine Islands, and yet never committed violence against them. We have never imposed opium on China; we never seized the territory of China nor of any weak people either on the Eastern or the Western Hemisphere. We stand to-day with clean hands and pure hearts on the threshhold of this vast myriad of human beings, with all their stupendous possibilities of industrial development and capacity to enrich the world's commerce beyond the dreams of men to-day. I believe in destiny, because I believe in God. America stands innately for the principle of justice to the weak and equal opportunities between all—upon these foundations must be built the future peace of the world and the cause of civilization. In the march of world events America has become responsible for these principles in Atlantic and Pacific alike, under the Monroe doctrine in America and the open door in China.

Now, affairs in the Far East have reached a crisis. If a small military nation is to change the peaceful evolution of the great Chinese Republic, without question it will affect the generations unborn of all nations. In taking the stand I do, Mr. Chairman, I know that I am promoting the real cause of enduring peace. It is fundamental to say that when a people are just, as ours are, when they are disinterested and seek no selfish advantage anywhere, they ought not to be afraid of the truth, and where treaty rights give them a standing and duty calls, they ought not to be afraid to enunciate their adherence to the principles of right and justice, of humanity and sympathy, because some military power might not like it. It would be the greatest larceny, the greatest tragedy in the life history of the human species, for any military monarchy, through the power of the sword, against the rights of all other nations, and trampling upon the rights of the weak, to usurp the sovereignty of the Chinese Republic. [Applause.]

The American Nation is in honor bound, as well as bound by the dictates of self-interest, to prevent any such world tragedy. [Applause.]

[From the Washington Post, Wednesday, Feb. 10, 1915.]

JAPAN SCHEMES TO SEIZE ALL CHINA—REPUBLIC IS TO BE TAKEN, REGARDLESS OF UNITED STATES, HOBSON SAYS—TELLS HOUSE OF INTRIGUES—WANTS CONGRESS TO GET DEMANDS ALREADY MADE OF MIKADO—SEES TIME NOW FOR ACTION—ALABAMA REPRESENTATIVE DECLARES GRADUAL SUPPRESSION OF COUNTRY, FOR WHOSE INTEGRITY THIS NATION HAS GIVEN ITS PLEDGE, IS GOING ON BEHIND SCREEN OF EUROPEAN WAR—INTRODUCES RESOLUTION CALLING ON STATE DEPARTMENT TO FURNISH SERIES OF 21 DEMANDS MADE SINCE BOMBARDMENT OF TSINGTAU—CONTENDS JAPAN IS CAPITALIZING THE REWARD FOR HER ASSISTANCE TO ALLIES—JAPAN KNOWS OF HELPLESSNESS OF NATIONS TO PREVENT SEIZURE.

The positive assertion that Japan has laid plans to take over China by force, and that this is to be done with the silent acquiescence if not the open sanction of Great Britain and with an utter disregard for the open-door policy with respect to China prevailing among the powers, was made last night by Representative RICHMOND PEARSON HOBSON, of Alabama, who recited a series of significant international events in support of his statements.

TAKING ADVANTAGE OF WAR.

Mr. HOBSON declared it was his opinion that Japan, in starting upon this enterprise now, is taking advantage of the general calamity in Europe, and that, because of the war conditions, America stands as the only obstacle in the way of the accomplishment of the plan. Japan, according to Mr. HOBSON'S well-known views, is not greatly concerned about American opposition, being in the position rather of inviting war with this country than of avoiding it.

FORESEES DRASTIC SOVEREIGNTY.

The sovereignty which Japan would exercise over China, the Alabama student of international affairs said, will be more drastic in character than that exercised over India by Great Britain. It would not only police the country, but it would control its development and direct its educational and social advancement, if there could be such a thing under an arrangement of this character.

Mr. HOBSON talked earnestly and deliberately, making his statements with a deep conviction that he was in possession of knowledge and deductions of which the American people should be apprised for their own good and protection. Prepared or not prepared for war, it was his opinion that the United States, as the one great Nation whose hands are untied by the struggle in Europe, should not sit with hands folded and without protest while a single nation takes it upon itself to wipe out treaty obligations which are solemn pledges to keep inviolate the integrity of China.

HE INTRODUCES RESOLUTION.

During the day Mr. HOBSON introduced in the House a resolution calling upon the State Department to furnish Congress with whatever information the department has in its possession, officially or unofficially, with respect to a series of demands recently made upon the Chinese Government by Japan. There are 21 of these demands, and Mr. HOBSON is certain that if they are made public they will reveal the purposes of Japan.

The resolution follows:

"Whereas recent press dispatches have announced that 21 demands have been made upon the Chinese Government by a foreign Government: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of State is requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the House of Representatives any information in the possession of the State Department from official or unofficial sources relating to any recent demands, unusual between free Governments, that may have been made upon the Chinese Government by any other Government, and any similar information as to whether any recent demands that may have been made upon the Chinese Government by another Government, if enforced, would imperil the 'open-door' policy or the integrity and sovereignty of China."

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, before which Mr. HOBSON will appear as soon as possible in an effort to get a favorable report.

Reports to the State Department from Tokyo and Peking so far have been so meager that officials say they have been unable to determine the exact nature of Japan's demands.

Mr. Hobson last night declared that these demands constitute the most serious event of the entire war, so far as the United States is concerned, and that they are, in fact, of more significance than all the other happenings in Europe combined.

"I have noticed with great concern," said Mr. Hobson, "a series of press dispatches from Tokio foreshadowing a very serious change in the relations of China to America and all other countries. The first dispatch stated in effect that when the fighting around Kiauchau was all over and the Chinese Government pronounced that the war zone about Kiauchau had been abolished, the Japanese Government notified the Chinese Government that its proclamation was regarded by Japan as an unfriendly act.

APPEARED VERY SINGULAR.

"Since the fighting was over and no more war operations were being executed, it appeared on the face of it very singular that the cessation of the war zone reservation by China could possibly have given any just cause of complaint by Japan or any other country.

"The next dispatch announced briefly that the Japanese Government had entered into negotiations with the Chinese Government, with a view to determining the future relations between the two Governments, and also 'with a view to regulating the future development of China.' The latter part of this dispatch in its very vagueness was ominous, to say the least, as it is difficult to see how one Government can undertake to regulate the internal affairs of another free Government.

ACQUIESCENCE OF GREAT BRITAIN.

"The next dispatch announced that Japan had the support, or at least the acquiescence, of Great Britain, and that, by inference, no other nation of Europe would take exception.

"This clearly indicated that Japan is taking advantage of the occupation of the European nations, and is capitalizing the reward for her assistance to the allies, which later was a practical free hand in China, as far as the nations of Europe are concerned.

"The next dispatch announced that Japan had made 21 distinct, specific demands on China, the substance of which were being kept a secret. The next dispatch stated in effect that the Chinese Government, in spite of the menacing attitude of Japan, was opposing and resisting all attempts to encroach upon her sovereignty. The last dispatch announced that Japan has threatened to use armed forces unless China complies with her demands, these armed forces being already on the mainland of China ready for action.

CAN BE NO MISTAKE, HE SAYS.

"There can be no mistaking what this means. Japan is proceeding substantially to annex China and suppress that country's independence and sovereignty, and Japan is doing this at the point of the bayonet.

"This is in sinister contrast with the first announcement of Japan in undertaking the siege of Kiauchau to respect the integrity of China and restore Kiauchau to the Chinese Government.

"As I recall, our American Government made prompt inquiries of Japan as to her intentions in this matter and received the reply just referred to. The recent developments, which I have just cited, of course must command the most serious consideration not only from our own Government but from every patriotic citizen and every man who loves humanity and respects the rights of the weak against the encroachments of the unjust strong.

QUESTION "TANGIBLE AND OBVIOUS."

"The question is not academic. It is concrete, tangible, and obvious. America, with the other great nations, including Japan, has entered into solemn agreement under the leadership of the late John Hay, then Secretary of State, to respect the integrity of China and to uphold the principle of the open-door policy in China, under which all would engage in commerce on an equal footing.

"In addition to this, America has a solemn treaty compact with China, assuring to us the privileges of 'the most-favored nation.' What would become of our rights and other interests if Japanese sovereignty were extended over the entire Chinese Nation can be readily seen from what became of our rights in southern Manchuria when Japan took over that territory in China.

SEES TREATY RIGHTS IN DANGER.

"The question is best put to America and Americans alone as to whether our treaty rights with China are to be practically destroyed by an outside power. It is a question of whether the open-door policy is to be destroyed forever, a question of whether America and the other nations are to have a fair and equal chance in the competition for commerce on the Pacific, or whether a military monarchy through the use of might and brute force shall be allowed to take advantage of the general calamity in Europe to overthrow the rights of all other nations, to destroy the latest and most wonderful Republic in the world, and change the lives and destinies of one-third, and that one-third the most peaceful third of the human race.

"The least that America can do at this juncture is without delay to find out what these specific 21 demands are and therefrom what are the real purposes of Japan.

"Not only is our Government entitled to this information, but Congress and the American people are entitled to it."

JAPAN'S DEMANDS ON CHINA DRASTIC—BREAK ALLIANCE WITH ENGLAND, SAY BRITISH PAPERS—RELATIONS ARE STRAINED—SPECIAL RIGHTS CLAIMED BY TOKYO FROM ORIENTAL REPUBLIC—CURB FOREIGN CONCESSIONS—CHINA MUST EMPLOY JAPANESE IN HIGH OFFICIAL POSITIONS IN ARMY, POLICE, AND FINANCIAL DEPARTMENTS, ACCORDING TO ONE VERSION OF THE DEMANDS—CAN CALL ONLY UPON TOKYO TO PRESERVE HER INTEGRITY—BRITISH "SPHERE OF INFLUENCE" MENACED—VIOLENT ATTACKS MADE ON GREAT BRITAIN BY NIPPON PRESS—ENGLISH AID IN CAMPAIGN AGAINST TSINGTAU BITTERLY RESENTED.

PEKING, February 11.

It has been learned from high Chinese authorities that the following, although it lacks important details—for instance, the number of Japanese officials to be employed—is substantially the body of the Japanese Government's demands on China:

JAPANESE DEMANDS.

No section of China's coast or any island off the coast hereafter shall be ceded or leased to another power.

China must employ Japanese in high official positions in the army, police, and financial departments.

China may call upon Japan alone for the preservation of her integrity.

No foreigners except Japanese may be employed in the arsenals.

At least half of the arms and ammunition for China hereafter must be purchased from Japan.

Japan will establish an arsenal in China.

China must grant to Japan the same privileges as other nations for the establishment of schools, churches, hospitals, and missions, and for the purchase of the lands for them.

ENTERS BRITISH SPHERE.

In the Yangtse Valley, which the British have formerly considered their sphere of influence, Japan requires joint control with the Chinese of the Hanyang iron works, the Tayeh mines, and the Ping-Hsian collieries.

China may grant no competing concessions to other foreigners.

Railway concessions are demanded from Nanchang to Chauchaufu, from Nanchang to Kukiang, from Nanchang to Wuchang, and from Nanchang to Hangchow.

In Fukien Province, to which the Japanese lay special claim because of its proximity to the Japanese island of Formosa, the Japanese require the exclusion of other foreigners from future railway, mining, and dock building concessions, unless by Japanese consent.

DEMAND SPECIAL RIGHT.

In the Province of Shantung, besides the transfer of all the German rights, the Japanese demand special concessions, including a railway from the present line to the coast.

In inner Mongolia the exclusion of other foreigners from future mining or railway rights, except with Japan's consent, is demanded.

In Manchuria the extension of the present railway and territorial leases to 99 years is requested.

In both Mongolia and Manchuria the demand is made for the privilege of immigration and farming, as well as trading with the population, and the rights of settlement and land ownership.

All the railways demanded must be under Japanese and not Chinese control.

SEE MENACE TO ENGLAND.

The British newspapers published in the Far East suggest that Japan by her demands is breaking the alliance with Great Britain, while Japanese newspapers criticize Great Britain, in some cases violently, accusing her of having profited by the alliance and of being selfish in Japan's natural sphere.

It is stated that the relations of the allies became strained when the Japanese entered the war and the British sent 1,500 men to participate in the siege of the German fortress of Tsingtau, which some of the Japanese publications are reported to have considered not assistance, but interference.

CHINA ANSWERS JAPAN—CONTENTS OF REPLY TO TOKYO'S DEMANDS KEPT SECRET—GRAVE DANGER SEEN BY UNITED STATES—REPORTED THAT GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS BELIEVE NIPPON IS ESTABLISHING ITS RULE IN NEW TERRITORY OF YUAN SHI KAI—SENATOR HITCHCOCK DECLARES UNITED STATES SHOULD PROTEST.

PEKING, CHINA, February 13.

The Chinese Government yesterday delivered to the Japanese legation at Peking a written reply to the demands recently made by Japan on China.

The contents of the Chinese answer have not been divulged. It is the general belief in Peking, however, that the reply reiterates China's willingness to discuss only 12 of the 21 demands contained in the Japanese notes.

UNITED STATES OFFICIALS ANXIOUS.

NEW YORK, February 13.

A Washington dispatch to the American says:

"Officials at the State Department are more concerned than their official obligations will allow them to admit over the persistence of reports, even from official sources, that Japan is establishing herself dangerously and perhaps permanently in new territory in China.

"M. Reinsch, United States minister at Peking, has made several reports within the last week, dealing with the accounts of the specific demands by Japan on China.

HITCHCOCK URGES PROTEST.

"Members of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate feel that the pending questions between this country and the Governments of Great Britain and Germany are not more serious for the United States than the intentions of Japan toward China.

"Senator HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, Democratic member of the committee, said to-day:

"'It looks as if Japan has seen her opportunity and intends to take advantage of it.

"'I think the United States ought to protest against any steps by Japan looking toward the acquisition of control of China, but I don't think it will accomplish anything. I would do it simply to keep the record clean.

"'Secretary Bryan has said there never will be war while he is in office, which means that no matter how great the wrong he will not do anything to right it; so, under the circumstances, our protest would have little weight.

AFTER CLOSE OF THE WAR.

"'What will happen at the close of the war? England, France, and Germany will be impoverished, while Russia will be in splendid condition owing to her vast resources, and Japan will be as well off as ever. Japan already practically controls the Pacific Ocean, certainly the Asiatic coast, and at the end of the war she will be firmly established on the mainland. Russia will be extended very greatly in the direction of Constantinople.'

"Another prominent member of the committee, a Republican, who is regarded as one of the best statesmen in the country, admitted the gravity of the situation.

"One member of the committee said he had been told by a high Japanese official that the two possible sources of friction between the United States and Japan were the latter's aspirations in Manchuria and the treatment of Japanese in California. This was an admission that Japan has her mind on acquiring a foothold on the mainland of China."

JAPAN PRESSES CHINA—INSISTS ON ACCEPTANCE OF TOTAL DEMANDS MADE RECENTLY—PEKING REFUSES TO YIELD—YUAN'S MINISTER AT TOKYO TOLD THAT FULL COMPLIANCE WILL BE REQUIRED—JAPANESE CONSTRUCTING BARRACKS ALONG RAILWAY LEADING FROM TSINGTAU TO CAPITAL OF SHANTUNG.

PEKING, February 14.

The Chinese minister at Tokyo to-day reported to his Government that the Japanese foreign minister, Baron Takaki Kato, had declared that Japan must insist on the acceptance of the total demands recently made in the Japanese note to China. At the Chinese foreign office, however, it was said to be the intention of the Peking Government to continue in its refusal to acquiesce in the Japanese demands.

JAPAN BUILDING BARRACKS.

WEIHSIEN, SHANTUNG, CHINA, February 14.

Wooden barracks are being constructed by the Japanese at every railway station, except the smallest, along the line between Weihsien and Tsinan. Many of the buildings are nearing completion.

ON RAILWAY TO TSINGTAU.

Tsinan is the capital of the Chinese Province of Shantung, and is connected by rail through Weihsien with Tsingtau, the port of the Kiauchau concession recently surrendered by the Germans to the Japanese troops. The distance by rail between Tsingtau and Tsinan is approximately 225 miles.

The treaty records are as follows:

OPEN-DOOR POLICY IN CHINA.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, TRANSMITTING A REPORT FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE, WITH COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH VARIOUS FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS CONCERNING AMERICAN COMMERCIAL RIGHTS IN CHINA.

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of March 24, 1900, reading as follows:

"Whereas the commercial community of the United States is deeply interested in ascertaining the conditions which are to govern trade in such parts of the Chinese Empire as are claimed by various foreign powers to be within their 'areas of interest'; and

"Whereas bills are now pending before both Houses of Congress for the dispatch of a mission to China to study its economic conditions: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public service, such correspondence as may have passed between the Department of State and various foreign Governments concerning the maintenance of the 'open-door' policy in China,"

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 27, 1900.

Particulier.] AFFAIRES ETRANGÈRES.

[Received at United States embassy at Paris December 16, 1899.]

MON CHER AMBASSADEUR: Je trouve votre mot en rentrant. Des déclarations que j'ai apportées à la tribune de la Chambre le 24 Novembre dernier et que j'ai eu depuis l'occasion de vous rappeler, se dégage clairement le sentiment du Gouvernement de la République; il désire dans toute la Chine, et, sous la réserve toute naturelle que toutes les puissances intéressées affirmeront leur volonté d'agir de même, il est prêt à appliquer dans les territoires qui sont cédés à bail, un traitement égal pour les citoyens et sujets de toutes les nations, notamment en ce qui concerne les taxes douanières et de navigation ainsi que les tarifs de transport par chemins de fer.

Je vous prie, mon cher Ambassadeur, d'agréer avec la nouvelle expression de mes sentiments dévoués l'assurance de ma plus haute considération.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

MY DEAR AMBASSADOR: I find your note awaiting me on my return. The declarations which I made in the Chamber on the 24th of November last, and which I have had occasion to recall to you since then, show clearly the sentiments of the Government of the Republic. It desires throughout the whole of China and, with the quite natural reservation that all the powers interested give an assurance of their willingness to act likewise, is ready to apply in the territories which are leased to it, equal treatment to the citizens and subjects of all nations, especially in the matters of customs duties and navigation dues, as well as transportation tariffs on railways.

I beg you, my dear ambassador, to accept, etc.,

GERMANY.

(Mr. Hay to Mr. White.)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 6, 1899.

SIR: At the time when the Government of the United States was informed by that of Germany that it had leased from His Majesty the Emperor of China the port of Kiao-chao and the adjacent territory in the Province of Shantung assurances were given to the ambassador of the United States at Berlin by the Imperial German minister for foreign affairs that the rights and privileges insured by treaties with China to citizens of the United States would not thereby suffer or be in anywise impaired within the area over which Germany had thus obtained control.

More recently, however, the British Government recognized by a formal agreement with Germany the exclusive right of the latter country to enjoy in said leased area and the contiguous "sphere of influence or interest" certain privileges, more especially those relating to railroads and mining enterprises; but, as the exact nature and extent of the rights thus recognized have not been clearly defined, it is possible that serious conflicts of interest may at any time arise, not only between British and German subjects within said area, but that the interests of our citizens may also be jeopardized thereby.

Earnestly desirous to remove any cause of irritation and to insure at the same time to the commerce of all nations in China the undoubted benefits which should accrue from a formal recognition by the various powers claiming "spheres of interest" that they shall enjoy perfect equality of treatment for their commerce and navigation within such "spheres," the Government of the United States would be pleased to see His German Majesty's Government give formal assurances and lend its cooperation in securing like assurances from the other interested powers that each within its respective sphere of whatever influence—

First. Will in no way interfere with any treaty port or any vested interest within any so-called "sphere of interest" or leased territory it may have in China.

Second. That the Chinese treaty tariff of the time being shall apply to all merchandise landed or shipped to al such ports as are within said "sphere of interest" (unless they be "free ports"), no matter to what nationality it may belong, and that duties so leviable shall be collected by the Chinese Government.

Third. That it will levy no higher harbor dues on vessels of another nationality frequenting any port in such "sphere" than shall be levied on vessels of its own nationality, and no higher railroad charges over lines built, controlled, or operated within its "sphere" on merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of other nationalities transported through such "sphere" than shall be levied on similar merchandise belonging to its own nationals transported over equal distances.

The liberal policy pursued by his Imperial German Majesty in declaring Kiao-chao a free port and in aiding the Chinese Government in the establishment there of a customhouse are so clearly in line with the proposition which this Government is anxious to see recognized that it entertains the strongest hope that Germany will give its acceptance and hearty support.

The recent ukase of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia declaring the port of Ta-lien-wan open during the whole of the lease under which it is held from China to the merchant ships of all nations, coupled with the categorical assurances made to this Government by His Imperial Majesty's representative at this capital at the time, and since repeated to me by the present Russian ambassador, seem to insure the support of the Emperor to the proposed measure. Our ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburg has, in consequence, been instructed to submit it to the Russian Government and to request their early consideration of it. A copy of my instruction on the subject to Mr. Tower is herewith inclosed for your confidential information.

The commercial interests of Great Britain and Japan will be so clearly served by the desired declaration of intentions, and the views of the Governments of these countries as to the desirability of the adoption of measures insuring the benefits of equality of treatment of all foreign trade throughout China are so similar to those entertained by the United States, that their acceptance of the propositions herein outlined and their cooperation in advocating their adoption by the other powers can be confidently expected. I inclose herewith copy of the instruction which I have sent to Mr. Choate on the subject.

In view of the present favorable conditions, you are instructed to submit the above considerations to His Imperial German Majesty's minister for foreign affairs, and to request his early consideration of the subject.

Copy of this instruction is sent to our ambassadors at London and at St. Petersburg for their information.

I have, etc., JOHN HAY.

EMBASSY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Berlin, December 4, 1899.

I have just had a conversation with secretary of state for foreign affairs, who stated that the politics of Germany in the extreme Orient are de facto the politics of the open door, and Germany proposes to maintain this principle in the future. Germany does not wish the question to become the subject of controversy between the different powers engaged in China. She thinks it would be advantageous for the United States Government to confer with other European Governments having interests in China. If the other cabinets adhere to the proposal of the United States Government Germany will raise no objection, and Germany is willing to have the Government of the United States inform these other cabinets that no difficulty will come from her if the other cabinets agree.

AUSWÄRTIGES AMT,
Berlin, den 19 Februar, 1900.

HERR BOTSCHAFTER: Eure Excellenz hatten mir mittelst eines am 24. v. M. hier übergebenen Memorandums mitgetheilt, dass die Regierung der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika von allen Mächten, an welche eine gleiche Anfrage wie in Eurer Excellenz Schreiben vom 26. September v. J., betreffend die Politik der offenen Thür in China, ergangen war, zufriedenstellende schriftliche Antworten erhalten habe. Eure Excellenz hatten unter Hinweis hierauf den Wunsch ausgedrückt, dass nunmhr auch die Kaiserliche Regierung ihre Antwort in schriftlicher Form ertheilen möge.

Indem ich diesen Wunsche gern entspreche, beehre ich mich in Wiederholung bereits mündlich ertheilter Aufschlüsse Folgendes zu Eurer Excellenz Kenntniss zu bringen: Wie die Regierung der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika nach Eurer Excellenz erwähntem Schreiben vom 26. September v. J. anerkannt, hat die Kaiserliche Regierung in ihrem chinesischen Besitz den Grundsatz völliger Gleichbehandlung aller Nationen in Bezug auf Handel, Schiff fahrt und Verkehr von Anfang an nicht allein aufgestellt, sondern auch praktisch im weitesten Umfange durchgeführt. Die Kaiserliche Regierung hegt nicht die Absicht von diesem Grundsatz, welche jede wirthschaftliche Benachtheiligung oder Zurücksetzung von Angehörigen der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika von vornherein ausschliesst, in Zukunft abzugehen, so lange sie nicht durch abweichendes Verhalten anderer Regierungen aus Reciprocitätsrücksichten hierzu genöthigt werden sollte. Wenn daher die übrigen, an der wirthschaftlichen Erschliessung des chinesischen Reichs interessirten Mächte sich zur Durchführung gleicher Grundsätze bekennen wollen, so kann dies der Kaiserlichen Regierung nur erwünscht sein und sie wird in diesem Falle auf Wunsch ihrerseits gern bereit sein, sich mit den Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika und den übrigen Mächten an einer in diesem Sinne zu treffenden Vereinbarung zu betheiligen, durch welche wechselseitig die gleichen Rechte gewährt werden.

Ich benutze die Gelegenheit um Eurer Excellenz die Versicherung meiner ausgezeichnetsten Hochachtung zu erneuern.

FOREIGN OFFICE,
Berlin, February 19, 1900.

Mr. AMBASSADOR: Your excellency informed me, in a memorandum presented on the 24th of last month, that the Government of the United States of America had received satisfactory written replies from all the powers to which an inquiry had been addressed similar to that contained in your excellency's note of September 26 last, in regard to the policy of the open door in China. While referring to this your excellency thereupon expressed the wish that the Imperial Government would now also give its answer in writing.

Gladly complying with this wish, I have the honor to inform your excellency, repeating the statements already made verbally, as follows: As recognized by the Government of the United States of America, according to your excellency's note referred to above, the Imperial Government has from the beginning not only asserted but also practically carried out to the fullest extent in its Chinese possessions absolute equality of treatment of all nations with regard to trade, navigation, and commerce. The Imperial Government entertains no thought of departing in the future from this principle, which at once excludes any prejudicial or disadvantageous commercial treatment of the citizens of the United States of America, so long as it is not forced to do so, on account of considerations of reciprocity, by a divergence from it by other Governments. If, therefore, the other powers interested in the industrial development of the Chinese Empire are willing to recognize the same principles, this can only be desired by the Imperial Government, which in this case, upon being requested, will gladly be ready to participate with the United States of America and the other powers in an agreement made upon these lines, by which the same rights are reciprocally secured.

I avail myself, etc.,

BÜLOW.

GREAT BRITAIN.

(Mr. Choate to Lord Salisbury.)

EMBASSY OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, September 22, 1899.

MY LORD: I am instructed by the Secretary of State to present to your lordship a matter which the President regards as of great and equal importance to Great Britain and the United States—in the maintenance of trade and commerce in the East, in which the interest of the two nations differs, not in character, but in degree only—and to ask for action on the part of Her Majesty's Government which the President conceives to be in exact accord with its uniformly declared policy and traditions, and which will greatly promote the welfare of commerce.

He understands it to be the settled policy and purpose of Great Britain not to use any privileges which may be granted to it in China as a means of excluding any commercial rivals, and that freedom of trade for it in that Empire means freedom of trade for all the world alike. Her Majesty's Government, while conceding by formal agreements with Germany and Russia the possession of "spheres of influence or interest" in China in which they are to enjoy especial rights and privileges, particularly in respect to railroads and mining enterprises, has at the same time sought to maintain what is commonly called the "open-door" policy, to secure to the commerce and navigation of all nations equality of treatment within such "spheres." The maintenance of this policy is alike urgently demanded by the commercial communities of our two nations, as it is justly held by them to be the only one which will improve existing conditions, enable them to maintain their positions in the markets of China, and extend their future operations.

While the Government of the United States will in no way commit itself to any recognition of the exclusive rights of any power within or control over any portion of the Chinese Empire, under such agreements as have been recently made, it can not conceal its apprehensions that there is danger of complications arising between the treaty powers which may imperil the rights insured to the United States by its treaties with China.

It is the sincere desire of my Government that the interests of its citizens may not be prejudiced through exclusive treatment by any of the controlling powers within their respective "spheres of interests" in China, and it hopes to retain there an open market for all the world's commerce, remove dangerous sources of international irritation, and thereby hasten united action of the powers at Pekin to promote administrative reforms so greatly needed for strengthening the Imperial Government and maintaining the integrity of China, in which it believes the whole Western World is alike concerned. It believes that such a result may be greatly aided and advanced by declarations by the various powers claiming "spheres of interest" in China as to their intentions in regard to the treatment of foreign trade and commerce therein, and that the present is a very favorable moment for informing Her Majesty's Government of the desire of the United States to have it make on its own part and to lend its powerful support in the effort to obtain from each of the various powers claiming "spheres of interest" in China a declaration substantially to the following effect:

(1) That it will in no wise interfere with any treaty port or any vested interest within any so-called "sphere of interest" or leased territory it may have in China.

(2) That the Chinese treaty tariff of the time being shall apply to all merchandise landed or shipped to all such ports as are within such "spheres of interest" (unless they be "free ports"), no matter to what nationality it may belong, and that duties so leviable shall be collected by the Chinese Government.

(3) That it will levy no higher harbor dues on vessels of another nationality frequenting any port in such "sphere" than shall be levied on vessels of its own nationality, and no higher railroad charges over lines built, controlled, or operated within its "sphere" on merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of other nationalities transported through such "sphere" than shall be levied on similar merchandise belonging to its own nationals transported over equal distances.

The President has strong reason to believe that the Governments of both Russia and Germany will cooperate in such an understanding as is here proposed. The recent ukase of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia declaring the port of Ta-lien-wan open to the merchant ships of all nations during the whole term of the lease under which it is to be held by Russia removes all uncertainty as to the liberal and conciliatory policy of that power and justifies the expectation that His Majesty would accede to the similar requests of the United States now being presented to him and make the desired declaration.

The recent action of Germany in declaring the port of Kiao-chao a "free port," and the aid which its Government has given China in establishing there a Chinese customhouse, coupled with oral assurances given the United States by Germany that the interests of the United States and its citizens within its "sphere" would in no wise be affected by its occupation of this portion of the Province of Shantung, encourage the belief that little opposition is to be anticipated to the President's request for a similar declaration from that power.

It is needless also to add that Japan, the power next most largely interested in the trade of China, must be in entire sympathy with the views here expressed, and that its interests will be largely served by the proposed arrangement; and the declarations of its statesmen within the last year are so entirely in line with it that the cooperation of that power is confidently relied upon.

It is therefore with the greatest pleasure that I present this matter to your lordship's attention and urge its prompt consideration by Her Majesty's Government, believing that the action is in entire harmony with its consistent theory and purpose, and that it will greatly redound to the benefit and advantage of all commercial nations alike. The prompt and sympathetic cooperation of Her Majesty's Government with the United States in this important matter will be very potent in promoting its adoption by all the powers concerned.

I have, etc.

JOSEPH H. CHOATE.

(Lord Salisbury to Mr. Choate.)

FOREIGN OFFICE,
London, September 29, 1899.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I have read with great interest the communication which you handed to me on the 23d instant, in which you inform me of the desire of the United States Government to obtain from the various powers claiming spheres of interest in China declarations as to their intentions in regard to the treatment of foreign trade and commerce therein.

I have the honor to inform your excellency that I will lose no time in consulting my colleagues in regard to a declaration by Her Majesty's Government and on the proposal that they should cooperate with the Government of the United States in obtaining similar declarations by the other powers concerned.

In the meantime I may assure your excellency that the policy consistently advocated by this country is one of securing equal opportunity for the subjects and citizens of all nations in regard to commercial enterprise in China, and from this policy Her Majesty's Government have no intention or desire to depart.

I have, etc.,

SALISBURY.

FOREIGN OFFICE,
London, November 30, 1899.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: With reference to my note of September 29 last I have the honor to state that I have carefully considered, in communication with my colleagues, the proposal contained in your excellency's note of September 22 that a declaration should be made by foreign powers claiming "spheres of interest" in China as to their intentions in regard to the treatment of foreign trade and interest therein.

I have much pleasure in informing your excellency that Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to make a declaration in the sense desired by your Government in regard to the leased territory of Wei-hai Wei and all territory in China which may hereafter be acquired by Great Britain by lease or otherwise, and all spheres of interest now held or that may hereafter be held by her in China, provided that a similar declaration is made by other powers concerned.

I have, etc.,

EMBASSY OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, December 6, 1899.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your lordship's note of November 30, in which you inform me that, after having carefully considered in connection with your colleagues, the proposals contained in my note of September 22 last Her Majesty's Government is prepared to make a declaration in the sense desired by my Government in regard to the leased territory of Wei-hai Wei and all territory in China which may hereafter be acquired by Great Britain by lease or otherwise and all "spheres of interest" now held or which may hereafter be held by her in China, provided that a similar declaration is made by other powers.

In acknowledging your lordship's note I have also, under instructions from the Secretary of State, to express to your lordship the gratification he feels at the cordial acceptance by Her Britannic Majesty's Government of the proposals of the United States.

I have, etc.,

JOSEPH H. CHOATE.

ITALY.

(Mr. Hay to Mr. Draper.)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 17, 1899.

SIR: This Government, animated with a sincere desire to insure to the commerce and industry of the United States and of all other nations perfect equality of treatment within the limits of the Chinese Empire for their trade and navigation, especially within the so-called "spheres of influence or interest" claimed by certain European powers in China, has deemed the present an opportune moment to make representations in this direction to Germany, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia.

To attain the object it has in view and to remove possible causes of international irritation and reestablish confidence so essential to commerce, it has seemed to this Government highly desirable that the various powers claiming "spheres of interest or influence" in China should give formal assurances that—

First. They will in no way interfere with any treaty port or any vested interest within any so-called "sphere of interest" or leased territory they may have in China.

Second. The Chinese treaty tariff of the time being shall apply to all merchandise landed or shipped to all such ports as are within said "sphere of interest" (unless they be "free ports"), no matter to what nationality it may belong, and that duties so leviable shall be collected by the Chinese Government.

Third. They will levy no higher harbor dues on vessels of another nationality frequenting any port in such "sphere" than shall be levied on vessels of their own nationality, and no higher railroad charges over lines built, controlled, or operated within its "sphere" on merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of other nationalities transported through such "sphere" than shall be levied on similar merchandise belonging to their own nationals transported over equal distances.

The policy pursued by His Imperial German Majesty in declaring Tsing-tao (Kiao-chao) a free port and in aiding the Chinese Government in establishing there a customhouse, and the ukase of His Imperial Russian Majesty of August 11 last, erecting a free port at Dalny (Ta-lien-wan) are thought to be proof that these powers are not disposed to view unfavorably the proposition to recognize that they contemplate nothing which will interfere in any way with the enjoyment by the commerce of all nations of the rights and privileges guaranteed to them by existing treaties with China.

Repeated assurances from the British Government of its fixed policy to maintain throughout China freedom of trade for the whole world insure, it is believed, the ready assent of that power to our proposals. The commercial interests of Japan will also be greatly served by the above-mentioned declaration, which harmonizes with the assurances conveyed to this Government at various times by His Imperial Japanese Majesty's diplomatic representative at this capital.

In view of the important and growing commercial interests of Italy in eastern Asia it would seem desirable that His Majesty's Government should also be informed of the steps taken by the United States to insure freedom of trade in China, in which it would find equal advantages to those which the other nations of Europe expect.

You are therefore instructed to submit to His Majesty's minister for foreign affairs the above considerations and to invite his early attention to them, expressing, in the name of your Government, the hope that they will prove acceptable and that His Majesty's Government will lend its aid and valuable assistance in securing their acceptance by the other interested powers.

I inclose, for your personal and confidential information, copies of the instructions sent to our ambassadors at Berlin, London, St. Petersburg, and to our minister at Tokio.

I am, etc.,

JOHN HAY.

ROME, January 7, 1900.

MR. AMBASSADOR: Supplementary to what you had already done me the honor of communicating to me in your note of December 9, 1899, your excellency informed me yesterday of the telegraphic note received from your Government that all the powers consulted by the Cabinet of Washington concerning the suitability of adopting a line of policy which would insure to the trade of the whole world equality of treatment in China have given a favorable reply.

Referring to your communications and to the statements in my note of December 23 last, I take pleasure in saying that the Government of the King adheres willingly to the proposals set forth in said note of December 9.

I beg your excellency to kindly convey the notice of our adhesion to the Cabinet of Washington, and I avail myself of the occasion to renew to you, etc.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

SIR: This Government, animated with a sincere desire to insure to the commerce and industry of the United States and of all other nations perfect equality of treatment within the limits of the Chinese Empire for their trade and navigation, especially within the so-called "spheres of influence or interest" claimed by certain European powers in China, has deemed the present an opportune moment to make representations in this direction to Germany, Great Britain, and Russia.

The policy pursued by His Imperial German Majesty in declaring Tsingtao (Kiaochao) a free port and in aiding the Chinese Government in establishing there a customhouse, and the ukase of His Imperial Russian Majesty of August 11 last in erecting a free port at Dalny (Ta-lien-wan) are thought to be proof that these powers are not disposed to view unfavorably the proposition to recognize that they contemplate nothing which will interfere in any way with the enjoyment by the commerce of all nations of the rights and privileges guaranteed to them by existing treaties with China.

You are therefore instructed to submit to His Imperial Japanese Majesty's Government the above considerations, and to invite their early attention to them, and express the earnest hope of your Government that they will accept them and aid in securing their acceptance by the other interested powers.

I have the happy duty of assuring your excellency that the Imperial Government will have no hesitation to give their assent to so just and fair a proposal of the United States, provided that all the other powers concerned shall accept the same.

RUSSIA.

(Mr. Hay to Mr. Towner.)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 6, 1899.

SIR: In 1898, when His Imperial Majesty, through his diplomatic representative at this capital, notified this Government that Russia had leased from His Imperial Chinese Majesty the ports of Port Arthur, Ta-lien-wan, and the adjacent territory in the Liaotung Peninsula in northeastern China for a period of 25 years, your predecessor received categorical assurances from the imperial minister for foreign affairs that American interests in that part of the Chinese Empire would in no way be affected thereby, neither was it the desire of Russia to interfere with the trade of other nations, and that our citizens would continue to enjoy within said leased territory all the rights and privileges guaranteed them under existing treaties with China. Assurances of a similar purport were conveyed to me by the Emperor's ambassador at this capital; while fresh proof of this is afforded by the imperial ukase of July 30–August 11 last, creating the free port of Dalny, near Ta-lien-wan, and establishing free trade for the adjacent territory.

However gratifying and reassuring such assurances may be in regard to the territory actually occupied and administered, it can not but be admitted that a further, clearer, and more formal definition of the conditions which are henceforth to hold within the so-called Russian "sphere of interest" in China as regards the commercial rights therein of our citizens is much desired by the business world of the United States, inasmuch as such a declaration would relieve it from the apprehensions which has exercised a disturbing influence during the last four years on its operations in China.

The present moment seems particularly opportune for ascertaining whether His Imperial Russian Majesty would not be disposed to give permanent form to the assurances heretofore given to this Government on this subject.

The ukase of the Emperor of August 11 of this year, declaring the port of Ta-lien-wan open to the merchant ships of all nations during the remainder of the lease under which it is held by Russia, removes the slightest uncertainty as to the liberal and conciliatory commercial policy His Majesty proposes carrying out in northeastern China, and would seem to insure us the sympathetic and, it is hoped, favorable consideration of the propositions hereinafter specified.

The principles which this Government is particularly desirous of seeing formally declared by His Imperial Majesty and by all the great powers interested in China, and which will be eminently beneficial to the commercial interests of the whole world, are:

First. The recognition that no power will in any way interfere with any treaty port or any vested interest within any leased territory or within any so-called "sphere of interest" it may have in China.

Second. That the Chinese treaty tariff of the time being shall apply to all merchandise landed or shipped to all such ports as are within said "sphere of interest" (unless they be "free ports"), no matter to what nationality it may belong, and that duties so leviable shall be collected by the Chinese Government.

Third. That it will levy no higher harbor dues on vessels of another nationality frequenting any port in such "sphere" than shall be levied on vessels of its own nationality and no higher railroad charges over lines built, controlled, or operated within its "sphere" on merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of other nationalities transported through such "sphere" than shall be levied on similar merchandise belonging to its own nationals transported over equal distances.

The declaration of such principles by His Imperial Majesty would not only be of great benefit to foreign commerce in China, but would powerfully tend to remove dangerous sources of irritation and possible conflict between the various powers; it would reestablish confidence and security, and would give great additional weight to the concerted representations which the treaty powers may hereafter make to His Imperial Chinese Majesty in the interest of reform in Chinese administration so essential to the consolidation and integrity of that Empire, and which, it is believed, is a fundamental principle of the policy of His Majesty in Asia.

Germany has declared the port of Kiao-chao, which she holds in Shangtung under a lease from China, a free port and has aided in the establishment there of a branch of the Imperial Chinese maritime customs. The Imperial German minister for foreign affairs has also given assurances that American trade would not in any way be discriminated against or interfered with, as there is no intention to close the leased territory to foreign commerce within the area which Germany claims. These facts lead this Government to believe that the Imperial German Government will lend its cooperation and give its acceptance to the proposition above outlined, and which our ambassador at Berlin is now instructed to submit to it.

That such a declaration will be favorably considered by Great Britain and Japan, the two other powers most interested in the subject, there can be no doubt. The formal and oft-repeated declarations of the British and Japanese Governments in favor of the maintenance throughout China of freedom of trade for the whole world insure us, it is believed, the ready assent of these powers to the declaration desired.

The acceptance by His Imperial Majesty of these principles must therefore inevitably lead to their recognition by all the other powers interested, and you are instructed to submit them to the Emperor's minister for foreign affairs and urge their immediate consideration.

A copy of this construction is sent to our ambassadors at London and Berlin for their confidential information, and copies of the instructions sent to them on this subject are inclosed herewith.

I have, etc.,

JOHN HAY.

MINISTÈRE DES AFFAIRES ETRANGÈRES, PREMIER DÉPARTEMENT,
Le 18 Décembre, 1899.

MONSIEUR L'AMBASSADEUR: J'ai eu l'honneur de recevoir la note de Votre Excellence en date du 8-20 Septembre a. c. relative aux principes que le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis désirerait voir adoptés en matière économique par les Puissances ayant des intérêts en Chine.

Pour ce qui est du territoire cédé à bail par la Chine à la Russie le Gouvernement Impérial a déjà manifesté sa ferme intention de pratiquer la politique de "la porte ouverte" en érigeant Dalny (Ta-lien-wan), en port franc; et si à l'avenir ce dernier port, tout en continuant à rester franc était séparé par une ligne de douanes du reste du territoire dont il s'agit, les taxes louanières seraient prélevées dans la zone soumise au tarif, sur toutes les marchandises étrangères sans distinction de nationalité.

Quant aux ports déjà ouverts, ou qui le seraient à l'avenir, par le Gouvernement Chinois, au commerce étranger et qui se trouvent en dehors du territoire cédé à bail à la Russie, le règlement des questions relatives aux taxes douanières appartient à la Chine elle-même, et le Gouvernement Impérial n'a nullement l'intention de réclamer pour ses nationaux à cet égard des privilèges quelconques à l'exclusion des autres étrangers. Il va de soi que cette assurance du Gouvernement Impérial a pour condition qu'une déclaration semblable serait faite par les autres Puissances ayant des intérêts en Chine.

Convaincu que cette réponse est de nature à satisfaire à la demande exprimée dans la note susmentionnée, le Gouvernement Impérial se félicite d'autant plus d'avoir été au devant des vœux du Gouvernement Américain, qu'il attache le plus grand prix à tout ce qui peut entretenir et consolider les relations amicales traditionnelles existant entre les deux pays.

Veuillez agréer, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, l'assurance de ma haute considération.

COMTE MOURAVIEFF.

[Translation.]

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
December 18-30, 1899.

Mr. AMBASSADOR: I had the honor to receive Your Excellency's note dated the 8th-20th of September last, relating to the principles which the Government of the United States would like to see adopted in commercial matters by the powers which have interests in China.

In so far as the territory leased by China to Russia is concerned, the Imperial Government has already demonstrated its firm intention to follow the policy of "the open door" by creating Dalny (Ta-lien-wan) a free port; and if at some future time that port, although remaining free itself, should be separated by a customs limit from other portions of the territory in question, the customs duties would be levied, in the zone subject to the tariff, upon all foreign merchandise without distinction as to nationality.

As to the ports now opened or hereafter to be opened to foreign commerce by the Chinese Government, and which lie beyond the territory leased to Russia, the settlement of the question of customs duties belongs to China herself, and the Imperial Government has no intention whatever of claiming any privileges for its own subjects to the exclusion of other foreigners. It is to be understood, however, that this assurance of the Imperial Government is given upon condition that a similar declaration shall be made by other powers having interests in China.

With the conviction that this reply is such as to satisfy the inquiry made in the aforementioned note, the Imperial Government is happy to have complied with the wishes of the American Government, especially as it attaches the highest value to anything that may strengthen and consolidate the traditional relations of friendship existing between the two countries.

I beg you to accept, etc.

COUNT MOURAVIEFF.

INSTRUCTIONS SENT MUTATIS MUTANDIS TO THE UNITED STATES AMBASSADORS AT LONDON, PARIS, BERLIN, ST. PETERSBURG, AND ROME, AND TO THE UNITED STATES MINISTER AT TOKYO.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 20, 1900.

SIR: The ——— Government having accepted the declaration suggested by the United States concerning foreign trade in China, the terms of which I transmitted to you in my instruction No. ——— of ———, and like action having been taken by all the various powers having leased territory or so-called "spheres of interest" in the Chinese Empire, as shown by the notes which I herewith transmit to you, you will please inform the Government to which you are accredited that the condition originally attached to its acceptance—that all other powers concerned should likewise accept the proposals of the United States—having been complied with, this Government will therefore consider the assent given to it by ——— as final and definitive.

You will also transmit to the minister for foreign affairs copies of the present inclosures, and by the same occasion convey to him the expression of the sincere gratification which the President feels at the successful termination of these negotiations, in which he sees proof of the friendly spirit which animates the various powers interested in the untrammeled development of commerce and industry in the Chinese Empire and a source of vast benefit to the whole commercial world.

NOTES EXCHANGED BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND JAPAN NOVEMBER 30, 1908, DECLARING THEIR POLICY IN THE FAR EAST.

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY,
Washington, November 30, 1908.

SIR: The exchange of views between us which has taken place at the several interviews which I have recently had the honor of holding with you has shown that Japan and the United States holding important outlying insular possessions in the region of the Pacific Ocean, the Governments of the two countries are animated by a common aim, policy, and intention in that region.

Believing that a frank avowal of that aim, policy, and intention would not only tend to strengthen the relations of friendship and good neighborhood which have immemorially existed between Japan and the United States, but would materially contribute to the preservation of the general peace, the Imperial Government have authorized me to present to you an outline of their understanding of that common aim, policy, and intention:

1. It is the wish of the two Governments to encourage the free and peaceful development of their commerce on the Pacific Ocean.

2. The policy of both Governments, uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies, is directed to the maintenance of the existing status quo in the region above mentioned and to the defense of the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

3. They are accordingly firmly resolved reciprocally to respect the territorial possessions belonging to each other in said region.

4. They are also determined to preserve the common interest of all powers in China by supporting by all pacific means at their disposal the independence and integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry of all nations in that Empire.

5. Should any event occur threatening the status quo as above described or the principle of equal opportunity as above defined, it remains for the two Governments to communicate with each other in order to arrive at an understanding as to what measures they may consider it useful to take.

If the foregoing outline accords with the view of the Government of the United States, I shall be gratified to receive your confirmation.

I take this opportunity to renew to your excellency the assurance of my highest consideration.

K. TAKAHIRA.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of State.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 30, 1908.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of to-day setting forth the result of the exchange of views between us in our recent interviews defining the understanding of the two Governments in regard to their policy in the region of the Pacific Ocean.

It is a pleasure to inform you that this expression of mutual understanding is welcome to the Government of the United States as appropriate to the happy relations of the two countries and as the occasion for a concise mutual affirmation of that accordant policy respecting the Far East which the two Governments have so frequently declared in the past.

I am happy to be able to confirm to your excellency, on behalf of the United States, the declaration of the two Governments embodied in the following words:

1. It is the wish of the two Governments to encourage the free and peaceful development of their commerce on the Pacific Ocean.

2. The policy of both Governments, uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies, is directed to the maintenance of the existing status quo in the region above mentioned and to the defense of the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

3. They are accordingly firmly resolved reciprocally to respect the territorial possessions belonging to each other in said region.

4. They are also determined to preserve the common interests of all powers in China by supporting by all pacific means at their disposal the independence and integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry of all nations in that Empire.

5. Should any event occur threatening the status quo as above described or the principle of equal opportunity as above defined, it remains for the two Governments to communicate with each other in order to arrive at an understanding as to what measures they may consider it useful to take.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

ELIHU ROOT.

His Excellency BARON KOGORO TAKAHIRA,
Japanese Ambassador.

The resolutions are as follows:

House resolution 728.

Whereas recent press dispatches have announced that 21 demands have been made upon the Chinese Government by a foreign Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the House of Representatives any information in the possession of the State Department from official or unofficial sources relating to any recent demands, unusual between free Governments, that may have been made upon the Chinese Government by any other Government, and any similar information as to whether any recent demands that may have been made upon the Chinese Government by any other Government, if enforced, would imperil the "open-door" policy or the integrity and sovereignty of China.

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 425) declaring the attitude of the United States toward the open-door policy in China.

Whereas pledges to respect the integrity and sovereignty of China and to maintain in that country the principle of the "open door" were mutually pledged by the United States Government with the following Governments, to wit: With the Government of Great Britain, November 30, 1899; with the Government of France, December 16, 1899; with the Government of Russia, December 18, 1899; with the Government of Japan, December 26, 1899; with the Government of Italy, January 7, 1900; with the Government of Germany, February 19, 1900; and

Whereas the Government of the United States and the Government of Japan on November 30, 1908, renewed their mutual pledges by the exchange of identical notes pledging themselves anew to maintain the status quo, to respect the integrity and sovereignty of China, and to uphold the principle of the "open door," in specific terms, as follows:

First. It is the wish of the two Governments to encourage the free and peaceful development of their commerce on the Pacific Ocean.

Second. The policy of both Governments, uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies, is directed to the maintenance of the existing status quo in the region above mentioned and to the defense of the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

Third. They are accordingly firmly resolved reciprocally to respect the territorial possessions belonging to each other in said region.

Fourth. They are also determined to preserve the common interest of all powers in China by supporting by all pacific means at their disposal the independence and integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry of all nations in that Empire.

Fifth. Should any event occur threatening the status quo, as above described, or the principle of equal opportunity, as above defined, it remains for the two Governments to communicate with each other in order to arrive at an understanding as to what measures they may consider it useful to take.

And—

Whereas the mutual pledges aforesaid are based upon the clear principles of justice and right, and their faithful observance by the high contracting parties affects vitally the material interests of American citizens and the maintenance of peace, the development of prosperity, and the progress of civilization in the vast regions of the Pacific: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the people of the United States would look with disfavor upon any effort to change the status quo in China while so many of the high contracting parties pledged to maintain that status quo are distracted by war, and that the people of the United States would view with grave concern as an unfriendly act any aggressive move on the part of a foreign Government against the integrity and sovereignty of China.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gravity of the situation and the relations between the United States and Japan and China as well as our relations at this time with the European nations at war there. It seems to me that at this time and under the existing circumstances it is absolutely necessary for this House and the people of this country to place their reliance in the President of the United States. [Applause.] He represents our country in our relations with foreign nations, and it would be a serious thing for this House or this Congress without all the information which the President possesses to endeavor to interfere. Woodrow Wilson is President of the United States, elected by the people of the United States, and he occupies a position where we must trust him in these matters, and where we must not endeavor to hamper or annoy him or interfere with him. [Applause.] I believe that he wants to preserve peace and uphold our rights and the dignity of our country. I hope that we will be able both to uphold our rights and dignity and preserve peace; but the only thing that we can do under the circumstances is to have faith in the administration. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I concur in everything that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said in reference to the matter brought out by the speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. Our international situation is a delicate one, and it should be dealt with only by those who are intimately acquainted with every detail of these affairs. The inquiry proposed in the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama was a broad one, and, in my opinion, was one that ought not to have been entered into at this time. If the gentleman's resolution was privileged, as he says it was, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs had not given him that consideration he thought he deserved, he could have brought it up at the end of seven days in this House. I do not think it is privileged. It is not drawn in such a manner as to entitle it to the privilege he claims for it. I said to the gentleman I did not think it was wise at this juncture of our international affairs, at this particularly delicate period of our history, for the Foreign Affairs Committee to take up the inquiries called for in his resolution, and therefore I declined to call the committee together in special session for the purpose of considering it. [Applause.]

I believe it is the duty of every American, those in private life as well as those in public life, to give as little cause for friction with other nations as possible. I believe the paramount duty of the hour is to preserve our friendly relations with all nations as far as that can be done with due regard to the interest of our country and our people and the maintenance of our honor as a Nation.

The administration has splendidly labored to this end. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has aided at every stage of this splendid work, and in doing so we have had to suppress a number of inopportune bills and resolutions. [Applause.]

I believe I acted wisely and in the interests of peace and harmony between this country and our far eastern friends in reference to the gentleman's resolution. I further said to him, not that the State Department had requested me not to have a hearing upon this resolution, but that the State Department thought it was unwise to enter into the inquiries suggested in his resolution; and for that reason, and because my judgment fully accords with the opinion of the State Department, I took the responsibility of not assembling the committee.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield another minute to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to ask the gentleman if he believes that this Congress ought to know the terms—the real terms—of the 21 demands that have been made upon the Chinese Government by a foreign Government?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not believe that this is a time for Congress to inquire into the trouble between Japan and China, if there is trouble. I think the gentleman has an exaggerated idea of the situation existing between those countries. I have no idea that Japan desires to crush the great Republic of the East; and if she did, I have no idea that China, with her 400,000,000 of people, would sit supinely by and permit her rights to be invaded and her liberties destroyed; and I am satisfied, and I believe the people of this country are satisfied, that the American Government will never allow her rights, present or prospective, in the Orient to be invaded or interfered with by any country. The gentleman can depend upon those intrusted with our foreign affairs not only to keep us out of war, as far as that result can be accomplished with honor, but to uphold and defend our rights whenever they are endangered. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have we left on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Only three minutes? I thought I had eight minutes, according to my figures here. Is that correct, Mr. Chairman, that I have only three minutes left?

The CHAIRMAN. That is all the time the gentleman from Illinois has—three minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman is a bad counter. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Yes; Mr. Chairman, I yield the time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, about two hours ago there was an exciting scene on the floor of the House. I undertook to make a reply to certain attacks made upon me as well as attacks made upon Gen. Crozier, an officer of the Army, who was not present, and who, therefore, could not speak for himself. I believe the attack upon Gen. Crozier was unfair. I believe it to have been made at a time and in a place where it should not have been made. Certain gentlemen upon the other side insisted that by reason of the fact that I was undertaking to ask for fair play in behalf of a man who is serving under a Democratic administration, that therefore I was the representative of the Steel Trust or of some other trust. I asked particularly that I be given eight minutes in which to make a statement. I have been denied those few minutes. Therefore the gag rule which applied on the other side a few moments ago applies equally to this side.

While I accept the courtesy of the gentleman [Mr. HINEBAUGH] who has just yielded to me three minutes, I yield back to him the balance of my time and thank him for what I have had. [Applause.]

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have we left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, I realize, as everyone else realizes, the delicacy of the present situation. I know, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows, and has so well stated, that we must trust much to the discretion of our President and to our Diplomatic Service. I do not like the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], because it looks now as if at this critical time it adds to our burdens and adds to our liability to get into trouble.

We on the Pacific coast are always face to face with the oriental question as it affects our own country, and we are willing to face it, and are going to continue to face it. But how shall we do it? We shall not face our own problems aright if at this critical period we recklessly butt into the relations of Asia. There is not the least excuse for our trying to maintain a Monroe doctrine there. The Lord knows we have enough trouble in maintaining a Monroe doctrine on this continent, and what Japan may or may not do to China or China to Japan is a matter between Japan and China. If we are injured, the time for us to assert the injury is after we are hurt. It is not the time now to assert that we have anything to do with the joint relations between Japan and China. Such an assertion is out of place and dangerous, especially so at this time.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California yields back one minute.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for eight minutes.

A MEMBER. You can not do it.

Mr. MOORE. Well, I submit the request.

Mr. MURDOCK. You can run an elephant through this committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. My request is, Mr. Chairman, that I be permitted to proceed for eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for eight minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw that request until we read the bill under the five-minute rule. Then there will be an opportunity for him.

Mr. MOORE. I get no more assistance on one side than on the other. If I can not get time to answer a personal attack, I will ask that a quorum be present.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman wants to be nasty about that, all right.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman does not want to be "nasty." The gentleman from Illinois does not appreciate the seriousness of the attack that was made on me. I think he was not present at the time. Several gentlemen attacked me on the ground that I was a representative of the trusts, in connection with charges against an Army officer that I believe to be vicious and long since exploded.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania understands that under the practice, where the House fixes the time for general debate, the committee has no authority to extend general debate.

Mr. MOORE. I understand that; and that is the reason why I made my personal request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. You can do it when we read the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MOORE. I have made the request. Since my party leader desires me to withdraw it, I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Have we 40 minutes left on this side, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 37 minutes left.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, as I said the other day at the opening of this debate, this bill carries $165,000,000 for pensions. That amount will be reduced by an amendment, to be offered when the bill is considered under the five-minute rule, by making it $164,000,000, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

We had hoped that this pension-roll expense would be diminished, but it has not been so diminished. The act of 1912, known as the Sherwood Act, has, besides compelling us to pay $15,000,000 the first year to increase the pension amount, added over $62,000,000 during the past two years. According to a statement made by the Commissioner of Pensions in the hearing before the Committee on Appropriations, the amount by which the act of 1912 would increase it would be something over $62,000,000.

That is the reason why we have not been able to reduce the amount. We know, Mr. Chairman, that that act is a pension-service act, not for disabilities or for wounds or diseases incurred in the service. Any man who served in the Army of the United States during the Civil War for the period of 90 days is entitled, when he arrives at a certain age, to go upon the pension roll at so much per month, and there is a large number of them on the roll for that reason now.

I undertook to investigate what the Civil War has cost us in the way of pensions. Since that war we have paid out in pensions $4,500,000,000. In addition to that, the Government of the United States, in 1866 and at other times, has appropriated $140,481,178.86 for bounties paid to men who enlisted in that service. Various States of the Union, for the purpose of securing the enlistment of men who enlisted or were drafted, paid the sum of $285,941,036. This amount was paid to men who enlisted in the Army, in the way of bounties.

The men who received these bounties from the States, in most instances amounting to $1,500 each, are the men whom the legislation of this Congress has placed upon the pension roll for mere service. I have no protest to make against this Government pensioning soldiers in the United States Army who suffered wounds or disease from their service. I have great honor and respect for the real soldier upon the Union side, as I have great honor and respect and love and affection for those who served in the Confederate Army, but I have not enough respect and regard for the man who enlisted for only 90 days, who, when he enlisted, received from $500 to $1,500 bounty from the State where he enlisted or was drafted before he would enlist, and who now comes to Congress and secures congressional action which entails this burden of $62,000,000 additional upon the people in less than two years.

I desire to call attention to this list containing the amounts paid by each State for these bounties.

In addition to that Congress in 1866 paid back bounties and bounties amounting to $66,000,000, which, added to the others, makes a total of $140,481,178.86. So that the States, in order to secure these men to enlist, men who had to be drafted, paid this enormous sum of $285,941,000; and after being drafted or after enlisting, even if they served but 90 days, they are now to receive these pensions under this law.

I do not propose to criticize that law. I endeavored to do so when it was passed. I make these statements for the purpose of calling the attention of the country to the enormous amount that the people have burdened themselves for in the past and propose to burden themselves for in the future, not to men who fought from motives of patriotism, not to men who were wounded or who contracted disease, but men who became soldiers for pay, and who have never forgotten the proposition that they had to be paid to enlist, and who are now still paid by remaining on the pension rolls.

I ask unanimous consent to insert this statement in the RECORD, and also the report of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks uuanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating the matter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report on the pension appropriation bill is as follows:

[House Report No. 1320.]

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year 1916, submit the following in explanation thereof:

The estimates on which the bill is based will be found on page 473 of the Book of Estimates for 1916, and amount to $166,100,000.

The accompanying bill appropriates $165,100,000.

The following statement gives, by appropriate title of expenditure, the amounts appropriated for 1915, the estimates for 1916, and the amounts recommended in the accompanying bill for 1916:

Title of expenditure.	Appropriations for 1915.	Estimates for 1916.	Recommended for 1916.
Payment of pensions	$169,000,000	$166,000,000	$165,000,000
Fees of examining surgeons	150,000	100,000	100,000
Total	169,150,000	166,100,000	165,100,000

The reduction from $169,000,000 for 1915 to $165,000,000 for 1916 in the appropriation for payment of pensions is in accordance with the annual estimates submitted to Congress and is approved by the Commissioner of Pensions in statements made by him to the committee.

The reduction in the amount for payment of fees of examining surgeons in pension cases is also in accordance with the estimates and the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions from $150,000 for 1915 to $100,000 for 1916. This service is largely diminished for the reason that many who are put on the pension roll now because of age and service are not required to submit to medical examination.

ECONOMIES FROM ABOLISHING PENSION AGENCIES.

The pension appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913 abolished the 18 separate agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, and created in their place a single disbursing officer at $4,000, through whom all payments should be made. This change in the manner of paying pensions has been in operation for two years and has resulted not only in greater facility in the handling of pension disbursements but has resulted in the gratifying reduction of $145,000 annually in the cost of paying pensions.

ESTIMATED INCREASE IN COST OF PENSIONS DUE TO ACT OF MAY 11, 1912.

[Pension Hearings, 1916, p. 12.]

The number of pensioners on the roll under the act of May 11, 1912, the amounts paid out to such pensioners, and the average annual value per pensioner by fiscal years, as shown in the annual reports for 1912, 1913, and 1914, are as follows:

Date.	Number of pensioners.	Amount paid.	Average annual value.
June 30, 1912	13,246	$23,929.94	$260.09
June 30, 1913	379,064	53,306,021.82	250.62
June 30, 1914	369,624	97,506,549.73	256.67

The exact additional cost to the Government for pensions, due to said act of May 11, 1912, is not obtainable, as the great body of the pensioners enrolled thereunder were gained from pensioners already on the roll under other laws, and in such cases no account of payments by differences in old and new rates is maintained, all pensions paid upon the new grant being charged to the law under which it is made, and the old rate being merged in the new from the date to which payment was last made at the old rate.

The grants under the act of May 11, 1912, have been very largely to pensioners who were on the roll under the act of February 6, 1907, as will appear by the following table, which shows the number on the roll under said latter act on the dates in the above table and gives also the amounts disbursed and the average annual values:

Date.	Number of pensioners.	Amount paid.	Average annual value.
June 30, 1912	233,579	$61,346,240.53	$176.41
June 30, 1913	16,241	36,376,470.43	170.08
June 30, 1914	7,158	2,000,203.23	174.76

The total of original allowances under the act of May 11, 1912, to claimants not on the roll under other laws for the three years noted was 1,456, and the balance was made up of transfers from the general law and the act of June 27, 1890, classes of Civil War survivors. The average annual value of these two latter classes combined for the three years was $194.27. The average annual value of the act of February 6, 1907, class for the same period was $173.75, and the average annual value of the three classes combined for said period was $184.01, as against an average annual value of $255.79 in the act of May 11, 1912, class showing an increase in annual value per pensioner in the latter class of $71.78. In a hearing before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on January 30, 1913, it was stated by Mr. Thompson, of this bureau, that the act of May 11, 1912, would add about $72 per annum for each pensioner.

In view of the changes going on during the period in question in the classes named, which embrace all of the Civil War survivors on the roll, a comparison of the amounts paid out would not afford trustworthy information as to the increase in cost of pensions chargeable to the act of May 11, 1912.

The amounts paid out on account of pensions for the fiscal years 1909 to 1912, inclusive, are shown as follows:

1910	159,974,056.08
1911	157,325,160.35
1912	152,986,433.72

The reduction in pension expenditures by years was—

1910	$1,999,647.69
1912	4,338,726.63

In the absence of legislative provision as made by the act of May 11, 1912, and in view of the progressive decrease in expenditure above shown, a decrease of $6,000,000 and over for the ensuing year 1913, and of $8,000,000 and over for the year 1914, or, say, $15,000,000 for the two years, would appear to be a conservative estimate.

As above shown, the amount expended in 1912 was $152,986,433.72. With decreases for the ensuing years 1913 and 1914 by $6,500,000 and $8,500,000, respectively, the expenditures for said years would have been:

1914	137,986,433.72
Total	284,472,867.44

The actual expenditures in said years were:

1913	$174,171,660.80
Total	346,589,207.06

The difference of $62,116,339.62 might thus be taken to represent the additional cost to the Government for pensions chargeable to the act of May 11, 1912, for the period from date of its approval to the close of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1914.

TOTAL EXPENDITURES FOR PENSIONS.

The following table, furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions, shows the amounts paid by the Government in pensions to soldiers, sailors, and marines, their widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, on account of military and naval service since the foundation of the Republic:

War of the Revolution (estimated)	$70,000,000.00
War of 1812 (service pension)	45,950,546.86
Indian wars (service pension)	12,801,521.01
War with Mexico (service pension)	48,693,102.08
Civil War	4,457,974,496.00
War with Spain and Philippine insurrection	46,092,740.37
Regular Establishment	31,936,517.21
Unclassified	16,508,447.41
Total	4,729,957,370.94

The following table, also compiled from the annual reports of the Commissioner of Pensions, shows the number of pensioners on the roll, the annual value of pensions, the disbursements on account of pensions, the number of original applications filed, and the number of original claims allowed each fiscal year from 1879 to 1914, inclusive:

Fiscal year.	Number of pensioners on the roll.	Annual value of pensions.	Disbursements on account of pensions.	Total number of applications filed, original.	Total number of claims allowed, original.

NAVY PENSION FUND.

Navy pension fund: Section 4755 of the Revised Statutes provides that Navy pensions shall be paid out of the "Navy pension fund," upon an appropriation by Congress, so far as the same may be sufficient.

The naval pension fund at present amounts to $14,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, and is created under the provisions of sections 4751 and 4752 of the Revised Statutes.

The payments on account of Navy pensions during the fiscal year 1914 aggregated $6,047,904.48.

Pensioners and amounts paid, arranged by States, insular possessions, Canal Zone, and foreign countries, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914.

CIVIL WAR SURVIVORS.

[From Report of Commissioner of Pensions, 1914, p. 5.]

The following shows the loss and percentage of loss to the pension roll by death of Civil War soldier pensioners from the year 1909 to 1914, inclusive. This is the first time that the percentages have been shown. It will be seen that the percentage of loss is increasing with the advancing age of the veterans.

SPECIAL ACTS.

[Report of Commissioner of Pensions, p. 43.]

Since 1861 there have been allowed by special acts of Congress 43,231 pensions and increases of pensions, of which 19,680 are now on the roll, with an annual face value of $5,944,484. Only a part of this is properly chargeable to special acts, as most of the beneficiaries had been previously pensioned under general laws at lower rates.

From June 30, 1913, and thereafter during the Sixty-third Congress, 894 persons were included in the special acts passed at the rates specified in the summary following:

Pensions granted by special act during the Sixty-third Congress subsequent to June 30, 1913.

Of the above, 153 were granted to persons not in receipt of a pension and 741 to persons then receiving smaller pensions.

The annual value of said special-act pensions is $269,592, and the annual increase due to the same is $115,872.

The following statement shows the number of pensions and increases of pensions granted by special acts during each Congress since March 4, 1861:

Mr. BARTLETT. The information which I have given as to these bounties is taken from a work called "American Politics," by Mr. Cooper, a Republican, of Pennsylvania, who for a number of years was a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature and chairman of the Republican State committee in 1881–82. It is to be found on page 74 of that volume.

I get this statement with reference to the $142,000,000 that the United States Government appropriated for bounties from a document of the Senate issued in 1879, containing a statement of the expenses of the war, and which contains the amounts of bounties paid by the United States during and immediately after the war. That document puts the total expenses of the war at $6,189,929,908.58.

This bill carries $164,000,000 for the next year, and we appropriated $169,000,000 last year. There is a surplus of between seven and seven and one-half million dollars on last year's appropriation. I had hoped that we could have reduced the bill by that amount, but the Commissioner of Pensions and the subcommittee and the committee did not think proper to do so.

It seems that whenever the pension roll decreases in number and amount—and it necessarily decreases in numbers as the years go by, for 35,000 to 36,000 die and drop out every year—that new schemes are to be inaugurated and devised for continuing this enormous pension roll, larger before the present war commenced than was appropriated by the European countries for any one year. For myself I protest against this kind of legislation.

I know the bill for 1912 was passed by a Democratic House, but that does not make it one that I can favor. I repeat that the soldier who is wounded and diseased by fighting his country's battles ought to have a pension, and I would be glad to vote for it. But these bills that propose simply to give these men payment, not for wounds, not for disease, not for long service, but merely because they were on the pay roll for 90 days, does not meet with my favor. The most of them that enjoy that benefit are men who went into the Army not from patriotic motives, not to defend the flag, but because there was paid to them by the States bounties sometimes as high as $1,500 in one case.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why did not the committee give the Commissioner of Pensions all he asked for?

Mr. BARTLETT. We have given him all that he asked for and more.

Mr. AUSTIN. As I read the report, it is a million dollars less.

Mr. BARTLETT. Because the commissioner reduced his estimate and then further asked us to reduce it to $164,000,000. I have his letter here.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from Georgia complains of pensioning the soldier that had no disability. Is it not a fact that the Southern States pension soldiers who are indigent?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; who have no property.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then why should not the Federal Government do it?

Mr. BARTLETT. Because the Federal Government does not limit it in that way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are some other things that I desire to say, not relating to pensions. First, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] this morning, in reply to my colleague [Mr. TRIBBLE], said that I did not oppose a certain bill which, as far as I can learn, no House or Senate heretofore has thought proper to report and put upon the calendar, a bill to authorize the exercise of the interstate-commerce power of regulating the hours of labor of children of various States in this Union. I did not by my vote seek to oppose such a bill. I knew it was useless. I knew the forces behind that clamor paid no more attention to the restrictions of the power of this Government in that Constitution than they did on other occasions. I knew they were endeavoring to do that which Jefferson warned the people before he died, in one of his letters written after his retirement, that the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution would be used as an elastic shield under which the Federalists would endeavor to draw all the powers of the States to the Federal Government and throttle and destroy the powers of the States.

I have lived to see in the Congresses of which I have been a Member, time and time again, when the police powers of the State were swept from it under the guise of doing some great moral thing which was solely within the power of the State to do.

Mr. Chairman, I can not better illustrate what I mean than by reading just here an editorial from a great American author, who has lived long and devoted his life to the business of editing a great newspaper—Henry Watterson, of Louisville, Ky.

When the former President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt—who had, I hope, a good purpose, I will not say for the gratification of ambition to promulgate his doctrine of new nationalism, and had gone down to defeat in 1912—had taken himself to the jungles of South America to recuperate and come back again from Elba, Mr. Watterson wrote this:

> The end of the Republic is not yet. Impiety we behold on every hand; ingratitude and folly; women quarreling with nature for not making them men; men quarreling with freedom for not leveling conditions; the visionary seeking to abolish disease and sin by act of Congress, the demagogue flattering these delusions; but the hand of God is not yet ready to descend to blight the land and blast the people.
> Not yet; not yet. Maybe it will be His will to lead them through kindly light from the darkness of the hour to higher and better things. Who shall say? Anyhow, He has lifted all present menace of the Deluge. Once more He has saved the people in spite of themselves. The return of the native may have ornithological, even geographical significance, but not political importance. The man on horseback can only prance in the circus ring. Caesar never again; just plain Teddy of the tiger heart and forked tongue, wanting an office and wanting it bad, like the rest of those who have been here to-day and gone to-morrow, as presently he shall be.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if he has the editorial that Mr. Watterson wrote about Bryan and the Democrats in 1896?

Mr. BARTLETT. No, I have not; I read it.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is equally good authority.

Mr. BARTLETT. And a very good editorial, too. Mr. Chairman, I hope he is right. Mr. Chairman, 20 years ago, when I entered the Halls of this House as a representative of my State, where I have served continuously since that time with almost the unanimous indorsement of my people, both at the primaries and at the election, no such bill as that could have been championed, even by a so-called Democrat from Pennsylvania. [Laughter and applause.] I have no apologies to make to him or to anybody else for our position on this sort of a bill. When the gentleman says that this bill was aimed at a few Southern States who coined the labor of children into dollars, he made a statement that was far from correct; indeed, it was reckless. [Applause.] The gentleman said that it was in order to protect us. Mr. Chairman, on one or two occasions I have had the privilege of putting into the RECORD the laws of the State of Georgia in regard to child labor. The senior Senator from Georgia, then governor of Georgia, and the junior Senator, then a Member of the House, and myself aided in passing through the Legislature of the State of Georgia a law which protected children in the factory from being improperly worked, children under 14 years of age. We need no enlightenment; we need no assertion from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] to know that we have done such a thing as that.

If the gentleman is so interested in taking care of the lives and bodies of the children who are working under the lawful age, then he might have devoted himself in years gone by and at the present time to cleaning up his own house in Pennsylvania. If I recall correctly, an investigation had by the direction of President Roosevelt, over which George Gray, then a circuit judge of the United States, presided, developed conditions so shocking and horrible in the mines of Pennsylvania, with reference not only to the employment of children, but of men and women, that the whole country was shocked. The gentleman would better pull the beam out of his own eye before he undertakes to criticize or interfere with the mote in his neighbor's eye.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I desire to say in respect to that. We invite the slanderers down to the State of Georgia, where I live, so that they may see for themselves the happy condition, the safe condition, the contented condition of the many people employed in the mills, the children employed in the mills under the laws of Georgia, and if that does not show up well in comparison with the State of Pennsylvania, then I shall be ashamed. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] would better, I repeat, sweep out the dirt and filth on this subject from the State of Pennsylvania and the mines and workshops there before he undertakes to come in here and in his unconstitutional way undertake to protect the children of Georgia. The gentleman spoke of those who opposed by their voices and by their votes this measure. I voted against it. There is not a man in this House on either side who did not know when the bill was called up and my name was called that I would vote against it.

It is not because I have not as much at heart the interest and protection of the children of the country as has the gentleman from Pennsylvania; not because I would not advocate and have not advocated in my own State legislature the enactment of laws to protect them from avarice of the mill owners, but because I know, when the fathers builded this Government and wrote into the Constitution the words that are written there limiting the power of the Government and reserving certain rights to the States, that they intended that no one like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] should undertake to lay his hand on the sacred ark of the covenant and invade the liberties of the people of the States by enacting a law of that kind. I believe, as do many others, that this is a Government with limited powers, and that certain rights are reserved to the States; and if that be treason to the Democratic Party and to the country, then the gentleman may make the most of it. I have lived in that sort of belief and I have advocated in this House for 20 years that belief, and I shall go out of it maintaining that belief and my own self-respect. I shall go back to my people knowing that I have kept the faith, whether they approve or do not approve, or whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania approves or does not approve. I would rather retire to private life, as I shall do, with these convictions, and go down to my grave believing in them and believing that I stand for them, than have all of the cheap claptrap notoriety that people get from endeavoring to change the laws of the State by these unauthorized and unjustifiable methods.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I realize the gentleman's sincerity, but does the gentleman expect the Supreme Court of the United States to hold the child-labor law unconstitutional?

Mr. BARTLETT. I expect the Supreme Court of the United States to administer the law as it has heretofore declared it, and to say that you can not exercise the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution to regulate the police laws of the States.

Mr. MURDOCK. But if the Supreme Court holds that it is constitutional, what then?

Mr. BARTLETT. Then the people will have to submit to it.

Mr. MURDOCK. And in that event we would have had hold of the right horn of the dilemma and the gentleman of the wrong horn.

Mr. BARTLETT. That does not make it right. I decide these questions of constitutionality by my own convictions and not by what the Supreme Court or somebody else may say. I am the judge, and not the Supreme Court.

I did not intend to say anything on this, Mr. Chairman. I have done so because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] threw out such a broad challenge to those of us who spoke against it and those of us who voted against it in stating that we were endeavoring to fasten upon the country wrongs perpetrated by avaricious mill owners against the children of the country.

Another thing. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed as a Democrat to any proposition looking to the Government ownership of the public utilities of this country. No Democratic platform, no Republican platform that I have ever read, and no platform of any of the great parties that have battled for the supremacy of this great Government in the last 100 years has ever advocated it. On every stump in Georgia, from the mountain to the seaboard, from Savannah to the Chattahoochee River, every Democratic candidate and speaker have rung out the protest of the Democratic fathers against so-called Government ownership or any species of Government control. That was a policy which originated as far back as 1872 with the Socialist Labor Party. I did not believe in it then and I do not believe in it now. Men may come and men may go, parties may change and men in parties may change, but that faith I shall hold to as an abiding truth. I have kept it and I propose to keep it on all occasions, however much I may regret that the occasion arises when I shall have to assume that position and give expression to my opinion in opposition to my party. I see no difference between Government ownership of railroads and Government ownership of ships that ply the seas. In truth, I would rather under the operation of government vote for Government ownership of railroads than I would for Government ownership of ships, because the United States Government has the right to exercise the power of eminent domain through the States, also to condemn a right of way for its highways to carry the mails or military supplies, or build railroads under the commerce clause of the Constitution, as the Supreme Court has said, but whoever, until this month or this year, ever proclaimed the doctrine that the United States Government had the right to condemn a highway across God's highway, upon the seas of the world, which is God's highway, 3 miles from shore.

No man is prohibited from going upon it or sailing upon it, and you can not exercise a power or sovereignty or force and say you condemn it and use it. So I found myself disagreeing with the policy of my party, the policy advocated by my friends in this House. I declined to accept it. I have the greatest admiration, affection, and respect for the man in the White House. I think he is one of the greatest Presidents whom we have had in many decades in this country—a sincere, true patriot. I do not propose and have not proposed to indulge in any sycophantic praise of him. I took my political life in my hands in the primaries in 1912 in my district in advocating his nomination, and some who are now shouting his praises were fiercely attacking him.

I stood up for him and carried my particular section for him in the primary. I thought in 1912, as I think now, that he was the best man of all the candidates we could nominate for the Presidency and the only man we could elect. He is a manly man; he has opinions of his own, and when occasion arose which called upon him to do so he asserted those principles and voted them or remained quiet and did not support the candidates who represented the principles he could not accept. I claim the same right to vote and voice those principles that I have believed in all my life, whether in the Democratic caucus or in the House. I exercised this right in the Democratic caucus. The Democratic caucus has formulated a rule by which a man who could not support a measure that contravenes his view of the Constitution of the United States or which violates the pledge which he had made to his people could be excused from supporting a caucus measure.

But these small men who undertake to enlarge their proportions by standing in the glaring light that beats around the White House go around and glibly talk about "bolters." They want front seats and front places in the White House light; they who hold up their hands and shout, like Demetrius of old, "Great, great is Diana of the Ephesians." So they shout, "Great, great is Woodrow Wilson in the White House." [Applause.]

As Demetrius said when St. Paul undertook to tell him about the Christian religion and the wonders which Christ and His disciples had worked, when he undertook to preach the doctrine of Christianity, Demetrius urged the people to stone him because it interfered with Demetrius's business. And so these shouters for Wilson would have it done to us. I do not care if they stone me like Demetrius would have stoned St. Paul because we interfered with their business of patronage. [Laughter and applause.] Why, I am ready to be stoned; I am ready to be pilloried in the white light of public opinion of my State and of my constituency; and if I can not show them that I stood for the faith of the fathers, that I exercised a right that a Democratic caucus gave me when we organized the Democratic caucus, then I must accept the consequences; but I would rather wrap the robes of private station around me and retire to my home and serve the balance of my life as a private citizen than to be forced by any sort of demand to lose my respect.

I can lose office and be satisfied. I can lose the good opinion or approval of those men who have one opinion to-day and another to-morrow, but I can not go to my home and my people with my self-respect gone, and tell them that I did it by the dictation of anybody, and I will not do it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks, by putting in extracts from the National Magazine, which gives a statement of the various instances where States have undertaken government ownership of railroads and have failed. I ask to put that in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF UTILITIES.
(By William Clayton.)

"Government ownership and operation is not an entirely new proposition in this country, for minor ventures were made as far back as colonial days, most of which were financial failures. Prior to 1860 appropriations exceeding $12,000,000 had been made by Congress for the construction of Government-owned transportation projects, but the most searching investigations which students of political economy have made have brought to light nothing remarkable except the fact that no financial success followed these undertakings.

"The older States have had the most disappointing experience with practically every project they have launched, and a very interesting volume could be compiled from the records of government owned and operated canals in some of the Eastern States. The figures would be appalling, and they would indicate a waste of money far beyond all reason. Outside of New York State the great majority of canal projects have either been abandoned or turned over to private ownership; and even in New York State no one would venture to assert that the canals have been other than a gigantic failure except so far as they have assisted in the development of the territory through which they were built. As enterprises standing alone, the financial losses have been colossal.

"History shows that several American States have owned and operated steam railroads, only to abandon them as unprofitable and therefore unsuccessful. The only Government railroads in this country to-day are the Panama Railroad, operated by the Federal Government, and a short road in Texas known as the Penitentiary line. (The apparent success of Government operation of the Panama Railroad is due to excessively high rates and monopolization of the traffic. For instance, the Panama Railroad's average freight rate in the fiscal year 1913 was a trifle short of 3½ cents per ton per mile, which was more than four times greater than the average of the privately owned railroads of the United States—three-quarters of a cent per ton per mile.) Georgia and North Carolina own certain railroads, which were built several years ago, but they are now leased and operated by private companies. Before going out of the railroad business these States encountered disastrous experiences in the operation of the system. Probably no better account of an unsuccessful experience may be found than the story told by Hon. T. B. Wamock, formerly judge of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, who wrote, in 1906: 'This road (from Goldsboro to Morehead City) has been operated by the State of North Carolina for nearly half a century, in war and peace, by Democrats, by Republicans, and by fusionists, with various degrees of failure.

"'The private stockholders for years have pleaded for a lease or anything to avoid a continuance of political mismanagement. During these many years no dividend has been earned, though one or two presidents declared dividends of 1 or 2 per cent per annum for political effect, when such moneys should have been used in betterments. Finally, during the administration of Gov. Aycock, it became known that the administration had determined to heed the cries of the private stockholders and the sound business judgment of the people of the State and to lease this last of the State's railroads. A great sigh of relief went up from mountain to sea. The effect of the lease was immediate. The first year of private management improved the roadbed and equipment to a point never before approached. The road is being extended and new connections made and is run upon business as opposed to political methods. The service, both passenger and freight, has been nearly doubled, and favoritism has been abolished.'

"The experience of Cincinnati, which owns the Cincinnati & Southern Railroad, has been nothing but unsatisfactory from a financial standpoint.

"Missouri has had a most unfortunate experience in railroad construction and operation, and it is stated that its losses in this line of endeavor amount to approximately $25,000,000.

"The State of Pennsylvania is said to have lost about $20,000,000 in its railway projects. This loss resulted from its experience with the old Philadelphia & Columbia Railroad.

"Indiana started out in the late thirties to demonstrate its faith in public ownership, but, after a year's experience as an owner and operator of the Madison & Lafayette road, frankly admitted its failure and stopped the losses after a million and a half had been sunk in the enterprises.

"These illustrations are not the only unsuccessful experiences that American States have encountered with public ownership and operation. Unfortunately, a complete story of these failures has never been written, and as many of them occurred before our present generation the precedents have not been sufficiently considered. When these failures are better understood they will aid in forming correct conclusions regarding the wisdom of municipalizing everything in sight.

"The commissioner of accounts of the city of New York recently reported to the mayor that the net loss from operating the Staten Island ferry for seven years was $4,450,699. The city's loss on the Staten Island ferry proper, coupled with the loss on what is known as the Thirty-ninth Street division, a Brooklyn ferry, has been $6,625,000, an average of $2,934 a day. Gazing at these figures, and then contemplating the fact that these ferries paid when they were privately operated, can not but dampen the ardor of any municipal ownership enthusiast.

"Every government of municipal enterprise is exposed to political outbidding of one politician by another. Government employees become electoral factors in proportion to the increase of Government and municipal activities. They become the actual masters of those to whom in theory they are subservient.

"In the Municipal Trading Report, Sir Thomas Hughes, twice mayor of Liverpool, states: 'The day on which a man becomes the employee of a municipal corporation he ought to have no further voice in the choice of his superiors.'

"The New York World recently states:

"'Nominally the civil-service employees of New York are public servants. In reality they are public masters.

"'The original civil-service laws were enacted to protect faithful public servants from political bosses and to safeguard the public business from the demoralization of public welfare. We have protected all these employees from the boss, but we have got to devise means to protect the public from its employees. No corporation would dare take the aggressive stand against public regulation that these civil-service employees take.

"'New York has a written charter, but it is only a matter of form. The real charter of New York is to be found in the decrees of 60,000 and more civil-service employees, all organized against their employers, the people of New York. They are all despots of our democracy.'

"One difficulty common to most forms of government ownership arises from the necessity of dealing with a large number of employees. The tasks of a government, whether it be a nation or a municipality, are sufficiently varied and comprehensive to take up all the ability and time of the administrators, without adding unnecessarily to their duties. In public ownership there is a multiplication of the activities of government which brings about vexatious interference with liberty and a restriction upon legitimate enterprises. In other words, instead of the liberties of the people being protected they are curtailed."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I make a similar request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a similar request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, namely.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] may proceed for 10 minutes as though it were in general debate.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I hope that will be done, and I join with the gentleman from Illinois in that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman from Illinois, also the gentleman from Georgia, for this courtesy at this time. It is rather belated, since what I have to say could have been more appropriately said at the time the discussion was on. I rise now to say a word or two with respect to a practice that has grown up here of criticizing men who are not present. I do not mean to reflect upon the gentleman from Georgia, for instance, who has just made a very severe attack upon my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], inviting a reply that I presume, in due course, will be made in defense of the child-labor bill, but I do think some Member in this House should rise when a statement is being made about an individual who is not here, which statement involves a charge of corruption concerning individuals who are not present to defend themselves.

Now, I have no desire to question the motives of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER]. He has started out on a line of investigation which is special to his particular district and he endeavors to broaden it so that it will attract general attention. But when he comes into the House and asks leave to have read a statement, which statement he represents to be a response to a very lengthy attack made by him in the RECORD, and which does not upon its face appear to be a statement of the person to whom it is attributed, it is entirely regular, fair and just that some one—it happened to be me in this instance—should rise and question the authenticity of the statement.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 15 our very industrious colleague from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] inserted a speech of more than 22 pages in length, which is a direct attack upon the War and the Navy Departments, and which throughout breathes the spirit of corruption and of graft, and which in some instances directly asserts that officers of the Government serving under our distinguished Democratic President, Woodrow Wilson, are in league with certain trusts and combinations for the purpose of making money and making it corruptly.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I can not yield just now. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER], having gone thus far in the RECORD, proceeds this morning, under time granted to him by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], to have read an article from a newspaper, which, according to his statement, is in answer to his lengthy speech of February 15. The gentleman from Illinois stated in his address of this morning—a stenographic copy of this address being before me—that he, the gentleman from Illinois, having called attention to the fact that—

> Four firms, which constitute the War Trust of this country, have drawn down $175,000,000 worth of contracts from the Government for munitions of war, and that Army and Navy officers have permitted these four concerns to outrageously overcharge the Government for every dollar's worth of those supplies—

therefore he calls attention to the fact that Gen. Crozier—and that comes very close to an implication that Gen. Crozier is one of the officers who is permitting the Government to be "outrageously charged"—

> That Gen. Crozier, the present Chief of Ordnance, who does the buying of these supplies for the Army, was formerly in partnership with the Bethlehem Steel Co.; that he was in partnership with them on the day he was made Chief of Ordnance—

And so forth. Having made this fling, the gentleman from Illinois says:

> My attention has been directed to an answer by Gen. Crozier to the charges which I have made, and I think, in fairness to Gen. Crozier and in order that his views may be in the RECORD, as mine have been placed in the RECORD—

And so forth. That this alleged statement by the general should be read from the Clerk's desk, and so forth.

Now, it was patent to every Member who listened to the newspaper article which the gentleman sent up to the Clerk's desk to be read that it did not emanate from Gen. Crozier; that it was just as I said when breaking into the reading of the article, observing that it was unfair, that the article iself represents a man of straw set up to be knocked down. That is to say, the gentleman from Illinois, having made his charges, 22 pages in length, which charges have not been responded to, discovers a newspaper dispatch saying that Gen. Crozier contemplated doing so and so, and that Gen. Crozier might reply. That is the only basis for the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that Gen. Crozier proposed to do anything.

I said that this was not a fair method of procedure, and I was interrupted by certain calls from the floor, indicating that I was very much out of order and that I ought not to proceed. Now, in the speech of the gentleman from Illinois of February 15, after he has roasted Gen. Crozier, he says very much as he says in offering this newspaper statement about this man of straw, this bugaboo that he intends to knock down:

> I do not desire to do Gen. Crozier the slightest injustice, and, on the other hand, I am equally anxious that no injustice be done the taxpayers of this country.

He compliments the general, but he proceeds to lambast him just about as severely as a first-class, energetic newspaper writer is capable of doing, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is all that.

Now, in the course of my effort to reply briefly to the newspaper statement that was read, in order to explain that it was not a statement from Gen. Crozier, in order to have it appear in the RECORD that something was being used that was not, apparently, furnished by Gen. Crozier, there came certain objections, cries of "Sit down," cries of "the gentleman is out of order," suggestions, and catcalls from Members who did not address the Chair that I "should take my seat"; suggestions that I was the representative of the Steel Trust. Although some of them were undoubtedly jocular, these suggestions about the trusts came from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER], from the distinguished and always deliberate gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], and they also came with some explosive violence from the distinguished Democratic interrupter of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

These gentlemen said that because I was endeavoring to play fair and have the House do the decent thing toward a Federal officer under a Democratic administration, who was not here, that I was speaking in the interest of trusts and combinations. Of course, to me that insinuation is the veriest joke. To my constituents it would be laughable. Those who know me and have watched me here know that I have been as outspoken on this floor against illegal trusts and combinations as any Democrat ever dared to be. I have not even fallen in with the more recent Democratic notions that the Shipping Trust must be taken care of by the purchase of foreign ships; that the Railroad Trust must be taken care of, even from the White House, by increasing the freight rates in order that the railroads may have larger profits; that the Oil Trust and the Cotton Trust may have more protection by the purchase of ships to enable them to make more money; that the great shippers and exporters of the country must have an insurance company, paid for by the money of the people, in order that exporters may loot the people a little. All these things I have not fallen in with under this Democratic administration. I have protested against the modern Democratic forgetfulness of the common people of the land and their falling into hands of the trusts. I have wondered why they did it, whether it was for the purpose of securing campaign funds or not I do not know. It may have been to get on the right side of the "big interests" with the hope of continuing the last Democratic administration for another term.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will not yield. I have not been able to agree with the gentlemen who represent the trusts of this country upon the Democratic side of this House——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I hope it will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MOORE. Well, as the gentleman is the special representative of the President of the United States, who recently received 62 representatives of the "big interests" in order that a better understanding might be had as to how the business of the country could be restored and normal conditions be resumed, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman infer that the President of the United States coerced the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. MOORE. Oh, I make no such intimation. It is a fact, however, and the gentleman may ponder over it, that after the railroad presidents of the United States visited the White House and told the President their troubles, the President of the United States did issue a statement, saying that the railroads ought to have consideration, and that the freight rates ought to be increased. It has happened that the Interstate Commerce Commission has taken the same view of the situation that the President did, and has granted an increase of rates. Under a Democratic administration that formerly stood for the downtrodden people of the land and was forever against private monopolies, and particularly against railroad domination, that is pretty good.

Mr. WALSH. Let the gentleman be fair to the President, and say——

Mr. MOORE. That is as far as I can yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman ought to know that he did not coerce the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MOORE. I did not say so. If the gentleman is going to be the President's sole defender on this floor——

Mr. WALSH. I do not pretend to be the President's sole defender on this floor——

Mr. MOORE. Why, then the gentleman will be the only Democrat who has responded to the Washington Post's Macedonian cry for help from Democratic Members to stand up and defend the President against the so-called vicious attacks that the Republicans are poking into the present administration. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman should be fair.

Mr. MOORE. I am as fair as I can be under the circumstances. People who were prosperous in the gentleman's own district under the last Republican administration are now out of work. The people employed in the potteries up there are now seeking employment. They lost it because they voted for the gentleman's friend, now the President of the United States. They had the false notion that they could have continued prosperity under a low-tariff system. The gentleman knows that very well, because the slogan of the gentleman's campaign was "Walsh works with Wilson"; the result was that Walsh was left at home. I think the people of Trenton will verify that.

Mr. WALSH. Sometimes merit is not recognized at first, and there is still hope. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE. The outlook is not very cheerful.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Gladly, if the gentleman will give me more time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman think that a real Democrat at any time takes suggestions from the Washington Post as to what a Democrat ought to do?

Mr. MOORE. Well, sometimes the Post speaks out only in the interest of the Democratic Party. Its editor and proprietor is an excellent Democrat; he gives the party good advice from time to time. [Laughter.]

It seems to me that it ought to be stated now, in view of the protests that arose from the Democratic side a moment ago against a Republican Member daring to take his feet to even ask for fair play for a Democratic officeholder, that we ought to find out the origin of the case. I do not know whether Gen. Crozier is a Republican or a Democrat, and I do not care. I have not taken the trouble to call up Gen. Crozier or any of his friends to find out what his attitude is on these charges that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] has brought against him. I do not know whether he knows that his name was used in this body to-day or not. I speak only in the interest of fair play, and just now I am endeavoring to trace the origin of the man whom the Democrats did not want defended on this floor a little while ago, but whom they apparently desired to denounce, and whom they would connect with the great trusts of this country.

Let us see where he came from. I understand he was a captain in the Bureau of Ordnance some years ago, and that he was the inventor of what is called the disappearing gun carriage. I am not going into details, because they are technical, and I have not the finesse in that regard of my distinguished friend from Alabama, Capt. HOBSON. But in a departmental report signed by the Hon. Daniel S. Lamont, Secretary of War, and a very clever Democrat he was, I find this—the report was for the year 1894:

> The establishment of type disappearing gun carriages for 8-inch and 10-inch guns, invented by officers of the Ordnance Corps and believed to be unequaled for rapidity and simplicity of action by any carriage elsewhere in use, is a notable achievement of the year. This problem solved, the armament of our harbors may now be prosecuted as rapidly as means are available.
> At the date of the last annual report of the department a selection of a type carriage for 8 and 10 inch guns was expected within a few months. Since then the 8-inch Buffington-Crozier disappearing carriage has been tried with results, as stated by the Board of Ordnance, exceeding for rapidity and smoothness of operation the most sanguine expectations of this board. The carriage is the combined invention of Col. Buffington and Capt. Crozier, of the Ordnance Department, and reflects credit on the inventive skill of American officers.
> It is a satisfactory solution of one of the most difficult problems which has confronted military science.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, Daniel S. Lamont signed this report. He was a Democrat. It was indorsed by Grover Cleveland, a great Democratic President; and the origin of the scandal against Col. Buffington and Capt. Crozier started with the Democratic administration in 1894. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In extending these remarks, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the charges of the gentleman from Illinois seem to have been exploded long ago. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations and the House itself have grown tired of thrashing over this matter. If there was anything wrong with Gen. Crozier, why did Grover Cleveland in his annual message to Congress, December 7, 1896, referring to the invention of Capt. Crozier, say this:

> During the same year, immediately preceding the message referred to, the first modern gun carriage has been completed and 11 more were in process of construction. All but one were of the nondisappearing type. These, however, were not such as to secure necessary cover for artillery gunners against the intense fire of modern machine rapid-fire and high-power guns.
> The inventive genius of ordnance and civilian experts has been taxed in designing carriages that would obviate this fault, resulting, it is believed, in the solution of this difficult problem.

Apparently Gen. Crozier has had the confidence of every administration from the days of Grover Cleveland down to the present time. He appears to have the confidence of the administration of Woodrow Wilson, and I am at a loss to understand why, if he began with Cleveland and continues under Wilson, there should be any good reason for refusing him a decent hearing in a Democratic House of Representatives. It is not my case; it is yours.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. HOBSON. Which gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, a good many things have been said about the President coercing the Democrats into supporting the shipping bill. I think I know the sentiment on this side. Two-thirds of the Democrats over here were for the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Two-thirds?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; and only 16 excused themselves, and of those, only 14 finally voted against the bill. The Progressives on that side voted with us, and I am not sure but that one or two Republicans did.

A MEMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, the Republicans may have voted solidly against the bill.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. I know the gentleman wants to be accurate. Five Progressives voted for the bill and seven voted against it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, that is one time that the minority of the Progressives were in the right, and the majority was in the wrong. [Applause.]

I knew the bulk of the Republican Party stood that way. The President of the United States does not need any defense at the hands of anybody here. His great work speaks for itself. The Republican Party is taking advantage of a distressing condition that exists in this country on account of war. One half the world is at war and business is disturbed along various lines. You are playing politics at a time when you ought to be supporting, with all your heart and head, this great chief in the White House. You are undertaking at this time to play politics; but, gentlemen, it is going to turn on you, and we are going to turn it on you in the campaign of 1916. The people will have learned long before then that conditions which are distressing business were brought about by the war in Europe. You are going to tell them and you have been telling them that it is caused by the tariff. Canada has a high tariff, and yet business is in an awful fix in Canada, and it is war that has caused it. War has injured conditions there just as war has injured conditions here.

Mr. FOWLER. Has not Germany the highest protective tariff of any country in the Eastern Hemisphere?

Mr. HEFLIN. And yet gentlemen will say that the war had nothing to do with disturbed business conditions in Germany. They would say that it is the Democratic Party in the United States that has done it, and that is what they would have the people believe. But you can not fool the people with these things.

The President of the United States is fighting the greatest trust on the earth, the Shipping Trust. It is owned by people who live in foreign countries, and you gentlemen have shown your great friendship and sympathy for the people here by supporting the foreign Shipping Trust. You will also have that to meet in the next campaign. And the obstacles which you are trying now to place before this great man of peace in the White House will rise up to haunt you in the next campaign. Let me appeal to your patriotism once. Cease this effort at a political play and put the good of your country and the good of the American people one time above your insatiate desire to return to power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I did not know that general debate was going to be continued on this subject. I have no objection.

In what I had to say a few minutes ago I stated my position upon a certain proposition, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has repeated the language of the street, which we hear so often from those who do genuflections and swing censers before the President of the United States, that those who opposed the shipping bill were actuated by friendship for and interest in the Shipping Trust. That does not refer to me; but since the suggestion has been made I will ask, Where is the Shipping Trust in the country? It is the coastwise trade, and everybody knows it. Who are the people who have stood in the way? I do not mean Members of Congress. I never reflect upon the views or motives of Members of the House. Men who have honor and character enough to receive the votes of their constituencies and to be entitled to seats in this Congress are above suspicion of their motives and ought not to have their motives or their votes questioned, unless some proof can be brought against them. I despise that sort of argument and criticism against Congress, and I take it for granted that every Member of this House is as honest in his motives as I am, and I would resent the suggestion that I am in any way influenced in my vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. I can not yield. I will yield in a moment. But the country knows and everybody knows that those of us who could not give our support to the shipping bill in the caucus agreed to support it if gentlemen would agree to make it temporary and would strike a blow at the great Shipping Trust—the coastwise trade—and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and the people who thought as he did, headed by him, voted it down. We got 58 votes for it, but it was voted down. Now, "let the galled jade wince. My withers are unwrung."

Mr. HEFLIN. I should like to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the gentleman from Georgia know—I want to state to him that I did not have him in mind.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know you did not. You ought not to have had anybody in mind.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not have the gentleman in mind. I was replying to the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], and had no reference to the gentleman from Georgia at all.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say this in reply to the gentleman from Georgia——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want just an opportunity to speak for two minutes. I did not intend to cast any reflection on the gentleman from Georgia. I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman refers to what occurred in the caucus, about making a limitation on this purchase of ships. I want to say to the gentleman that that is exactly what the trust wanted. Whenever he asks this Congress to set a time to sell these ships, the trust rejoices, because it knows that nobody but the trust will bid and buy, and we did not want the Government to be helpless in the hands of the trust when it got ready to dispose of these vessels. We did what we thought was right. We followed the suggestion of the Senate Democrats, of the President in the White House, and the majority of the Democrats on this side. It has become the policy of the Democratic Party, and I choose to stand beneath the unfurled flag of my party, and I will stand and fight in the open, with Woodrow Wilson and four-fifths of the Democratic Senators and nine-tenths of the Democrats in this House. That is where I stand on this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I choose to stand with my party. I always did. I stood for it, I apprehend, when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was in his swaddling clothes. I do not propose to permit him or anyone else to say where I shall stand, nor do I propose to permit him or men who entertain views not Democratic, and not drawn from Democratic sources, to drive me out of the Democratic Party. They may go, but I shall stay. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $165,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 1, by striking out the figures $165,000,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $164,000,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, according to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions there remained at the end of the last fiscal year $7,658,572.87 surplus of the $169,000,000 appropriated under the bill of that year. When the commissioner was before the committee that was preparing this bill he stated positively at that time that he was satisfied that $165,000,000 would be sufficient. Since that time he has further information, and on February 5, 1915, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations received this letter:

DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: I understand that your committee has made a reduction of $166,000,000 to $165,000,000 in the appropriation for pensions during the fiscal year 1916. It will be entirely safe to make a further reduction of $1,000,000 from this amount, making the appropriation $164,000,000.

Cordially, yours,

———————.

That information was obtained after the committee had made its report to this House, and, therefore, following the suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee what is the annual reduction in the pension fund occasioned by the deaths of the old soldiers?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; it is in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice here that in 1912 the reduction was $4,319,000. I presume it is much higher this year.

Mr. BARTLETT. The number of deaths during the year 1914 was 33,639.

Mr. STAFFORD. What were the total reductions occasioned by those deaths?

Mr. BARTLETT. It left a balance, as I stated to the gentleman, of $7,658,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I understood the gentleman, he stated $169,000,000 were appropriated, and there was a surplus of $7,000,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; that was the surplus. They did not pay it out.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would leave a balance of $161,000,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And yet, notwithstanding the surplus, you are appropriating $164,000,000 instead of $161,000,000, and not taking into account the savings that will result by the increasing deaths of the old soldiers as the years go by. Does not the gentleman think there will be still a surplus of many million dollars if we appropriate $164,000,000?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I do; and if the gentleman will offer an amendment to make it $161,000,000 I will vote for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is in charge of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am in charge of a bill that has been agreed to by a committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. From the figures presented by the gentleman for last year we appropriated $169,000,000, and there was a surplus of $7,000,000. That means that only $162,000,000 are necessary, and certainly with the continued deaths the figure that would be sufficient would be below $160,000,000. It does not require any argument to show that, because in 1912 the reductions in pensions occasioned by deaths at that time amounted to $4,338,000, and certainly as the age increases the reduction increases also.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is true. I endeavored to do that. I read from the hearings at page 8:

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it likely that you would have as much unexpended balance at the end of the next fiscal year as you had at the end of the last fiscal year

Mr. SALTZGABER. No, sir; I hardly anticipate that much, because the appropriation has been reduced all the time.

Mr. BARTLETT. You will have as much ratably or comparatively?

Mr. SALTZGABER. That is pretty hard to answer. I do not know just the meaning of the word "ratably" in that connection.

Mr. BARTLETT. In other words, if on an appropriation of $169,000,000 you saved $7,658,000, on an appropriation of $166,000,000 you would save as much, would you not?

Mr. SALTZGABER. No, sir; not necessarily. The amount required is diminishing, but the estimate was made $3,000,000 less to start with on that account. Now, as I have said to you, probably less than that will be required, though just how much less is a matter of speculation.

Mr. BARTLETT. If we give you $165,000,000, that will meet all the requirements?

Mr. SALTZGABER. I think that will be all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk reads as follows:

"From and after July 1, 1916, no pension shall be paid to any person who resides in a foreign country, and who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I feel reasonably sure, from the discussion and comments which this amendment has received, that it represents the real sentiment of the American soldiers themselves. I am certain that it represents the sentiment of the rest of the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why does the gentleman put this off to July 1, 1916? Why does he not make it effective July 1, 1915?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that this amendment was considered in the Sixty-second Congress and was very vigorously opposed by some of the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. One of the questions they raised was whether the department could get ready to put it into force during the current year. In my own judgment it can be put into force, and I have drawn and will offer, if this amendment is defeated, a limitation upon the existing appropriation. I am not sure but that both ought to go in, but I am perfectly certain that no possible injustice can result if we give them the fiscal year in which to ascertain and prepare for this change.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have now nearly five months before this appropriation becomes available.

Mr. BORLAND. That is true; but this amendment will get more votes than the amendment the gentleman has in mind. I know that from experience.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions upon this subject?

Mr. BORLAND. The opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions is very decidedly in favor of this amendment. I quoted that in my speech this afternoon, and I have it here in the hearings on page 21. The present Commissioner of Pensions is an old soldier and has the confidence and respect of the entire body of old soldiers of this country. I read from the hearings:

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to ask a formal question, and I do not ask the commissioner to answer it if he does not desire to do so: In your judgment, Mr. Commissioner, is it proper for a man who rendered service in the Civil War or any other military service for the United States Government, and who because of that service was placed upon the pension roll, to be deprived of that pension because of the fact that subsequently he declared his allegiance to some other country than the United States? In your opinion, Mr. Commissioner, should or should not that fact bar him from receiving the pension that he obtained as a service pension because of his service to the United States? You need not answer that question if you prefer not to do so.

Mr. SALTZGABER. I have an opinion on the subject, and it is this: I am so thoroughly American that I believe that a man who abjures his allegiance to this country ought not to receive any reward from it.

So that the present Commissioner of Pensions has a clear-cut opinion which he does not hesitate to express. I am very glad to find that my colleague from New York, Mr. GOULDEN, an old soldier in the Union cause, and my colleague from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, agree very heartily in the absolute justice of this provision and the relative justice of it to the old soldiers who remain under the American flag and who contribute to the expenses of the American Government.

They have no sentiment, such as gentlemen who have opposed this in the past seem to think, that this is some kind of an injustice to the American soldier. In fact they take the opposite view, that this is an act of justice to the American soldier, who, in the last analysis, through himself, his sons, and family pay the taxes out of which these pensions must be paid.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Would not the gentleman's amendment deprive a widow of a pension whose husband fought for the preservation of our Union, who now lives say in Ireland or Canada? Would it not deprive them of pensions?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, that objection has been raised also and made much of; and I want to say to my friend from Illinois, whom I know is perfectly sincere in asking the question, that as long ago as 1893, when this matter first came up, the question was raised then whether some of the widows or dependent mothers of soldiers who were foreigners and never became citizens of the Nation would not be affected by this provision. At that time, in 1893, there were less than 3,000 of these foreigners drawing pensions, whereas to-day there are over 5,000 of them. Now, the gentleman will see that if there are any widows in Ireland, or dependent mothers, their number ought to decrease very rapidly after the war and not increase at this rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. My own judgment is this: That while there may be some widows remaining—I doubt whether there are any dependent mothers—if there may be some widows remaining in foreign countries whose husbands came here and fought and died under the American flag, we could very easily take care of those cases by special bills; in fact, when that question was put to the commissioner as to how we could deal with exceptional cases of foreigners who ought to have some reward from the Federal Treasury he said the way to deal with it was by a special bill in Congress. And these special bills would not amount to anything near the million dollars we are now dispensing. Another point that the commissioner made is this: We provided in the last bill—Sixty-second Congress—that pensions should be paid by checks instead of by vouchers. Well, that saved a good deal of time and some expense to the pensioner in getting his money and the trouble of going down and signing the voucher. It was an awful fight to get that through. I happened to be one of the conferees on the part of the House, and it took us three or four months, against a most bitter fight of these men who are capitalizing this pension business all over the country, to get that kind of an amendment into the law. Yet the commissioner says to-day that there is a saving made of $145,000 in the annual expense of running his office every year; and not only that, but it saves from one to eight days' time of pensioner in getting his money and he saves the expense and trouble of executing his voucher.

In addition to that, he says that that safeguard can not be extended to foreign pensioners; that he must continue to pay by voucher to foreign countries because there is no way of applying our fraud laws to a foreign country. If somebody over there continues to get a pension check after the pensioner died and continues to cash it, we can never reach him until some casual information comes through some American consul or otherwise that that pension ought to be stopped. That there is no way of our controlling that in foreign countries——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. In answer to the objection of the gentleman from Illinois, I will state it in this way: I heard the argument made by the gentleman from Tennessee a year ago on this question. Now, if there are any of these Irish widows, or widows of other countries, who are deserving of a pension, I will agree to get a private pension for every one of them.

Mr. BORLAND. They could very easily obtain them. But the main point is this: We might as well solve this question now as at any other time. We could not get into a war with any country on the globe without finding part of our own money, and perhaps men who are drawing pensions from this Government, under arms opposing us. It would perhaps be voluntary and perhaps by draft, but at least we would be fought by our own men and our own money. No nation in the world has ever done that or ever ought to do it, and we ought not to continue to do it.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman just a moment?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Commissioner of Pensions, at the suggestion of the committee, has prepared a letter, which can be read, that would reach the situation by asking certain questions.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I have seen this letter prepared by the commissioner, and I will ask to have it inserted in the RECORD, so that it may be before the House. It consists of four questions. The commissioner says it would be very easy in sending out the next pensions to foreign countries to insert the letter, and have it returned with the answers, and that the expense would be but trifling.

Mr. COOPER. Would the gentleman read those questions?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I will. I may overrun my time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will give you more time.

Mr. BORLAND. It says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS, Washington, ———, ———.

———— ————:

Please answer the following questions for the information of the Congress of the United States and return this circular in the same envelope with your next voucher for pension.

———— ————,
Commissioner of Pensions.

1. Where were you born?
2. Name the countries in which you have resided since your birth, and the years of your residence in each country.
3. Of what country are you now a citizen?
4. Were you ever a citizen of any other country; and if so, name the country and State, how you became a citizen thereof, and how your citizenship was terminated?

Signature: ———— ————.

Post-office address: ———— ————, ———— ————.

Now, there are four simple questions. It discloses exactly what Congress wants to know, whether this pensioner was ever a citizen of the United States, and whether——

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman a question, which, with his answer, will, I think, embody the whole argument. Does the gentleman believe that it would have been wrong for the Government of the United States to pension Von Steuben, the German, or Lafayette and Rochambeau, the Frenchmen, or Kosciusko and Pulaski, the Poles, who helped to win our freedom, and then went back to Europe?

Mr. BORLAND. Congress, I think, did vote special ones to each of those gentlemen.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; it did. And why should it not have pensioned them as long as they lived? [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. They are all dead.

Mr. BORLAND. That is not the question involved.

Mr. COOPER. Some of these other men came from Europe and helped 50 years ago to save the flag of the United States, and ought to be pensioned as long as they live, and wherever they live, for the same reason exactly. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. That very question was asked Mr. Saltzgaber, the Commissioner of Pensions, and my recollection is that it appears in the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes' extension.

Mr. MANN. How long is this going to run?

Mr. BORLAND. No longer than five minutes, so far as I know, unless some other gentleman wishes to speak.

Mr. FOWLER. I want some time.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman want to agree to time?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I just simply wanted an explanation.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not want to make an explanation while the gentleman was on the floor.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to have the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], because I do not want him to base upon exceptional cases a general rule. I do not want him to come here and say that there might be some distinguished gentleman that ought to be recognized, and that that is a good reason why a lot of men who expatriate themselves and take up homesteads in Canada ought to continue to draw pensions. Listen to what the commissioner said about that:

Mr. SALZGABER. I think that if there is any foreigner who came to this country and rendered service to it in the time of its peril, if that service was of conspicuous merit it would be a matter for Congress to deal with.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SHERWOOD. That is what they did with Lafayette when he came over here. The Congress gave him $110,000 in gold.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no question but that Congress should deal with those cases. But we should not ask the American taxpayer to pay a lot of pensions to men who have abandoned this country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it was only a few years since that Congress put a man—a prominent Democrat, I think—Gen. Osterhaus, on the retired list as major general. He does not draw a pension. He draws the pay of a retired major general. I believe he lives in Germany. I would not take it away from him. Would you?

Mr. COOPER. No.

Mr. MANN. It was only recently that you on that side of the House voted to put him in that class. The proposition came from the Democrats of his drawing the pay of a retired major general, but your proposition is that if some poor German came over and fought for the preservation of this Union and went back home, and is drawing $12 a month, you will take it away from him. But you leave the general to draw $7,500 a year.

Mr. BORLAND. Would it not be better for the gentleman to leave politics out of this?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had 15 minutes. Let me have a few minutes. I did not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman without his consent.

Mr. MANN. Let me proceed for a moment. This proposition has been before this House on several occasions. Everybody knows it will not become a part of the law when this bill is passed. I do not believe that it will pass this House. It certainly will not pass the Senate at this session.

We are trying to avoid on this side of the House a special session, but gentlemen on that side keep injecting propositions that may cause one. What are the facts in the case? There are 5,163 of these pensioners living in foreign lands, and their pensions amount to a little over $1,000,000. That is $200 a person on the average. More than half of them live in Canada. Those in Canada consist of two classes: First, the men or their widows who came over the border during the war and volunteered, with no obligation except the moral desire to help preserve the Union. [Applause on the Republican side.] Do we owe them nothing? They came from a foreign country to fight for us. Do we owe them nothing? The other class consists of American citizens who have since the war gone to Canada, in the Northwest, in the hope that they may better their condition by taking homesteads there. They fought for the Union. Are we, in their older age, when they have gone out to help make the prairies bloom with crops, to take away from them our little pittance that we give to them?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MANN. No; not yet. Wait a moment. Nearly one-tenth of these pensioners live in Ireland. The Irish blood is always for liberty. [Applause.] They are always ready to fight for liberty. [Renewed applause.] They came over here as young men and fought in behalf of the country. Probably most of these pensioners are their widows who have gone back to the Green Island to spend their last days, being meanwhile dependent on the little pension of $12 per month which we pay them. Do you propose to take that away from them? That is what this amendment does.

And nearly one-tenth of these pensioners are in Germany. Do we propose now, in this condition, to take away from those pensioners in that land the little pension that we pay to them, when they were willing to help us in our hour of need and war? And will we repay them, when they need this little pittance, when they are at war, by taking it away from them? That would be base ingratitude, unworthy of any civilized being. [Applause on the Republican side, and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was offered to the bill in 1913, when the bill was in committee. It was adopted, and it was made a part of the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations. When the bill came before the House it was stricken out in Committee of the Whole, and when it got before the House itself on a roll call the House agreed to the amendment.

I do not know whether it was incorporated in the bill at the next session or not as it came from the committee. Anyhow, the amendment was offered on the floor. This bill does not carry the amendment. Neither the subcommittee nor the full Committee on Appropriations placed it there, although an effort was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] to do so, and he reserved the right to do as he has done and as he should do, holding the convictions that he does.

Now, as far as I am concerned, I agree with him about the amendment. I voted for it in the committee. I voted for it heretofore on the floor of the House on two occasions. I do not believe that anyone who was a citizen of the United States and who has adjured that allegiance and sworn allegiance to some foreign country ought to be permitted to tax the people of this country to continue the payment of the pension that he might be entitled to if he still remained a citizen of this country.

I at one time put into the RECORD, when this question was first up, a list of the leading countries of the world, which provided that within a certain time after a pensioner left the realm that he was a subject of and went to a foreign country he would be stricken from the roll, unless it should appear by his affidavit that he still retained his allegiance to the country which pensioned him.

Now, this amendment will in no way affect those who are temporarily residing abroad. It can affect only those who never did owe allegiance to the United States or to those who, having owed it, abandoned it and took up allegiance to some other country.

Now, it may be true, and I have no doubt it is true, that numbers of people came here from foreign countries and enlisted during the war from 1861 to 1865. It is a historic fact that many thousands of them were paid bounties and enlisted because they were paid bounties; and I to-day incorporated in the RECORD a list showing the amounts of bounties thus paid, aggregating something like $285,941,036, which the States paid to those people when they enlisted and $160,000,000 by the United States. And when they have received bounties and have received pensions up to this time, it seems to me that when men want to continue to draw pensions for which the people of this country are so highly taxed they should at least, when they go abroad, retain their allegiance to the flag of the United States and not forswear their allegiance to it.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Commissioner of Pensions is in accord with the veteran organization known as the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a member of that organization, and a prominent member, and in close touch with the organization. I understand that the feeling in the Grand Army is that whatever pensions are paid out should be paid to soldiers who have not renounced their allegiance to the United States. They want to save this $1,034,000 that is paid out to foreigners.

Now, this country is good enough for me to live in. I think if a man who served in the Army thinks some other country is more desirable, and he renounces his allegiance to the United States, the Government of the United States does not owe him anything.

Now, in answer to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says about the Canadians coming over here and fighting, it is true. But this amendment takes care of every soldier who was wounded or disabled in the service, so that it can do no injustice to any worthy soldier of the war, and I am in favor of the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], and I hope that it will not be adopted. These gentlemen who enlisted in the military service of our country had no contract with the Government that they should remain citizens of the United States after their services terminated.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FIELDS. Not now. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that these men who enlisted under our flag and helped to maintain our Union should now be remembered by us who enjoy the glories of the flag, and that we should not forget them, wherever they may be. I realize that the adoption of this amendment would make some saving in our appropriation, but I am one of those who believe that a time comes to all men when they should hold their patriotism above their pocketbooks. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will be defeated.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], the chairman of the committee, referred to the fact that these pensioners have left the United States as a matter of choice. Some may have done so. Others may not. Some may have crossed the Canadian line to follow their children. Should this great Government now deprive them of the pensions they earned in supporting the Government because out of love for their own children they have followed them into a foreign country? I say it is unfair, it is unjust, it is un-American, it is unpatriotic, and I hope the amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This proposition has been before the House three or four times in the past, and if my memory serves me right, after due deliberation it has always been voted down, I suppose on the theory that it would be an act of injustice to those who gave their bodies and their health when they were in the prime of life to be devoted to the service of this country.

Mr. SHERWOOD. This takes care of those who are disabled. This is another proposition.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I know that. I have personal knowledge of a number of cases of persons who live in Germany. They get $12 a month. If they were required, under this amendment, to return to the United States, they could not live on $12 a month, and most of them would become objects of public charity, while in the old country, surrounded perhaps by their kinsfolk and descendants, they can make both ends meet, even on $12 a month. And I want to assure the gentlemen of this House that every one of those men is as much of a patriot now as he was at the time he fought under the flag. [Applause.] There are laws in the European countries which require a man, after he has resided there for a certain length of time—I believe it is two or three years—to make his decision either to return to the United States or to become a citizen of the other country. Now, most of those men at the expiration of that time, with the aid of friends, return to this country for a trip, for the purpose of renewing their passports, and then they go back again. But there are others who are financially unable to make that trip. They are as good Americans as we are.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. All right. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman, I suppose, is familiar with the laws of Germany on this as on other subjects. Does he understand that the German Government pays pensions to men who are not German citizens?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not know.

Mr. LOBECK. I can answer that. A constituent of mine, Mr. August Carstens, in my home city of Omaha, wrote me a letter a few days ago, in which he said that he served in the Franco-Prussian War and in the Schleswig-Holstein War, and that he is now drawing a pension from the German Government, and he told me the amount. The letter is written in German. I do not happen to have it with me.

Mr. BORLAND. Is he an American citizen?

Mr. LOBECK. He is an American citizen, and has been ever since 1873.

Mr. BORLAND. They do not know it.

Mr. GORDON. They probably do not know it over there.

Mr. LOBECK. Germany does know it. That is one case in which Germany pays a pension to an American citizen.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to refer to a statement made by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. He said these men might die and we would not know anything about it, and that the pensions would continue to be paid to dead men. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that every one of these men has to register with the American consul and the voucher has to be executed before the consul, and a man has to present himself in person, and consequently there could be no such thing as a fraud on the Government. If there is, the American consul would have to be in collusion with the pensioner, and that is almost out of the question. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that this amendment, regarding it as most unjust, as I do, will not prevail.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, no man on the floor of the House during my service in Congress has been more careful and more considerate of the public Treasury than myself. But when it comes to the question of appropriating money for the necessary administration of the Government I have always cheerfully subscribed to a liberal sum. The question on the amendment now pending, it appears to me, in addition to the arguments presented by other gentlemen, is that if passed at this time it might be construed by some of the countries now engaged in war as an unfriendly act on the part of the United States.

While I do not go as far as to say that that would be done, yet I do say that to pass this amendment at this time, after having kept the law on the statute books for all these long years in the past, it might be construed by some at least as an unfriendly act on the part of this country.

To the men who gave their lives that my country might be free and that liberty might be preserved throughout the length and breadth of the land, I have a consideration which amounts to a devotion, and so long as I live I shall never be guilty of an act which will desecrate the great services of the soldiers who have made it possible for this country to be the greatest among all other nations. [Applause.] And as much as I am anxious, Mr. Chairman, for retrenchment at this time, I will not begin by starving the soldiers, their widows, orphans, and dependent mothers in order that we may have some little retrenchment. [Applause.] I would rather increase the pension of every soldier who fought to save the Union than to decrease a single one of them. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. How is it that the gentleman so radically disagrees with the members of the Grand Army in these vociferous remarks, in which he expresses himself as in favor of the soldier?

Mr. FOWLER. I understand from the soldiers in my district that I am in accord with their wishes, but as far as the Grand Army is concerned, I have a resolution in my pocket now to offer at the first opportunity to appropriate $20,000 out of the Treasury to help defray the expenses of their encampment in Washington during the coming summer.

Mr. Chairman, I would not, I will not vote against a measure that will bring to these soldiers, their widows or orphans, these soldiers now on the tottering side of time—I say I could not and I will not vote for a measure which may be construed as an assault upon the pensions of the soldiers of my country. [Applause.]

You pass this amendment, and it is only a question of time when other amendments will be offered, and there will be one assault after another until the pensions of the soldiers in this country will be seriously imperiled.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, old Dr. Johnson said, "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel," and he never uttered a truer word. We have to hear and read these buncombe speeches made by men who want to show their love for the old soldier by dipping deep into the public Treasury.

What is the question before the House? The question is as to cutting off a million dollars in pensions now paid to those who have renounced their allegiance to the United States and became citizens of foreign countries. The amendment excepts in every case those who sustained actual injury, clearly meeting the case mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] where they lost limbs or health. They are expressly excepted under the amendment. It simply cuts off those who are drawing pensions for other reasons than disabilities incurred in the service and who have renounced their allegiance to the United States. That is the proposition, and it seems to me, as a matter of common sense, it ought to be adopted. I do not think there is a nation on the face of the earth outside of our own that pays pensions to aliens.

The gentleman speaks of fraud. Any lawyer on the floor of this House knows that fraud committed in a foreign country may be committed with impunity in behalf of these alien pensioners and our courts have no jurisdiction to prosecute them. They are beyond the seas, beyond our jurisdiction, and beyond the reach of our process; and this law, which permits pensions to be paid to aliens in foreign countries, is simply placing a premium upon fraud, and when fraud is committed there is absolutely no remedy. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], respecting the chances of fraud in the payment of foreign pensions, I want to say I had an experience as American consul at Glasgow, Scotland, and under the regulations every pensioner was required to come to the consulate every three months, where he or she qualified to the necessary vouchers and were identified before the American consul. After that performance was completed the vouchers were transmitted by me to the Secretary of the Interior, and the pension checks were returned by mail. So there is absolutely no chance in the world of committing fraud against the Treasury of the United States in the payment of pensions to those living abroad.

In addition to the exemption stated by the gentleman, that these pensions should continue to soldiers who were diseased or injured, it does not cover the cases of widows of soldiers who live abroad, and I know of one or two instances in the city of Glasgow where we are paying pensions to the widows of Union soldiers. I hope the Members of this House will let these old defenders of the Union and their widows die in peace. [Applause.] They have only a few months or years to live. They are 70 and 75 years of age, beyond the seas in foreign lands, and we now propose to strike them down, to bring hardship and unhappiness to the hearts of every one of them who were willing to risk their lives to preserve the Union. The American Congress is now called upon to forget justice, to forget humanity, and to forget the services of these men in the time of the country's peril. No man in this House should vote for this unjust amendment.

Mr. GOOD rose.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to fix on some time when debate shall close on this paragraph and amendments thereto.

Mr. GOOD. I want only five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, my understanding is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] has a substitute which he desires to offer to the amendment.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I do not like this amendment very much, and I prepared an amendment to offer as a substitute in its place, but I do not believe I like that very much. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has changed his mind. I do not believe that this is a good time to cut these people off.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the opportunity of offering at least a pro forma amendment in order to make reply to some remarks which were made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] in charge of the bill in general debate when I was not present.

Mr. MANN. There is another paragraph.

Mr. PALMER. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this same proposition has been before the House every year during the past four years when we considered the pension appropriation bill. A few years ago I put into the RECORD the letter of Mr. Lochren, who was Commissioner of Pensions during the second administration of President Cleveland. Judge Lochren wrote in his annual report the following:

A clause of chapter 187 of the public acts of the second session of the Fifty-second Congress provides:

"That from and after July 1, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a nonresident, who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service."

I respectfully ask your attention to this clause, in the hope that you may recommend its repeal. It causes great trouble and annoyance to the excepted classes, who constitute the great bulk of nonresident pensioners, in compelling them to make proof that they belong to these excepted classes. And the final result is that payments under it are withheld from but few, save widows and dependent mothers, who have little else for their maintenance. The saving is too little to offset the suffering inflicted in individual cases. If all nonresidents were refused payment of pension some plausible argument might be made in support of such policy; but none can be urged in favor of this law, which, while giving annoyance to all, strikes only the most helpless.

I should not feel warranted in asking attention to this law but for the fact that it entails much work on this bureau, in answering communications, and seems to yield little practical results except annoyance and apparent cruelty. I recognize to the fullest extent that my sole duty is to execute and administer the laws as they are enacted—fairly and honestly interpreted.

Very respectfully,

WM. LOCHREN,
Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. No; I can not yield. That was the opinion of Judge Lochren, the Democratic Commissioner of Pensions under President Cleveland. What he says expresses my views, and I believe it expresses the views of the people of the United States.

The report on this shows that of those nonresidents who receive pension, 504 reside in Germany, and almost 500 of them in Ireland, and more than 400 in England. Does anyone suppose that any considerable number of those ever were citizens of the United States and have renounced their citizenships? Certainly not. According to the report of Judge Lochren a large majority of them must be the widows of soldiers who gave their services to the United States, and those widows are now receiving a small pension of $12 a month. By this amendment you propose to take it away from them. When their husbands enlisted in the cause of the Union we did not object to them because they came from Germany, or Ireland, or England, or Canada. We accepted their services, and when we enacted a pension law we called it a service pension. We gave a pension in accordance with the service which was rendered by the soldier, and now we are going to say, no matter how distinguished the service, if a person who rendered that service, or if his widow, lives in a foreign land, he or she shall not receive a penny of this service pension. I am opposed to the amendment. It has been defeated every time it has been offered; it ought to be defeated now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1916, $100,000.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, when the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] closed the general debate upon the bill I was not upon the floor, coming in just as he was uttering perhaps the last sentence. I was told afterwards that he had indulged in some remarks about the child-labor bill which passed this House day before yesterday and about myself, and cast some animadversions upon the great State which I in part represent upon this floor. Since then I have examined the reporters' notes of the gentleman's speech, and I find that the gentleman took it upon himself to defend the Constitution against the violent assault which was being made upon it by this child-labor bill and to defend the imperial Commonwealth of Georgia against the aspersions of a mere Pennsylvanian. I have the highest regard and respect for my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia. I have always considered him an able lawyer, a wise man, and a sincere man. I can not help but believe that he is too wise a man and has been too keen an observer of current events to hold me in any wise responsible for conditions in Pennsylvania. I grant that conditions with respect to labor in Pennsylvania are not what they ought to be, especially with respect to the conditions under which women and children are permitted to labor in that great industrial State. These conditions are caused by the fact, admitted now by all men, that that State is controlled in its governmental operations under a partnership agreement which has long been in force between the great protected interests of my State and the Republican machine; and I am quite sure that my friend, the gentleman from Georgia, will not suspect that I have any sympathy with either end of that partnership.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not mean to interrupt the gentleman without his permission, but I interrupted the gentleman to say I did not think he had anything to do with it.

Mr. PALMER. Well, the gentleman's declaration was it was my duty to remove the beam in the Pennsylvania eye before I undertook to extract the mote in the eye of the State of Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. That was a mere figure of speech.

Mr. PALMER. I have made some effort to remove the beam, and the gentleman must know that I have myself expended some effort and energy——

Mr. MANN. And money.

Mr. PALMER (continuing). At the cost of a seat in this House in order to better conditions in that great State. But I am against the exploitation of child labor——

Mr. BARTLETT. So am I.

Mr. PALMER. I am against the labor of women and children under improper conditions in my State and in my district just as much as I am against it in the State of Georgia. [Applause.] I have fought in Pennsylvania ever since I have been in public and political life to better the conditions under which men as well as women and children shall work, and my own district is one of the districts where conditions have not been what I would like to have them, and where I have made some fight to better them, as some of the gentlemen here present know. I regret that better progress is not being made in Pennsylvania; I regret that in regard to child labor it is one of the dark spots in the country, just as I regret Georgia is a dark spot; and I regret to say that despite the beautiful promises made in our State by the party candidates who were successful in the late campaign, word comes to-day from Harrisburg that the new governor of the Commonwealth has issued a declaration stating that though he is just as much for a proper child-labor law now as he was before election, still he thinks that business conditions in the State are such as to make it necessary to postpone consideration of that legislation until the session of the legislature two years hence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, since the gentleman is making an attack upon his own State, I desire to respond. I agree to the gentleman continuing as long as he pleases, if we may have an equal amount of time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] will proceed.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I expect to have some time.

Mr. PALMER. I shall certainly not object.

I am making no attack, Mr. Chairman, upon Pennsylvania. I have heard that kind of talk until I am tired of it. I am a Pennsylvanian, like my friend, the gentleman who represents a great Philadelphia district. I love my State. My people came there when William Penn nosed the good ship Welcome up the Delaware in 1682, and with his Quaker colonists founded his great experiment in the woods, and they have lived there ever since. And I hope I shall be buried beneath her beautiful hills. I love my State, but I would not believe that I could love her if I should stand silent when I see her despoiled by the machine that dominates that Commonwealth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Pennsylvania is one of the States where we have not protected the little children, and, with all due respect to the gentleman from Georgia, so is Georgia. He says he was the author——

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not say that I was the author——

Mr. PALMER. Well, that he had actively worked, perhaps, for child-labor legislation in Georgia; and yet I find that of 40 States in the Union which prohibit child labor under 14 years in mills and factories, Georgia is not one.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I say to the gentleman that is not correct? We have an act which prohibits it now, with children under 14 years.

Mr. PALMER. When was it passed?

Mr. BARTLETT. In 1908.

Mr. PALMER. I will say to the gentleman that what I am reading from——

Mr. BARTLETT. I have seen that publication, and I have taken occasion to put in the RECORD on two different times the statute of the State of Georgia, which shows what the law is.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield on that subject?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will look at the debate two years ago on this matter he will find that the statement is correct.

Mr. PALMER. I was about to say that while I have not examined this myself, this compilation was made by the agents of the child labor committee, who have gone over the matter with great care and in whose accuracy I have great confidence. Of 16 States which forbid child labor in mines and quarries, Georgia is not one. Of 16 States which forbid children working more than eight hours a day in mills and factories, Georgia is not one. Amongst 33 States which forbid any work by children under 16 years of age in mills and factories, Georgia is not one. And it does seem to me, therefore, that I was perfectly justified in the statement that the employing interests of Georgia are opposed to this bill, just exactly as they are opposed to the bill in Pennsylvania, where a strong and bitter fight has been made by the textile mill owners, as has been made by the cotton mills in Georgia, against any law which would forbid night work of children under 16 or work for more than 8 hours a day or more than 48 hours in the week.

Now, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] went on to impeach my Democracy, I assume because of the position I have taken in support of this bill, which to his mind is violently against the Constitution and against every principle of the party to which we both adhere. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be a great constitutional lawyer like my friend from Georgia. Before I came to Congress I was engaged for 15 or 16 years in the active practice of the law, being almost constantly busy in the trial of cases, many of them involving constitutional questions; and I have always been too busy trying cases and practicing law to indulge in the practice, which I find to be so common in Washington, of publicly expressing my views about the Constitution when the Constitution is not in issue [applause] and, because I approve of my own remarks, considering myself a great constitutional lawyer. [Applause.] The trouble with the gentleman from Georgia is that he comes from a school of lawyers who interpret the Constitution according to their own preconceived notion of what the Constitution ought to mean instead of according to what the Supreme Court says it does mean. They find the Constitution bounded by four corners which they set up in their own mind, and refuse to allow to the supreme judicial authority in the land the privilege of erecting the corners which shall mark the boundaries of that instrument. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. I have no manner of doubt that this proposed Federal child-labor bill is entirely constitutional. I get it not from some idea that I may have of what I think the Constitution ought to mean but what the Supreme Court has said time and again the Constitution does mean. Under the power to regulate interstate commerce I have no doubt that the Supreme Court will hold, when this law gets to it, as it will some day, I presume, that the Congress has full power to prohibit from interstate commerce any articles which are produced under conditions which inside of a State call for the exercise of the police power of a State.

The Supreme Court held that we may prohibit the transportation of so innocent a thing as a piece of pasteboard, representing a lottery ticket, because the use to which that lottery ticket may be put in the future is against the public morals. It has been held that we may prohibit from interstate commerce articles which endanger the agents and carriers in transportation, such as explosives and loose hay.

My mind is clear that if we can enact a law which the Supreme Court upholds, prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of articles which, though innocent in themselves, yet, because of the use to which they will be put, may be prohibited as being against the morals of the Nation, so we may by law prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of articles which have been produced in such a way as to operate against the morals of the Nation. If we may prohibit the transmission of articles in interstate commerce because of the final use to which those articles or products are put, we may follow them back to the system under which they were produced.

I shall not argue the constitutional question, but I do not believe that real constitutional lawyers who will discuss it and argue it in the light of the opinions of the Supreme Court, without being prejudiced by their own individual opinions upon its political and economic phases, will ever fail to hold that this law is entirely constitutional. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to undertake at this late hour to say anything much in reply to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has said. I want to say, however, that I did not know at the time that the gentleman was not in the House. I was informed that he was. I would have said what I did say had he been present, and he knows that, I am sure.

I do not arrogate to myself any great knowledge of constitutional law, Mr. Chairman, nor believe or consider myself or pretend to be any great constitutional lawyer, but I do believe, and, so far as I can judge from what the Supreme Court has decided in other cases, I am confident they will hold the bill he refers to to be unconstitutional, if it ever becomes a law. And believing that, in construing the Constitution of the United States, it is my duty when I come to vote upon a question that I believe is contrary to that instrument to vote against it.

Now, the Supreme Court of the United States in the lottery case did not decide that Congress had the right to prohibit the transmission of any legitimate article of commerce through the channels of interstate commerce. They distinctly decided in that case that they would not decide that such was the law. Great lawyers, among them one who has been Attorney General of the United States from the State of Pennsylvania, have in another body rendered reports from the Committee on the Judiciary in which they have questioned the constitutionality of laws like this.

I have no apologies, Mr. Chairman, to make for the assertion that I believe in the Constitution of the United States. I believe we should preserve it, Mr. Chairman, because only by preserving it can we maintain and perpetuate this Government. And I can not do better than to call attention to what was said by the great orator, Edmund Burke, upon an occasion when he was urged to agree to a certain bill for reform in the British Parliament, when he refused to advocate certain measures which, in his opinion, violated the constitution of Great Britain, though unwritten. He said on that occasion, "We should bear in mind that we have a Government to preserve as well as a Government to reform." And I am unwilling to give my adherence to the proposition that the Congress of the United States can do what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] says it can do, namely, exercise the power given under the commerce clause for the purpose of regulating or executing the police laws of the States.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Do not do me the injustice to say that I said anything of that sort.

Mr. BARTLETT. I so understood you.

Mr. PALMER. No. What I say is that the Congress has the right to prohibit from interstate commerce any product which was manufactured and produced under conditions which call for the exercise of the police power in the State where it was produced.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is virtually the same.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; it is. I beg the gentleman's pardon; that is the same—that if the State, in the exercise of its police power, has imposed upon it the duty of correcting certain evils that exist in it and fails to exercise that power, then it becomes the duty of the United States Congress to exercise the power of the interstate-commerce clause of the United States Constitution to regulate those things. Now, I do not profess to be a great lawyer, but I do not suppose that anybody who professes to be a great lawyer or to be a lawyer at all would make any such claim as that.

Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, I did not mean any reflection upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not doubt that he has used every effort, as he has stated, in his State to correct these evils. I would not have said anything about the gentleman or his bill if he had not challenged the votes of those who had voted against the bill in his speech in reply to my colleague [Mr. TRIBBLE]. I would have contented myself with simply voting my conviction. But I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I do not believe Congress has the right to exercise the power of the commerce clause of the Constitution to prohibit the transmission through the channels of commerce perfectly legitimate articles of commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want just five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that we should preserve the Constitution of the United States. I believe it is the great charter of our liberties, and that if we attempt, because the States do not exercise their reserve rights, to assume on the part of the United States Congress the power to pass police laws, then there is nothing left to it.

Mr. Chairman, the English people have a great constitution, which they call the Magna Charta, the chart of English liberty. I will conclude by quoting Stimson on the Constitution:

> It is a sad contrast between the way that so many of our people or our newspapers feel to-day, 120 years after the adoption of our Magna Charta, and the way the people felt in England, exactly the same time, 120 years, after the adoption of their own. For in 1253, 138 years after John's charter, in the thirty-seventh year of the reign of Henry III, a popular King, a great jurist, and a radical maker of new laws: "On the 3d day of May [I read from the statutes of the realm in Latin], in the great hall of the King of Westminster, in the presence of the King and his brother and the marshal of England and the other estates of the realm, we, Boniface, Archbishop of Canterbury, and the bishops of London, and Ely and Rochester, and Worcester, and Lincoln, and Norwich and Carlyle, and St. David's, all appareled in pontificals, with tapers burning, against the breakers of the liberties or customs of the realm of England, and, namely, those which are contained in the charter of the common liberties of England, excommunicate, accurse, and from the benefits of our holy mother the church sequester all those who by any craft or willness do violate, break, diminish, or change the statutes and free customs of the realm of England, to the perpetual memory of which excommunication we, the aforesaid prelates, have put our seals."
> So in 1253 they felt in England when they called attention to the great charter of English liberties, and so in 1910, to-day, when we love that great charter of English liberties and swear to observe the greater charter of American liberties, to-day we feel that the curses of those who love liberty should be visited upon those who violate it.

Mr. Chairman, these great lovers of English liberty and of the Magna Charta, for more than 120 years after it had been adopted, were accustomed to gather for the purpose of perpetuating that great charter and pronouncing condemnations against those who would violate it. Now, nearly 130 years after our great instrument was adopted, when we have lived under it and perpetuated our Government under it, I have no love for those who would destroy it by the means that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] undertakes to destroy it. I have no apologies to make to him or to any one else of these reformers who would destroy our Government in order to reform it. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am glad this discussion between my friends from Georgia and Pennsylvania [Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. PALMER] was confined, in large part, to constitutional lines, because I want to avoid that sort of a discussion. My regret is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who was sent for to come to the defense of his State in consequence of the attack of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], has seen fit to attack Pennsylvania rather than to defend it. My friend [Mr. PALMER] is a colleague for whom I have great respect. I especially respected him in the last campaign when he had the courage to accept a nomination for Senator from Pennsylvania in order to test out those views he entertained with regard to the spoliation of the State by the party in power. Everything he has said to-day about the State being despoiled he said with tenfold vehemence from every stump in every town he could reach with his own resources and those that were contributed to his campaign by wealthy patrons of the Democratic Party. But the people of the State did not accept the arguments and charges of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] at the valuation he has given them in his argument to-day.

The people of Pennsylvania heard all of this talk about the State being despoiled. There are 8,000,000 of them over there, and they are pretty sensible. About 1,000,000 of them voted. But when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who has not defended his State as I hoped he would to-day, came amongst the people of the State to tell them of the wrongs that had been inflicted upon them, he failed to tell them anything about the low tariff he had helped to inflict upon them.

The people of Pennsylvania knew the industrial record of the State for more than 100 years. They understood, for they had enjoyed the progress and prosperity that had resulted from a protective-tariff system; they knew it to be a mill-building rather than a mill-destroying system; a labor-employing, rather than a labor-despoiling system, and they were not especially enamored of the things my colleague undertook to say to them. They knew that in the matter of educating our children we spend more money in Pennsylvania for the public-school system, perhaps, than is spent in any other State of this Union, with the possible exception of one. They knew that 1,000,000 children were going to school in Pennsylvania, and that we had even a compulsory education law, of which my colleague [Mr. FARR] was the author when he was in the Pennsylvania Legislature. They knew we had a law regulating the employment of child labor. We have a law which prevents them from laboring under 14 years of age, and, with certain conditions, under 16 years of age. The people said, "We do not agree with you, Mr. PALMER, that this State, which has been builded up under a protective-tariff system until it is the most prosperous industrial community in the world, and until it has acquired the largest individual farming community in the country—we do not agree with you, Mr. PALMER, of Pennsylvania, when you say that this State, which under the old system has grown rich, which under the old system has kept all its people employed, which under this system has put itself absolutely out of debt—we do not agree with you, Mr. PALMER, that this great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has been despoiled." [Applause.]

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] persisted. He continued to tell his story from one end of the State to the other, and people who were ambitious for power, or who were fond of getting their pictures in the newspapers as belonging to the uplift, contributed largely to his campaign. The newspapers published his terrible tales of spoliation and reveled in the destruction of his opponent, but the people, the voters of the Commonwealth, knew what the gentleman stood for, and on election day they marched up to the polls and by a majority of more than 250,000 they buried Mr. PALMER and told him his charges were not true.

Mr. PALMER rose.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman want to ask me a question?

Mr. PALMER. I want to try to get a little time after the gentleman has concluded.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman says he can not remain silent while his State is being despoiled. The gentleman has told the people of his Commonwealth all this, but he has not been supported by those to whom he made his appeal. He should not find fault with them now.

Mr. DONOHOE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I yield to my colleague from an important industrial district of Philadelphia, and I suggest that before he asks me a question he answer one from me, as to whether there is not a great lack of employment in his district just now?

Mr. DONOHOE. I had rather answer it by propounding my own question first.

Mr. MOORE. Well, I would like to ask the gentleman an Irish question——

Mr. DONOHOE. On that I am at home.

Mr. MOORE (continuing). Whether it is true that in his district there is a tremendous number of the unemployed just now, due to a Democratic tariff law, of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] was partly the author?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOHOE. I will answer the gentleman by saying that there is a tremendous demand for a better child-labor law in our State.

Mr. MOORE. That may be. There is also a desire for it because a number of the ladies who do not have any children and who do not understand that the widowed mothers whose children must have some support are anxious to keep this uplift publicity game going. I have seen the children of the poor, who were supporting widowed mothers in wretched apartments, turned out of their employment and made to walk the streets because of the restrictions imposed by some of these laws.

But what I wanted to know of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who speaks of the despoiling of his State, whether there has been anything under heaven that has so tended to despoil our State, that was more prosperous than any other in the country, than the Underwood tariff bill, the steel schedule of which was written by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who now prates about the spoliation of his State?

Go into the mill districts represented in part by the gentleman who has just interrogated me [Mr. DONOHOE] and look at the long lines of unemployed to-day, who were actively and busily employed before the gentleman who speaks of the spoliation of his State got in his deadly free-trade work.

Go into my own district where the people got good wages two and a half years ago, happy men, women, and children, and where there was no great necessity for passing restrictive laws and see them to-day wending their toilsome, weary way to the soup houses to obtain the sustenance of life.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Missouri arises. He knows that there is a large number of unemployed in Kansas City. A newspaper clipping handed to me day before yesterday states that in Kansas City there are 5,000 men seeking an opportunity for employment. These are days of Democratic spoliation.

Mr. BORLAND. Whoever said that did not know what he was talking about, for it is not the fact.

Mr. MOORE. When we had the protective system, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows——

Mr. BORLAND. What was the condition in the gentleman's district in 1907?

Mr. MOORE. In 1907 we were doing as well as could be expected. [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" and laughter on the Democratic side.] The gentleman knows that in 1907 there was no tariff panic. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], just as all Democrats do, seeks to evade, when the tariff question is reached, by pointing to the financial panic of 1907 as an excuse for the wickedness of the existing tariff law, which actually took labor away from the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I can not yield, much as I like my friend from Illinois. He made a beautiful soldier speech to-day, but I have got to finish this. Only the other day the gentleman from Pennsylvania who speaks about the spoliation of his State voted to still further decrease the opportunities for labor in his State. He voted to take away from the shipyards of the Delaware River, where we build more ships and give more employment in this calling than elsewhere—he voted to take away the wages of men who are laboring there in order that the Government might take their money to build ships in foreign shipyards. The gentleman voted for the passage of that ship bill, which would take the bread and butter from the mouths of the workmen in his own district, where at the Bethlehem Steel Works they are now employed. When he voted to transfer American work and wages to foreign shipyards he contributed still further to that work of spoliation in Pennsylvania so unhappily begun when he assisted in putting the Democratic free-trade tariff law into effect. Spoliation of the State is not the brick the gentleman ought to throw.

Mr. PALMER rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would yield to me just a moment or two. I want to say to the Republican side of the House that I have asked the chairman of the Republican conference to call a conference of Republicans to-morrow afternoon to be held in the Hall of the House immediately after the adjournment of the House, in reference to a matter which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] communicated to me to-day; and I want to say that if there are any Members elect in the next House who are here, we want them to attend the conference as well.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE], are only another illustration of what I said awhile ago was the cause of the evils from which we suffer in Pennsylvania, and that is the fact that the government there is controlled by a combination between the most corrupt political organization in America and the most avaricious and greedy set of manufacturers on earth. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is perfectly natural, in view of the fact that the attack which we made upon this hog combine in Pennsylvania in 1914, and which resulted in a majority by 28,000 of the people of Pennsylvania repudiating its foremost friend and exponent, that when we go after the hog combine, it should squeal; and I have always observed that the smaller the pig the louder the squeal. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman says that what we argued for in Pennsylvania in 1914 was repudiated. Not at all. Nearly 30,000 more men voted against what the gentleman stands for in Pennsylvania this year than voted for it, and only because of the unfortunate circumstance that the enemies of this corrupt combine could not be joined upon single candidates is the gentleman permitted to boast that Pennsylvania to-day can have in the United States Senate a member of his own political party.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. BUTLER. I am obliged to the gentleman, but I did not quite understand him. Was there not a unity upon the candidate for governor?

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman is a gentleman of keen understanding, and he knows perfectly well what I meant when I said that the chief of the Republican organization in Pennsylvania was repudiated in 1914 by a big majority of the voters of Pennsylvania. He knows. When the gentleman says that it was the Underwood tariff law, for which I am partly responsible, that brought about that result in Pennsylvania, he knows that he is not speaking according to the facts. I make no apology for the Underwood tariff law, and in my district, the greatest industrial district in Pennsylvania and one of the greatest in the Nation, I have defended it upon every stump, and the voters have supported it by a big majority; and that great district, with one of the biggest steel and iron mills in America, will be represented in the next Congress, as in this, by a Jeffersonian Democrat who believes in the Underwood tariff law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will tell the gentleman—no, not him, because he knows—but I will tell other gentlemen what caused the result in Pennsylvania. It was not the tariff that beat the Democratic Party, it was rum—r-u-m—for the organized liquor traffic of Pennsylvania, operating alongside of the vicious interests which the gentleman from Pennsylvania always supports, threw into that campaign the largest campaign fund ever known in a State campaign in the history of our country, and it took, as the gentleman knows, more than a million dollars to seat a Republican Senator in the United States Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, the gentleman's party organization in Philadelphia and in the State has filed accounts in which they admit—admit—having spent $750,000 for that purpose, and my experience with the Republican machine is that what they do not admit is at least twice what they do confess. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. For a question.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman state how much was expended by the Democratic campaign committee in Pennsylvania in the last senatorial fight?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly. There was expended in the senatorial fight, and the fight for the State ticket included, approximately $75,000. Why, the gentleman knows that the Republican State committee in Pennsylvania when it filed its account admitted unpaid obligations exceeding in amount all that the Democratic Party expended in the State.

Mr. MOORE. That is evidence of honesty in expenditure—that we owed $90,000.

Mr. PALMER. I am waiting to see whether you pay it.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to ask the gentleman, since he has been personal, whether he would indicate how much money was spent in all by the gentleman who ran for governor of Pennsylvania on the Democratic ticket——

Mr. PALMER. Oh, well——

Mr. MOORE. He was a rich man.

Mr. PALMER. I do not remember, but I believe he accounted for $33,000, or something of that kind. I can not yield further.

Mr. MOORE. But the gentleman——

Mr. PALMER. It is so infinitestimally small in comparison with what the Republicans have spent it is hardly worth the time to consider it.

Mr. MOORE. Why does not the gentleman be fair and tell us what was spent on his side?

Mr. PALMER. I have said.

Mr. MOORE. What the gentleman and his colleague, who ran for governor——

Mr. PALMER. I have answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman has not; the matter has been concealed.

Mr. PALMER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania defends the action of the Republican legislature in our State in refusing to pass laws to protect little children upon the same old plea, the same old ground, that without those laws Pennsylvania has prospered and become rich and great. He says that our great textile industries, all of our industries have grown wealthy, and that is true. I know men who have woolen mills in our State who say they can consign them to the scrap heap and still show a great profit under Republican tariff laws. I do not deny that wealth has been produced, I do not deny that men have grown rich, but I do declare, as a Pennsylvanian, that the greed of these men, ever seeking additional wealth, ought not to be strong enough to grind down into the mire the little boys and girls, the mothers and fathers of to-morrow's generation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who knows as well as any man in our State the true Quaker spirit of that great old Commonwealth, when pushed into a corner, now defends the interests that he and his colleagues represent upon this floor, still when the question was presented day before yesterday, out of fear of the righteous wrath of the mothers of Philadelphia, he ran away and would not vote against this child-labor bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have no patience with the gyrations of a gentleman who tries to play both sides against the middle in that fashion.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman want me to tell him——

Mr. PALMER. He runs away from the wrath of the mothers and fathers of Pennsylvania, and at the same time defends the protected interests of our State. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, one word in reference to the Georgia statute, which I have sent for and received. The gentleman from Georgia says it was a liberal statute protecting children, and I notice it provides that no child under 10 years of age shall be employed. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. But the gentleman has not read it all.

Mr. PALMER (reading)—

No child under 10 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor in or about a factory or manufacturing establishment within this State under any circumstances.

Under certain conditions a child under 12 years of age shall not be employed, and in reference to children under 14 years of age it says:

On and after January 1, 1908, no child, except as heretofore provided, shall be employed or allowed to labor in or about any factory or manufacturing establishment within this State between the hours of 7 p. m. and 6 a. m.

I admit, though I do not pretend to be the lawyer my distinguished colleague from Georgia is, that under that law children under the age of 14 can work between 6 a. m. and 7 p. m., and I congratulate the gentleman in having a State in the same class with our own beloved Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman read the next section?

Mr. PALMER. I read it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has not read the next section.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to interfere with the discussion of the gentlemen that is not pertinent to this bill, but the hour is growing late, and it is desired, if possible, to start on another appropriation bill to-night.

Mr. MANN. Ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill close in five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all further debate on this paragraph close in five minutes, with the understanding that we will go on and pass the pension bill then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this bill close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, it surprises me that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] is willing to compare the child-labor laws of Pennsylvania with those of Georgia. In Pennsylvania a child under 14 years of age shall not work——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. I have only five minutes. If you could accord me a little more time——

Mr. TRIBBLE. I wanted to ask one question.

Mr. FARR. Unless that child can read and write he shall not work until he is 16. I want to say that no State of the Union has better factory laws, better child-labor laws than the State of Pennsylvania, and I defy the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] to disprove that statement. But my point is this——

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FARR. I have only five minutes.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman defies me.

Mr. FARR. If you will see that I get five minutes more I will yield. But the manifest unfairness of such a comparison does not any more astonish me than the gentleman's hypocrisy on the floor of this House——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR (continuing). Any more than his demagoguery on the floor of this House. The protected State of Pennsylvania, the men and women who are deprived of work, defeated the gentleman. So far as association with the corporations and the manufacturers of Pennsylvania is concerned, no man stands closer than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. He admitted on the floor of this House at the time that he was preaching this demagogism that he was the paid employee of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, of Scranton, and I say that he was a paid legal lobbyist in Harrisburg, fighting splendid measures in the interest of human welfare.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. Yes; if I can get more time to finish my statement.

Mr. PALMER. I shall not take much time.

Mr. FARR. Now, what I attack is the hypocrisy——

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. I do not like to be discourteous. I have made certain statements, and I shall yield to the gentleman. I think the House will be fair to me and accord to me any reasonable time I want.

Mr. PALMER. I simply ask the gentleman to yield for the purpose of permitting me to say that when the gentleman declares I, anywhere or at any time, made the statement that I was a paid lobbyist of any railroad corporation——

Mr. FARR. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. PALMER. That is exactly what the gentleman said. If the gentleman makes the statement——

Mr. FARR. I object.

Mr. PALMER. If he says that, it is absolutely false—and he knows it.

Mr. FARR. I say to the gentleman that I charge him now, as I charged him before, with being a lawyer in the employ of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, and also as a paid legal lobbyist in Harrisburg, fighting measures in the interest of the children and the women and for the highest human welfare of our people.

Mr. PALMER. And I say it is absolutely false.

Mr. FARR. It is true. No other State in the Union—and I challenge the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is befouling his own nest, to point to another State—compares in real, substantial progress in the interest of the people with Pennsylvania. It was the first to take up this great question of tuberculosis. It spent more money than all the other States combined in the investigation of the causes that led to that dread disease.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I would like to ask the gentleman to yield for a minute. I just want to correct the statement he has made. Massachusetts was the first State in the Union to take up the question of fighting tuberculosis. The old Bay State led the way in waging war against the dread white plague, and I am particularly proud to have had a prominent part in that kind of a campaign.

Mr. FARR. Massachusetts does not compare with Pennsylvania in that respect.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not in rotten politics, thank God!

Mr. FARR. Now, the reason the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] advances for his defeat in Pennsylvania is rum. The gentleman went all over the State of Pennsylvania talking against rum, and he came down here and voted for rum. The gentleman went all over the State with Mr. McCormick, his colleague on the ticket for governor, the former mayor of Harrisburg, talking about the toiling men and women and those who have suffered terribly as the result of the oppressiveness of corporations and manufacturers. Mr. McCormick when mayor of Harrisburg vetoed an ordinance presented to him, asking him to advance the price of labor from $1.35 to $1.50 a day when that city was spending vast sums for beautification.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes more, because the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has taken that much of his time.

Mr. HULINGS. Oh, we have already had too much of this "bunk."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HULINGS. I object.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MANN. You can not do that in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is unable to do that in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. PALMER (continuing). To answer the charges made against me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman has made more charges than all the other Members of the House combined, and he does not want anybody to reply to them.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 21161) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Let us get through with this bill first. The gentleman has the right to rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MANN. If that is the case, before we pass this bill I will raise the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman should allow me five minutes in view of the kind of talk that has been had on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] desires to state a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his request.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw my point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] makes the point that there is no quorum present. There were only 115 Members present when the Chair counted, and 2 more make 117. That is not a quorum. There is no quorum present.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. For no purpose at all. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, that a call of the House be ordered.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 43.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

During the calling of the roll Mr. DIFENDERFER occupied the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and thirteen Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. When the point of no quorum was made the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] had moved the previous question on the bill to its passage. That is the pending question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is a little late.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have moved to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is a little late, but the Chair wants to be on the safe side. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were refused, three Members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is. It is only a minute since the roll call disclosed a quorum.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Texas has made the point of no quorum on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that, but the Chair thinks there is a quorum here, because the roll call has just disclosed one.

Mr. MANN. Well, the rules require the Chair to count, especially on the passage of a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to be on the safe side, and will count.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman withhold his point a moment, to enable me to report an appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not withhold it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He can withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. He can withdraw it at any time before the count is made.

Mr. MANN. He can withdraw it, but he can not withhold it when the pending question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of no quorum. The bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20562. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2518. An act granting to the town of Nevadaville, Colo., the right to purchase certain lands for the protection of water supply; and

S. 5629. An act for the relief of certain persons who made entry under the provisions of section 6, act of May 29, 1908.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 7188. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Garden City, Kans.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 7515. An act to reserve lands to the Territory of Alaska for educational uses, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] was directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the fortifications appropriation bill. He was called away unexpectedly, and I present the bill in his behalf.

The bill (H. R. 21491) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 1416), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WHALEY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret the necessity which compels me to submit a few remarks upon the subject about which I am about to speak. Two weeks from to-day I retire from the House, and I had hoped that I might retire in peace, with the good will of all of my colleagues here, including all of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania. I do not believe in fighting. I am a Quaker, though I ask no particular consideration at anybody's hands on that account. I hesitate and I dislike to engage in altercation or controversy about personal matters; but for the second time my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR], has seen fit to cast aspersions upon my honor and integrity as a man, as a lawyer, and as a Member of this House. I made no reference to him and his attack upon me was wholly unwarranted and uncalled for. He has declared, and in fact he calls it a charge, that I am the paid attorney of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railway Co., and that I have been the paid lobbyist before the Legislature of Pennsylvania representing that corporation. As to the insinuation and innuendo contained in that statement, I pronounce it to be absolutely false. As to my employment by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., the facts are simple and are these, as I stated once before upon this floor, and as all of my people in my district know, and as everybody who is interested in Pennsylvania knows: For many years the office with which I am associated has been the local counsel of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. I inherited that client along with others from a very distinguished partner, who had been for many years a Member of this House and who was a judge upon the bench in our State. I represented it in the courts of my county in the usual way, trying damage, personal-injury, and other like cases, and in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and nowhere else.

I have not tried a case for the company since I have been in Congress. I have performed no legal service for the company since I have been in Congress. Before I came here I felt it to be perfectly proper for a lawyer to accept a railroad corporation as a client in proper cases. I still think that; and when two weeks from to-day I return to the practice of law I hope that I may have opportunities in proper cases to represent such and all other clients. I make no bones about that; and no honest lawyer has ever held any other position. [Applause.]

The gentleman declares me also to have been the paid lobbyist of that corporation.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PALMER. Oh, I know what the gentleman said.

Mr. FARR. I yielded to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. I decline to yield. The facts about that are these, that in the legislature of 1907, before I was elected to Congress, when every railroad corporation in Pennsylvania had been suffering from what is known as "strike legislation"—bills introduced by charlatans and crooks for the purpose of holding up railroad companies—they requested certain attorneys representing them to make legal arguments against these propositions before the committees of the house and senate. I was one of those lawyers. I never asked a member of the legislature to vote for or against any bill. I never interviewed any of them in the senate or the house personally about any bill.

I went before the committees of the legislature and made purely legal arguments upon proposed legislation in an open and public fashion. It was a part of my retainer that I should be permitted to oppose such measures as I believed to be vicious and to support such measures as I believed to be right, and I got in very bad odor with the representatives of railroad companies engaged in that work, because as to the two great pieces of legislation much controverted before that legislature I took a position which every other railroad attorney opposed. The two leading bills were the bill to make a 2-cent fare law in Pennsylvania and an employer's liability law. I stated to the committee that not only would I not oppose the 2-cent law, but that I believed it ought to be enacted into law; and as to the liability law, it was introduced into that legislature by a gentleman who is now a Member of this House, Mr. CASEY, of Pennsylvania, and is known to-day on the statute books as the Casey employers' liability law, and out of all the numerous liability laws that were pending in that legislature I pronounced it to be the best and fairest, and gave it my support before the committee of the legislature. [Applause.] That was the extent of my activities at Harrisburg when retained by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has stated that he went to Harrisburg primarily on a retainer for the railroad company to appear against certain bills.

Mr. PALMER. Such as I might deem bad.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has spoken of two bills which he favored. I judge those were not the bills he was paid a retainer to oppose. Will he not tell us about the bills that he appeared and lobbied against or argued against?

Mr. PALMER. Oh, well, there were a number of them——

Mr. FARR. You bet there were.

Mr. MANN. I would say that was in performance of the retainer. I do not think the other was.

Mr. PALMER. I do not mind saying. For instance, somebody introduced a bill requiring the railroads of Pennsylvania to abolish every grade crossing within the State upon the enactment of the law. I opposed that measure. It would have ruined every railroad company in Pennsylvania as drawn. Another bill, a very common one——

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. BLACKMON. I want to ask the gentleman a question, and that is if he believes that it is a reflection on a Member of Congress or a member of any other body to represent a railroad?

Mr. PALMER. Well, I think a lawyer has a perfect right——

Mr. BLACKMON. And I want to ask one further question.

Mr. PALMER (continuing). To be retained by a railroad company.

Mr. BLACKMON. I want to ask one further question, and that is if the gentleman ever heard of a man in his life who was always making a fight against a lawyer holding public office and representing a railroad who was not a man with a hickory-nut head?

Mr. PALMER. Well, as far as my observation goes, I think the description is accurate. There were other bills of the same character. Mr. Speaker, as I have said, all of my district has always known that my office has represented that company. It has never sought to influence my political or congressional action in any way, shape, or manner, and it knows me well enough to understand that it dare not do so. [Applause.]

The intimation of the gentleman, the innuendo of the gentleman, is a scandalous abuse of the proprieties of this House. [Applause.] That railroad company runs through my district only about 35 miles; perhaps 40. It has in my district in its employ, I expect, not more than 100 men. Politically it knows that it must keep its hand off PALMER's fights in that district, and the only political connection I ever had with the railroad company or any of its officers—the only time I ever saw any officers go into a political canvass—was when its superintendent became a candidate for office in Lacakawanna County—in the county adjoining mine—upon the same ticket and at the same time the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] was running for Congress, and I went into the district and did everything I could do to lick them both, and I am sorry I did not do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I would ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. PALMER. That is how much the railroad controlled my political action.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have all the time he wants——

Mr. PALMER. I will not take much.

Mr. FARR. But I would like to have a few minutes to reply.

The SPEAKER. Well, is the gentleman objecting or not?

Mr. FARR. No; I do not want to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, this little business will not take long. So much for the political phase of that question. I have found it necessary, as other men have, to go to the Legislature of Pennsylvania to prevent things being done which were wrong. I have done it openly. The Legislature of Pennsylvania has been for many years of such a character that it is necessary for reputable men of the State to go down there and prevent them from abusing their power. Why, the same legislature three or four years ago which killed an up-to-date child-labor law passed a law protecting the tadpoles of Pennsylvania, and the Republican Party has ever since had a keen regard for that class of tadpole statesmen. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And when I went to the Pennsylvania Legislature in open and public hearings to argue the cause of my client or my people I was representing them openly and frankly. I never went there to represent them or any like interest while I was drawing a salary out of the treasury of my State.

And when the Republican machine of Pennsylvania, finding its list of tadpole statesmen getting low, upon one occasion back in 1899, had to have somebody to preside over sessions of the house, it very properly picked my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] as its speaker. Mr. Speaker, that legislature and the succeeding ones were of such a character that the State rose in revolution and, a few years afterwards, despite the enormous Republican majority in the State, turned that party out of power and elected a Democrat to the State treasury, in order that he might put the Republican malefactors, who had been stealing the money of our State, in the penitentiary, where they belonged. My service has been open, public, and honest, Mr. Speaker, in behalf of my people. And I am sorry that I can not say as much for all who have been active in and before the Pennsylvania Legislature.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that kind of an attack on the part of the gentleman has been entirely uncalled for. This matter has been discussed in my district and in my State before, because he has made the charge before. And my people know that I am perfectly willing to let them judge that in my service here, as in my service in Pennsylvania, no corporation anywhere has controlled a single act of mine. But my service has been in behalf of those who are struggling for better conditions in a State where the great interests have denied those conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 8 or 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FARR. I think, Mr. Speaker, after hearing the defense of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] that it is an admission of every charge that I made. He was in Harrisburg as the paid legal lobbyist of the corporations of Pennsylvania. That is what I said. As regards the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, the gentleman ought to know how that came on the floor of the House. He was responsible for it. I have not attacked his honor or his integrity or the fact that he had no right to represent a corporation. I have attacked him because of his hypocrisy, his wicked demagoguery, in pretending to be one thing here, when he knows he is another in his own State. Why, Mr. Speaker, when that gentleman assailed the mine officials of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western in Luzerne County, he was attacking the officials of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western who in his own county were helping to elect him, as I then said.

Mr. PALMER. There are no mine officials in my county.

Mr. FARR. I said the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western officials.

Mr. PALMER. There are no Delaware, Lackawanna & Western officials in the district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] must not interrupt the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] without his consent.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the gall of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. Why, Mr. Speaker, he robbed you of two delegates in Luzerne because of his pretenses, his demagoguery, his hypocrisy. They were your delegates. The Democrats of that district were for you. The people of Pennsylvania wanted you. They wanted you in my district, and that gentleman, under the pretense of reform, went all over the great State of Pennsylvania, and in every way possible, honorably and dishonorably——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] to order, and the demand that the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] calls the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order and requests that the words be taken down.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this kind of talk.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter to be determined by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] as to what he desires in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] will take his seat until we get through with this business. Now the gentleman from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] to order and demand that the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will take them down and report them. What words are they that are excepted to by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The last two used by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The shorthand reporter will report them. The rule is:

If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

The Official Reporter will read the words.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the gall of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. Why, Mr. Speaker, he robbed you of two delegates in Luzerne because of his pretenses, his demagoguery, his hypocrisy. They were your delegates. The people of Pennsylvania wanted you. They wanted you in my district, and that gentleman, under the pretense of reform, went all over the great State of Pennsylvania, and he in every way possible, honorably and dishonorably——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike those words from the RECORD.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Which ones?

The SPEAKER. The ones just read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, both gentlemen, I think, have been out of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has certainly been out of order a dozen times this afternoon and this evening in the language which he used.

They are very quick on that side of the House to make charges against somebody else; very quick to call everybody else names, and then very quick to kick if somebody replies in kind.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] ought not to have used the last word that was used. That is the only word that would be out of order. All the rest were strictly in order—all except the last word. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] but a moment ago referred to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] as "a tadpole statesman." That was strictly out of order. He has referred a dozen times to-day to other people out of order, and gentlemen on the other side have applauded those sentiments; and then they jump at once into the arena if somebody else has used a word out of order.

All debate ought to have been stopped when it began out of order. There has been no time when any of it was in order under the rules of the House, and there have been many words used in the debate which were wholly out of order. I think the gentlemen ought to have had their accession of virtue sometime ago on that side of the House, while the debate was proceeding.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is entirely immaterial to me as to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] may think as to the proper time for the making of a proper motion. If the gentleman from Illinois regarded the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] as out of order, he of course had his rights under the rules to make the point of order. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois in one thought, and that is that this bitter debate should be ended. I move, Mr. Speaker, to strike from the RECORD the word used by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. Which word?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The word "dishonorably."

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the words "or dishonorably."

Mr. BUTLER. There was only one word used to which you could take exception.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the words "or dishonorably."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not yield to the gentleman for the purpose of offering an amendment. I move to strike out those words read by the Official Reporter from the desk.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Tennessee gets through the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] to offer an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And upon that, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike from the RECORD the words read by the Official Reporter, and on that he moves the previous question.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think probably the House will be in a better humor to decide this question in the morning, and it will not be as difficult to get a quorum. As I understand, the question will still be pending when the House meets in the morning if it adjourns now.

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until to-morrow, Friday, February 19, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the French spoliation claims in relation to the vessel sloop Ruby (S. Doc. No. 948); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting items of legislation to be incorporated in the general deficiency appropriation bill now pending in the Committee on Appropriations (H. Doc. No. 1610); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, reporting claim of the Central Railroad of New Jersey for damage to coal dock of said company at Port Liberty, N. J., on account of damages occasioned by collision for which a tender of the Lighthouse Service has been found responsible, which has been considered, adjusted, and determined (H. Doc. No. 1611); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. Letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting lists of papers, documents on the files of Navy Department not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value or historical interest (H. Doc. No. 1612); to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an item of legislation for consideration and inclusion in the general deficiency bill now pending before the Committee on Appropriations (H. Doc. No. 1613); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LOGUE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20243) to acquire a site and erect a building thereon for the use of the United States post office at Wildwood, N. J., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1413), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11299) to enlarge, extend, and make additions to, fireproof, and further improve the post-office building at Shenandoah, Iowa, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1414), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GUDGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18505) to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise additional land for the Federal building at Manchester, N. H., and to construct an addition thereon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1415), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18402) to provide for the erection of a public building at Long Beach, Cal., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1417), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21377) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1418), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STEDMAN: A bill (H. R. 21486) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Court House; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 21487) providing for the continuance of the Joint Commission to Investigate Indian Affairs; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STOUT: A bill (H. R. 21488) for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Havre, Mont.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 21489) authorizing the refunding to certain corporations and individuals part of amounts heretofore collected by the United States as a compromise of their delinquency; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 21490) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of California, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SHERLEY: A bill (H. R. 21491) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 21492) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of act supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture"; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McKELLAR: A bill (H. R. 21493) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 424) providing for the payment of the expenses of an expert and assistant in the fur-seal investigation in Alaska; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOBSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 425) declaring the attitude of the United States toward the open-door policy in China; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SINNOTT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 426) providing that the Congress of the United States shall participate in the celebration of the opening of The Dalles-Celilo Canal; to the Committee on Rules.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, urging the passage of Senate bill 5042, entitled "A bill legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada"; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also (by request), memorial of the second Legislature of the State of Arizona, for Congress to provide for the restoration and preservation of the ancient historic Spanish mission San Jose de Comacacori on the bank of the Santa Cruz River, in Santa Cruz County, Ariz.; to the Committee on the Library.

Also (by request), memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, asking that Congress provide for and maintain a Government fish hatchery in the State of Arizona to stock the streams with food fishes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. HAYES: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, urging the passage of the Keating bill, relative to placing veterans of the United States Army who fought in Indian wars from 1865 to 1891 on the pension roll; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1915.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. George H. Williams, of Virginia, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee that under such auspicious circumstances we are again permitted to meet in this place. We pray Thy presence and blessing upon us and upon the deliberations of this august body. We pray that Thy holy Spirit may lead us in the way of Thy commandments, and that Thou wilt help us to do Thy will and to serve Thee in our day and generation. Forgive us all our sins, guide us by Thy holy Spirit through the remainder of our life, and after this life receive us into the eternal life. We ask it for the sake of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smoot
Burleigh	Hollis	Oliver	Sterling
Camden	Hughes	Overman	Stone
Catron	Johnson	Owen	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones	Page	Thomas
Clapp	Kenyon	Perkins	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Pittman	Warren
Crawford	La Follette	Poindexter	Weeks
Culberson	Lane	Robinson	White
Dillingham	Lea, Tenn.	Root	Works
Fall	Lodge	Sheppard
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. OLIVER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it can be disposed of without trouble now, the Chair would like to call attention to the fact that the Journal of January 29 has never been approved.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state that I have that matter now on my desk, and I think it will be but a day or two before it can be finally decided. I realize the importance of disposing of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not want just now to start anything.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 21161) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 21161. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and, on motion of Mr. SHIVELY, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented the credentials of ELLISON D. SMITH, chosen by the electors of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1915, which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, urging Congress to use all honorable and lawful means to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a new bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain, S. Dak., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Associated Employers of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called militia-pay bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MYERS. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[House joint memorial No. 2—Introduced by Cavitt.]

Petition to Congress to enact legislation validating all desert-land claims made prior to March 23, 1914.

Resolved, That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana favors the enactment of a law by the Congress of the United States, giving title to all desert-land entrymen to claims filed prior to March 23, 1914. Entrymen having filed claims prior to this date mentioned, taking their water supply from dry coulees and other insufficient water sources shall not be denied title to said claims, provided that said entrymen have complied with the desert-land law in making the required improvements upon said claims: Therefore be it

Resolved, That an engrossed copy of this resolution be sent to the Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from the State of Montana.

GEORGE L. RAMSEY,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[House joint resolution No. 1—Introduced by Guinn.]

A resolution memorializing Congress for the building of one steel bridge jointly with the county of Big Horn across the Big Horn River on the Crow Indian Reservation.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas the lands lying within the Crow Indian Reservation lie along the east bank of the Big Horn River, in Montana, and there dwell the major portion of the population of whites and Indians in the said reservation;

Whereas the county seat of Big Horn County is situated on the west side of the said Big Horn River, being by name the town of Hardin, the chief marketing and commercial center of the district aforementioned;

Whereas there are no means of communication from the Government lands of the Crow Indian Reservation and the said town of Hardin, except by a long devious route, which, in certain months of the year, is practically impassable;

Whereas by proclamation of the President there was thrown open for homesteading on the 25th day of October, 1914, the ceded portion of the Crow Indian Reservation, comprising about 200,000 acres; and

Whereas there are no means of ingress and egress to the said ceded strip from the said town of Hardin, the closest city or town of importance to the said ceded portion, except by fording the waters of the Big Horn River, which during the greater part of the year is a dangerous and unsafe proceeding: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring herein), That we petition the Congress of the United States for the necessary funds, to be taken out of Crow Indian moneys, enabling and directing the joint construction with the county of Big Horn, Mont., under the supervision of the Board of County Commissioners of Big Horn County, Mont., of one steel highway bridge across the Big Horn River, at a suitable and convenient place in the said county of Big Horn, one half of the expenses of the construction of said bridge to be paid out of the funds set aside and designated Crow Indian moneys and the other half of said expense to be paid out of the public treasury of the said county of Big Horn, under an agreement to be entered into between the proper federal officers and the county commissioners of Big Horn County, Mont.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of Montana to the Senate of the United States, and that a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the State of Montana to the House of Representatives of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about a speedy action for the accomplishments of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate joint memorial No. 2—Introduced by Burla.]

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Crow Indian Reservation, situated in the southeastern portion of the State of Montana, comprising an area of approximately 2,875,000 acres, the major portion of which is of great agricultural value and capable of producing cereals and other farm products in great abundance, is now reserved for the use of the Crow Indian Tribe; and

Whereas the total membership of said Indian tribe is less than 1,600 persons, including men, women, and children; and

Whereas there has been allotted in severalty to each member of said tribe valuable lands, sufficient under a proper administration of their affairs to sustain said Indians in comfort and assure them the means of an independent livelihood; and

Whereas but a very small portion of said Indian reservation is ever used by any of said Indian tribe for any purpose whatsoever, the same being leased to large cattle owners and flock masters at a rental insignificant by comparison with the agricultural possibilities thereof; and

Whereas practically all of the available homestead lands of eastern Montana have been claimed and occupied under the homestead laws of the United States; and

Whereas it is physically impossible for this number of Indians to occupy and use this vast area of valuable farm land, even though said Indians were possessed of the average ability of our white citizens in the management of agricultural pursuits; and

Whereas it would result in the great betterment of the industrial, financial, and moral conditions of the Indians themselves if they were compelled to occupy, use, and manage under proper supervision the lands already allotted to them, large areas of which have been irrigated by the Government at great expense and are now almost wholly unused: Therefore be it

Resolved (the House of Representatives concurring), That we, the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation to open for settlement at as early a date as practicable the land embraced within the Crow Indian Reservation, situated in the southeastern portion of the State of Montana.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state to the honorable Secretary of the Interior and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about the early opening to homestead settlement or otherwise of said Crow Indian Reservation.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[House joint memorial No. 4—Introduced by Healy.]

To the honorable Senators and Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas Cook City, Mont., has a population of 75 people, and Sluice Creek, Mont., a population of 4 people, and Clarks Fork, Wyo., a population of 25 people, all of whom have been deprived of any and all postal services by reason of the discontinuance of mails to the said Cook City, Mont., where all of said persons have heretofore received their mail;

Whereas the nearest post office to said Cook City and villages is Gardiner, Mont., which is a distance of 65 miles over mountain roads through the Yellowstone National Park; and

Whereas by reason of the great increase in the amount of mail to be carried to the above-mentioned points, caused by the introduction of the parcel post, the bid of the carrier was considered too high by the Post Office Department at Washington, D. C., and for that reason alone was rejected, and no further steps have been taken by the Government to restore such service; and

Whereas the discontinuance of the mail service to these points will mean the abandonment of one of the richest and most promising mining districts in the State of Montana and the consequent commercial loss to the Commonwealth and great injustice to the inhabitants of said towns and villages, compelling the abandonment of their homes and destruction of their means of support and the retardation of the growth and development of all the mining region around: Now therefore be it

Resolved (the senate concurring), That we, the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby petition Congress of the United States to take such immediate steps as are practicable to reestablish the postal service heretofore mentioned and bring the relief that the citizens of these communities demand and hereby correct the evil hereinabove referred to.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted by the secretary of state to each of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States at Washington, D. There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within resolution, to wit, house joint resolution No. 6, was duly passed by the 1915 session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, and that the same is now in full force and effect.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, this 15th day of February, 1915.

[SEAL.]

FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.

A joint resolution memorializing Congress and our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a permanent railway bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Chamberlain.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota:

Whereas, about the year 1905, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., as the parent corporation of the White River Valley Railway Co., entered upon the construction of a line of railway commencing at the east bank of the Missouri River at the city of Chamberlain and extending westward through Lyman, Stanley, and Pennington Counties to the city of Rapid City, and as a part of said line of railway constructed a pontoon bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and

Whereas the said Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. has taken over the property of the White River Valley Railway Co., including the pontoon or pile bridge at Chamberlain, but has never constructed a permanent railroad bridge; and

Whereas the said pontoon or pile bridge goes out at least from one to four times each year when there is any unusual condition of the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and

Whereas said pontoon or pile bridge is unsafe and dangerous to the traveling public, and by reason of the maintenance of said bridge in its unsafe condition a railway train, either passenger or freight, is liable at any time to be precipitated in the Missouri River, especially during the early spring of the year, when the ice is going out, and during the June rise and in the fall of the year and when the ice is formed or floating in said river it is impossible to operate the draw in said bridge, and the maintenance of said bridge by the said railway company is inimical and dangerous to the public health and safety of the traveling public generally as well as to shippers; and

Whereas by reason of the fact that all traffic to points west of the Missouri River, when said bridge is out or the draw open, must be sent via the lines of the Chicago & North Western Railway Co. via Wolsey and Rapid City to consignees between Chamberlain and Rapid City, and passengers, mail, express, and freight are thereby greatly delayed and the development of said country deterred and the business interests of the people located between Chamberlain and Rapid City jeopardized: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the Congress of the United States and our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and hereby are, urged to use all honorable and lawful means at their command to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to erect at the earliest possible date a good, safe, permanent railway bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Congress of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the Secretary of War.

Mr. STERLING presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from H. H. McLain, of Loomis; of the Post Office Clerks' Association of Sioux Falls; of the Railway Mail Association of Aberdeen, all in the State of South Dakota, and of the Tenth Division of the Railway Mail Association of Watertown, Wis., remonstrating against a change in the annual promotion of postal clerks, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Butte, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCLEAN presented petitions of the Deutsch-Ungerischen Militair Verein, of New Britain; of Harmonia Lodge, O. D. H. S., of Meriden; of the German Schaal Society, of New Britain; and of sundry citizens of New Britain, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Danbury, Conn., remonstrating against the exclusion of certain matter from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 5 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon on the 8th day of February, 1915, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 8th day of February, A. D. 1915.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.
By S. A. KOZER, Deputy.

House joint memorial No. 5.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represents that—

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill entitled "A bill to increase the efficiency of the Organized Militia, and for other purposes" (S. 6217); and

Whereas the purpose of the law proposed by said bill is to provide for the payment of the Organized Militia of the United States; and

Whereas the state of the national defense requires that a more dependable military reserve be created than exists at the present time: Therefore be it

Resolved, That your memorialists do favor enactment of a Federal law providing for payment and reorganizing national reserve. That we do hereby declare that, in our opinion, the above-mentioned bill is designed to create such a dependable military reserve as is desired and to greatly increase the efficiency of the Organized Militia, and that it is necessary to the national welfare that the Congress of the United States shall at the earliest possible date pass the said act, and the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Oregon are hereby requested to aid and assist in the passage of said bill, and for the passage of such a law your memorialists will ever pray.

Adopted by the House January 28, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the Senate February 3, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) House joint memorial No. 5, W. F. Drager, chief clerk. Filed February 8, 1915, at 2.45 o'clock p. m. Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, by S. A. Kozer, deputy.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 4 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon on the 8th day of February, 1915, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

House joint memorial No. 4.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully request that—

Whereas the Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, recommends as follows:

"In regions where timber is the chief income-producing resource absence of demand for it often works a serious hardship upon those who have entered the region as the advance guard of civilization and are seeking, in the face of many difficulties, to establish homes. There are counties in which a sparse local population of pioneer settlers find themselves surrounded by a wilderness largely consisting of national-forest land, which is almost idle, so far as any form of present use is concerned. In other words, a great if not the greatest of the potential sources of wealth in such counties, held in trust by the Government for the benefit of the public, not merely contributes nothing now to the upbuilding of the communities which will give value to the forests, but actually adds to the burden which these communities must assume. Were the national forests private property, they would pay their fair proportion of the cost of road development, public schools, and other public activities through taxation. The Government, unlike the private owner of timberland in such regions, is holding the timber, not in order to make a profit later by its advance in value, but in order to make it promote the public welfare. That it should be made to serve the local as well as the national public welfare has been definitely recognized in the provisions of law for the use of 35 per cent of all gross receipts from the forests for local public purposes.

"To carry more fully into effect this already established principle a further step should be taken. It should not be necessary to wait until the period of hardest struggle is past before these public resources begin to assist local development. Before the national forests begin to yield large incomes, as well as after, they should be made to participate in the work of building up the country and giving value to all its resources.

"The first need of the public in undeveloped regions is for more and better roads. Without them the struggle of individuals to gain a foothold is much more difficult, while isolation from neighbors and the outside world means meager educational opportunity, a lack of comforts, and conditions unfavorable to community life. A road system, however, constitutes a capital investment which a handful of settlers must make a little at a time. When their roads must be built largely through national-forest lands, which pay no taxes, their case is much more difficult. In such regions the Secretary of Agriculture should be authorized to make a study of the local conditions and to gather all the data necessary to formulate a plant for public-road development based on local needs. These plans should be carried into sufficient detail to provide a reasonably accurate estimate of the cost of the road construction which it is proposed that the Government undertake. They should be accompanied by careful and conservative appraisals of the value of the national-forest timber in each locality and a forecast of the future income which the forests will bring in from all sources. On the basis of the showings of fact regarding the value of the Government's property, its potential income-yielding capacity, and the needs of the public, Congress should be asked to appropriate for the construction of specific projects recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture. The cost of such road construction by the Government should constitute an advance of the amounts which the forests would later make available for local use. In effect, therefore, the roads would become an obligation upon the forests, to be extinguished as their resources come into commercial demand."

Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Representatives and Senators in Congress be, and are hereby, memorialized and requested to use their best endeavors to see that the honorable the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make a study of local conditions necessary to formulate plans for public-road development and to report his findings to Congress from time to time in accordance with his recommendations. Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to transmit by mail a copy of this resolution to each of the Oregon delegates in Congress.

Adopted by the house January 28, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 3, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) House joint memorial No. 4. W. F. Drager, chief clerk. Filed February 8, 1915, at 2.45 o'clock p. m. Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, by S. A. Kozer, deputy.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Newport and Gresham, in the State of Oregon, remonstrating against the exclusion of certain matter from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against the curtailment of the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect the national flag, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement to the press by Secretary McAdoo on the shipping bill; a telegram from W. W. Marsh to the Secretary of the Treasury; a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Athens, Ga.; a letter from W. B. Merritt, vice president and general manager of the West Bay Naval Stores & Lumber Co., of St. Andrew, Fla.; and a copy of a letter from the Syracuse Smelting Works addressed to the Secretary of Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT TO THE PRESS BY SECRETARY M'ADOO.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1915.

Secretary McAdoo said:

"On Sunday, February 14, 1915, the New York Herald, which has been one of the champions of the opposition to the shipping bill, published a grossly libelous article, in which it sought to convey the impression that the Secretary of the Treasury was interested, with bankers in New York, in an effort to sell to the Government the interned German vessels if the shipping bill should be passed. In this article the Herald attributed certain statements to Senator BRISTOW. The attached correspondence with Senator BRISTOW shows that the Herald deliberately falsified in order to accomplish its purpose.

"I make this statement in order that the public may get an idea of the methods which have been employed by the opponents of the shipping bill to prevent its passage."

Hon. JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
United States Senate.

SIR: The New York Herald of Sunday, February 14, 1915, alleged that you made the following statement to a Herald reporter:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that Mr. McAdoo is very close to the New York banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., of which Paul M. Warburg was formerly a director, and is working to have the United States purchase these German ships."

Permit me to ask if you made this statement?

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO.

FEBRUARY 15, 1915.

Hon. WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have your note of February 15. In reply I beg to say that I have never said that you were "working to have the United States purchase these German ships."

With kindest regards, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JOSEPH L. BRISTOW.

FEBRUARY 17, 1915.

Hon. JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
United States Senate.

SIR: Your note dated February 15, in reply to my note of that date, was received at the Treasury Department at 10.14 a. m. to-day.

You say: "I beg to say that I have never said that you (I) were 'working to have the United States purchase these German ships.'"

You do not, however, answer my question as to whether or not you made the following statement, which the Herald, in its publication of February 14, attributes to you: "It is a matter of common knowledge that Mr. McAdoo is very close to the New York banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., of which Paul M. Warburg was formerly a director."

Permit me to ask you again if you made this statement.

This letter will be delivered to you by messenger.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO.

FEBRUARY 17, 1915.

Hon. WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your note of February 17 is received. I did not make the statement contained therein.

Very truly, yours,

JOSEPH L. BRISTOW.

WATERLOO, IOWA, February 18, 1915.

Hon. WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.:

I am mailing to-day to Senator KENYON correspondence and statement showing our shipments to London were tied up for 10 weeks; that we have had orders unfilled and no shipping accommodations obtainable; that our men need work, and if we could have shipping facilities they would be at work; that our capital is tied up in consequence; and that he give the shipping bill his support.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your constituents appreciate the stand you are taking in the ship-purchase bill. We are suffering for shipping facilities and on account of exorbitant marine freight rates.

Yours, very truly,

W. B. MERRITT.

NEW YORK, February 15, 1915.

Hon. W. C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce,
Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your name was given to us by Mr. E. C. Porter, of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and we take the liberty of addressing you in reference to the ship-purchase bill. As shippers of our manufactured products all over the world, we feel that this country certainly requires a bill of that kind, as, in the first place, the shipping is in the hands of such a lot of financiers, who handle these matters just as they please; in fact, at the present time shipments that have to be made to the Continent—when you inquire from any of the steamship companies they simply name you a high figure and request you to engage space promptly. Otherwise they simply tell you that the rate will be higher; and sure enough, when you find in a few days that you can make the shipments and you inquire from them for space, up goes the price. So the more times you inquire the higher rates you have to pay.

This is now getting to be unbearable, and believe that if the ship-purchase bill was passed that in due time the manufacturers and shippers of this country would at least be relieved from being held up to such an extent, and trust that you will make a special effort to see that this bill is passed.

Yours, truly,

SYRACUSE SMELTING WORKS,
Per L. SAPERY.

INSPECTION OF GRAIN.

Mr. GORE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17971) for securing the uniform grading of grain, preventing deception in transactions in grain, and regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1014) thereon.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 547, submitted by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate by unanimous consent proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to subpœna witnesses, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had or may have been had in connection with any subject which may be pending or may have been pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was, in line 9, after the word "sessions," to strike out the words "or recesses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JOHN BURROWS.

Mr. WHITE. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 17122) for the relief of John Burrows, and I submit a report (No. 1011) thereon. This is an emergency bill; it applies to a man who was an employee of the Government in the Canal Zone. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to John Burrows, of New Orleans, La., $1,433.33, to compensate him for injuries received while in the employ of the Government on the Panama Canal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF NYANDO, N. Y.

Mr. NELSON. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 17982) to make Nyando, N. Y., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement, and I submit a report (No. 1012) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to the report.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. In explanation I will say that it is identical with the bill reported on the 12th of December last from the Committee on Commerce by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], which is now on the calendar, being Senate bill 6528.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. ROOT. It is a bill making Nyando, on the St. Lawrence River, a port of entry.

Mr. STONE. Very well.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall Senate bill 6528 of the same title and for the same purpose be indefinitely postponed? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

CAPT. THOMAS MOORE.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 205) to convey the thanks of Congress to Capt. Thomas Moore, master of the Alaska Steamship Co. steamer Cordova, and to the officers and crew, for the prompt and heroic service rendered by them in rescuing 58 survivors of the United States revenue cutter Tahoma, and I submit a report (No. 1013) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the report.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress be, and the same are hereby, extended to Capt. Thomas Moore and the officers and crew of the steamer Cordova, belonging to the Alaska Steamship Co., for their heroic rescue of 58 survivors of the United States revenue cutter Tahoma, shipwrecked near the coast of Alaska; and that duly certified copies of this resolution be sent to Capt. Thomas Moore and to the officers and members of his crew participating in this rescue.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT JUDGE FOR NEW JERSEY.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7091) to create an additional judge in the district of New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, is there a report with the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator from New York that he was a member of the subcommittee which reported the bill favorably to the full committee. There is a favorable report on the bill from the Judiciary Committee. I have the manuscript of the report here, which I can read if it is thought necessary.

Mr. ROOT. Very well; I have no objection to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, who shall reside in the district, and whose term of office, compensation, duties, and powers shall be the same as now provided by law for the judge of the district.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT SEYMOUR, IND.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should like to call up Calendar No. 868, being the bill (H. R. 18172) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. There is an emergency existing calling for immediate action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind., $15,000, to meet the additional cost of construction of the building by the substitution of stone instead of brick with stone trimmings, as specified in the existing specification.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 7682) to repeal sections 35 to 49, inclusive, of the act of June 13, 1898, concerning mixed flour, as amended by act of April 12, 1902; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. LEA of Tennessee:

A bill (S. 7683) for the relief of E. D. Judkins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 7684) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission to negotiate with the Crow Indians for the cession of their lands lying west of the Big Horn River on the Crow Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 7685) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Estes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 7687) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of condemned cannon and cannon balls to the Odessa (Wash.) public schools; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 7688) for the relief of Augustus G. Reynolds; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7689) granting an increase of pension to Emiles Pomeroy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 7690) granting an increase of pension to Leroy F. Morse; to the Committee on Pensions.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF PISTOLS.

Mr. SHIELDS. I introduce the bill which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (S. 7686) to regulate interstate commerce in pistols, revolvers, and other firearms of like form, size, and description, was read the first time by title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

A bill (S. 7686) to regulate interstate commerce in pistols, revolvers, and other firearms of like form, size, and description.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to deliver, or cause to be delivered, to any common carrier, or to deposit in the mails of the United States, to be carried from any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to another State or Territory of the United States or from any State or Territory to the District of Columbia for the purpose of sale, or in the performance of a contract of sale, a pistol, revolver, or other firearm of like form, size, or description, except those which for the time being have been adopted and are commonly used in the Army and Navy of the United States, under the rules and regulations of the constituted authorities of the Departments of War and Navy.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation engaged in the business of a common carrier in interstate commerce to receive for transportation or to transport from any State or the District of Columbia to another State or from a State to the District of Columbia a pistol, revolver, or other firearm of like form and size described in the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That any person or corporation or their agents or employees violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and the offending party fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and, if a person, imprisoned not less than 30 days nor more than 6 months, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word concerning the object of the bill and to offer some statistics respecting it.

Hon. Andrew White, in an interview given to Mr. Karl K. Kitchin, appearing in the World, of New York, commenting upon the frequency of criminal homicides in the United States, said:

I repeat that this annual wholesale murder is the most disgraceful evil in America to-day, and conditions are rapidly becoming worse. Ten years ago there were only 117 murders to the million. To-day there are 126. Ten years ago 1 in every 74 cases punished; to-day only 1 in 86 meets the penalty prescribed by law.

That this condition is due largely to the lax manner in which our criminal laws are enforced there is no doubt. Across an imaginary line in Canada there are only seven murders to the million annually. There British law deals with criminals quickly and effectively. It is a pity we do not do likewise.

As long as this condition holds true our Declaration of Independence is a joke. In that great document it is stated that all great men are endowed by the Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Yet without life the pursuit of liberty and happiness are, of course, impossible. The United States to-day has the highest percentage of murders of any country in the world. Even southern Italy, with its Camorrists and Mafias, does not have as many murders in proportion to the population as our country.

The object of this bill is to aid in the prevention and suppression of this crime. The statistics show that something like three-fifths of all felonious homicides are committed with pistols and revolvers, smaller than the size used in the Army and Navy of the United States, carried concealed about the person.

A majority of the States have laws prohibiting the sale and carrying of these small firearms, but they find it difficult to enforce them, chiefly because of the facility with which pistols can be purchased and received through the mails and interstate carriers, which will be prohibited if this bill becomes a law.

This legislation is along the lines of acts of Congress regulating the transportation by common carriers engaged in interstate commerce of dynamite and other explosives and dangerous articles, and excluding from the mails obscene, lascivious, and filthy pictures and publications, lottery tickets, advertisements, poisons, explosives, intoxicating liquors, and other similar legislation.

I believe if the transportation of pistols and revolvers of the character described in this bill is prohibited in interstate commerce and the mails of the United States, it will greatly contribute to the suppression of felonious assaults and homicides. It is well known that many such crimes would not be committed if boys and men were not so armed. There is no reason why the manufacture and sale of these arms should not be discouraged and, as far as possible, suppressed. They are not manufactured or sold for any useful purpose. They are chiefly used in committing violent assaults and murderous assassinations. No man carries concealed weapons about his person for any other purpose. If he desires to go armed for a just and lawful purpose, he can carry the larger firearms and will do so. The right of the citizen to have arms in the home and to carry them for self-defense is not interfered with in the slightest by this bill.

Such a law as this has more merit than those prohibiting the transportation of explosives, liquors, and poisonous drugs, because they may be used for a lawful purpose, while pistols are expressly intended for unlawful and felonious purposes.

Whatever can be done for the suppression of violent assaults and felonious homicides in the United States ought to be done. The punishment of these offenses is peculiarly within the province of the States, but the General Government ought not to allow agencies under its control to be used in furnishing the means commonly used in the commission of these crimes. It ought to, in so far as it can, aid the States in the prevention and suppression of what is sometimes called the "national crime."

I present some statistics and data concerning the frequency of homicides in the United States, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHIELDS. Judge S. C. Brown, one of the circuit judges of Tennessee, in discussing the evil of concealed weapons, recently said:

All agree that pistol carrying is one of the greatest banes to civilization and makes life entirely too cheap. As a rule, most of the pistol cases in our courts are without excuse. The young fellow begins to carry a pistol and he does not know why he carries it. He wonders why he does so, and finally concludes that he is carrying it for self-defense, and it is not long then until he has a case of self-defense, or is found dead in front of another man's pistol, who likewise has a case of self-defense.

As it is there is but little uniformity in enforcing the statute against carrying pistols. The discretion given the courts as to jail sentence destroys the efficacy of the law. The law will be ineffective so long as it now stands and is administered. It will continue to be violated while the great loss of life and the happiness of homes will be sacrificed as a result. There should be a positive uniformity and certainty in its enforcement in every county in the State.

When we put pistol carrying on the same plane as the bowie knife and Arkansas toothpick, then, and not until then, will the pistol be relegated from use as these two outlawed weapons have been.

It was by virtue of chapter 137, acts 1838, page 200, that the bowie knife and Arkansas toothpick were completely outlawed in Tennessee. It was the purpose of the act, as indicated in the caption, "to suppress the sale and use of bowie knives and Arkansas toothpicks in this State." That act did suppress the use of pistols forever in Tennessee.

By reading the original act it is seen that it was the sole purpose of the act to do what it did:

Section 1: For selling or offering to sell these weapons fixes the fine from $100 to $500 and jail sentence from one to six months.

Section 2: For wearing these weapons concealed about the person fixes the fine from $200 to $500 and jail sentence from three to six months.

Section 3: For maliciously drawing or attempting to draw these weapons from under the clothes or place of concealment about the person for the purpose of sticking, cutting, or awing another person makes the offense a felony from three to five years in the penitentiary.

Section 4: For cutting or stabbing another with these weapons in a sudden encounter, whether death ensues or not, makes the offense a felony from 3 to 15 years in the penitentiary.

Of course these sections are found in the code of 1858 and in Shannon's Compilation, but a more comprehensive view as to the purpose of the act is obtained by studying the original act, which purpose is distinctly stated in the caption as above quoted.

Our supreme court in Day v. State (5 Sneed, 496) held in a vigorous opinion delivered by Judge Caruthers that a person indicted under this act for drawing a bowie knife from a place of concealment about his person to cut or intimidate another can not have resort to the plea of self-defense; that the law makes no exception and the courts must enforce it as it is. Judge Caruthers says that the legislature intended to abolish these weapons entirely from use. It was contended in that case that if drawn in self-defense, not maliciously, that self-defense could be relied upon, but the supreme court said in that case that the right of self-defense is not denied by the act, but this particular instrument is prohibited in the exercise of that right if it be drawn from any place of concealment about the person and be thus drawn with malice for the purpose of "awing or intimidating any person," and if this be shown the offense is complete. The court again says that "if the statute invades the right of self-defense the fault is not ours"; that it is no fault of the courts; that the statute must be enforced as it reads.

When the legislature puts the pistol in the same class with the bowie knife and the Arkansas toothpick pistol carrying will be over in Tennessee the same as these two relegated instruments of death. Not only the carrying but the use of the pistol must be suppressed.

Of course it is likely that an act for this purpose should allow the Army and Navy pistol to be carried openly and in the hand and likewise except from its provisions sheriffs and other officers of the law while executing process and in arresting criminals as now excepted by the pistol statute.

I am firmly of the conviction that if these suggestions be written into the statutes of Tennessee that great results will follow in reclaiming the criminal youth of the State and in forever banishing from its borders the murderous use of the pistol.

The Nashville Banner, a paper published in the capital city of my State, commented upon this interview of Judge Brown, as follows:

Judge S. C. Brown, of the fourth judicial circuit, in an article on another page, makes some suggestions which his experience on the bench has led him to believe is much needed legislation.

One of these suggestions is that the law against carrying a pistol be given the same penalty as that provided for carrying a "bowie knife or Arkansas toothpick." The last-named weapon has been virtually extirpated by the severity of the punishment the law prescribes for having it concealed about the person, and Judge Brown considers that pistol carrying should be made a like offense.

The Banner wishes to indorse the suggestion. There is no reason why anyone should carry a pistol, and the practice has been prolific of homicides that might have been otherwise avoided.

The pistol is purely and simply an implement for shooting men. It is not put to any other use. It is meant, too, for private quarrels, and has little or no place in war. Except as it may be needed by the police and constabulary, nothing of the kind should be tolerated by modern civilization.

The sale of pistols is forbidden by law in Tennessee, but like other wholesome laws in this State it is little enforced and has slack observance. Pistols are frequently publicly exposed for sale in low-grade pawn shops, where they are bought by tough characters, and they can be had by those who desire to make the purchase from places of greater pretentions to respectability.

The law against the sale of pistols should be strictly enforced, and it would be well if some statute in accord with Judge Brown's suggestion were enacted that made more weighty the penalty for carrying a pistol concealed about the person.

The Banner quite recently reproduced some statistics given by the New York World showing the great preponderance of homicides in America over European countries, and making the startling disclosure that Memphis, in proportion to population, leads the cities of the civilized world in that unenviable respect, while Nashville is third in the list.

That is an alarming evil that should assuredly be overcome, and the remedy lies largely in abolishing the pistol.

Men who carry pistols as an imagined necessity for defense are more often drawn into difficulties than they are saved from attack by the habit.

A perfect enforcement and universal observance of the law would make self-defense unnecessary, and a condition of affairs where men must be their own defenders always abounds in feuds and violent personal encounters.

Judge Brown's suggestion in this respect is full of good sense and should be given thoughtful consideration by the legislature.

The Literary Digest of October 19, 1912, concerning an article appearing in the Spectator prepared by Mr. L. F. Hoffman, said:

Why is the ratio of murders to population in the United States increasing? Why is it so much higher than in England and Wales? Why is the rate highest in our southern cities? These are some of the questions puzzling our editors since the publication in a New York insurance journal called the Spectator of Mr. L. F. Hoffman's comparative table of homicide statistics in 30 American cities. Mr. Hoffman shows that in the decade from 1881 to 1891 the number of homicides among our urban population averaged 5 to every 100,000 persons, that for the next 10 years the rate dropped to 4.9, and that during the decade ending with 1910 it rose again to 7.2. This rate, declares Mr. Hoffman, indicates "a startling disregard of human life in the United States." For England and Wales, he says, the average rate of homicides is only 0.9 per 100,000 inhabitants. The condition revealed by these figures, he maintains, "is not compatible with the common assumption that actual progress is being made in the United States in all that is summed up under the term 'civilization and national welfare.'" We print herewith Mr. Hoffman's figures for the 30 selected cities during the period 1901–10 and for the single year 1911, giving the actual number of homicides, the rate per 100,000 population, and the ratio of increase. It will be seen that Memphis, Tenn., has the highest homicide rate (47.1 per 100,000 for the decade and 63.4 for 1911), and that six other southern cities follow it on the list. Why are the people of the South more given to manslaughter than those of the North? On this point the Charleston News and Courier comments as follows:

"The homicide record of the South and of southern cities is bad enough when accompanied by the fullest explanation of the conditions existing in this part of the country; but when, as in the current number of the Spectator, the bald figures are published the effect is appalling. It is scarcely just to print, as does this New York insurance magazine, articles such as that of Mr. F. L. Hoffman giving the homicide record of American cities unaccompanied by explanatory notes. Reading Mr. Hoffman's article one uninformed as to the facts can gather no other impression than that in Memphis, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Atlanta, Louisville, and Nashville, in the order named, human life is cheaper than anywhere else in America, a land in no part of which is human life held very sacred. We are not prepared to attack Mr. Hoffman's figures. Indeed, we take it that they are essentially correct; but we do think that it would have been only fair for him to have explained, as he could have done in a line, that the homicide record of these southern cities is high because their negro population is larger proportionately than that of any other cities considered by him in his article. Of course, it is deplorable that 24 homicides should have occurred in Charleston in 1911; but surely it makes a difference to insurance companies as well as to the public in general that of these 24 homicides 20 of the victims were colored, and only 2 of the known assailants, all told, were white. Whatever other criticisms may legitimately be directed against the white people of this community, they are not given to crimes of violence in larger degree than are their neighbors of the North, the East, or the West.

"But while this defense is Charleston's due, it remains lamentably true that in the South, as in every other part of America, there is lacking that regard for the sacredness of life which should characterize a people claiming to be civilized. The figures make painful reading, because they indicate conditions to be growing worse instead of better."

Viewing the situation broadly, the New York Times thinks that the increase in homicides, while disheartening, "is probably explainable on other grounds than the degeneracy of the Nation." As the Times sees it:

"The percentage of homicides per 100,000 of the population of our larger cities increased between 1882 and 1911 from 5.5 to 8.3. The increase of immigration from southern Europe in these years was enormous. The concentration of the population in the large cities had grown greatly in that period. In Memphis, Tenn., the city which has the worst record for homicides, the negro population is very large. We are not to infer that the white citizens of American birth and training have taken to killing each other more frequently in the last 30 years.

"But there have been causes for the increase of murder. Labor strikes have been more common than formerly, and have often been accompanied by bloodshed. It is claimed, however, that the tables printed in the Spectator by Mr. F. L. Hoffman and reproduced in the Times yesterday ought to make us more lenient judges of Mexico and Central America when we get news of manslaughter in those troubled countries. Throughout the United States the ease with which slayers of men escape punishment has become a grave scandal."

"We can check the increase of murder just as soon as we make would-be murderers know that punishment will be sure and swift, and we can check it in no other way," declares the New York World. The American Prison Association's committee on criminal procedure reports that not 1 out of 4 murderers in the United States is brought to trial, and that out of 25 brought to trial only 1 receives a death sentence. According to the same authority, 10,000 homicides are committed in this country every year, more than the aggregate number for any 10 civilized nations, exclusive of Russia.

The Spectator, in a recent number, had an article containing statistics upon the subject of homicides, which I ask to be inserted in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

HOMICIDE RECORD OF AMERICAN CITIES—STATISTICS SHOW HOMICIDE RATE HAS REMAINED FAIRLY SATISFACTORY SINCE 1907—HOWEVER, SECOND MAXIMUM POINT REACHED IN 1913.

[By Frederick L. Hoffman.]

It has properly been observed that for the United States there are no general statistics as to crime "which are not more misleading than they are informing." There are no judicial statistics for the country, as a whole, which afford an insight into one of the most important phases of modern life. The study of abnormal man is of equal importance with the study of the normal type, for the one can not be fully understood without a thorough understanding of the other. There are inherent difficulties in all efforts to bring about strictly comparable international statistics of crime. What constitutes a wrongful act in one country may not be subject to punishment in another The legal definition of homicide varies considerably, not only in different countries, but also in the several States of the United States. It would seem that homicide would constitute the least difficult branch of criminal statistics. A homicide, in the most extensive sense of the word, is the killing of any human creature, irrespective of intent. In the trial of persons accused of homicide the required distinction is made as to whether the homicide is excusable or whether it is justifiable or whether it is felonious. From an insurance point of view this distinction, which seriously affects the statistical consideration of homicide as a social problem, is of relatively small importance. Claims have to be paid whether the homicide was justified or felonious. Judicial statistics have to do with the person committing the homicide, whereas in mortality statistics it is a question of the person murdered, irrespective of the degree of moral or legal responsibility for the act. For this reason judicial statistics are of less value than accurate and conclusive mortality statistics, by means of which it is possible to establish the true loss of life by violence.

The fundamental basis of all mortality statistics is the death certificate filed by the attending physician. Where there is reason to suspect death by wrongful means a coroner's inquest is, as a rule, called for; but, unfortunately, the verdict rendered by a coroner's jury is frequently based upon superficially considered evidence. Under a system of qualified medical examiners, such as prevails in certain New England States, a material improvement is brought about, both in the administration of justice and the accurate and complete registration of violent deaths. At the present time the statistics of deaths due to homicide in the United States are wanting in accuracy and completeness. There are abundant reasons for believing that some violent deaths are returned as accidents because of the reluctance on the part of the jurors to establish a felonious crime. The available statistical information, therefore, in all probability understates the true facts of a most serious social and economic problem.

The most useful data are the returns of the Division of Vital Statistics of the Census for the registration area of the United States. Combining the returns for the decade ending with 1912, the average homicide mortality rate was 5.5 per 100,000 of population. For males the rate was 8.4 and for females 2.4. For the urban territory of the registration States (including Connecticut, District of Columbia, Indiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, and Vermont) the rate was 5, and for the rural 3.5. These rates are based upon an area which excludes the entire urban and rural South. The rate, therefore, when applied to the continental United States, as a whole, underestimates the number of homicidal deaths in the country at large.

The vital statistics of the census have been published since 1900. There has been a gradual and persistent increase in the homicide mortality rates during that period. In part this increase is the result of improved methods of death registration and death certification. This explanation, however, does not seriously impair the important conclusion that murder is on the increase in the United States, and that actually, as well as relatively, homicides were never so frequent in this country as they are at the present time.

Combining the returns for 30 representative American cities for the year 1913, the homicide mortality rate for this group was 8.7 per 100,000 of population. This rate is the highest on record since 1884, with the exception of the year 1907, when the rate was 8.8. For the year 1912 the homicide death rate, as returned by the census for the United States registration area was 6.5 per 100,000 of population. When this rate is applied to the total population of the continental United States the approximate number of deaths due to murder for that year was 6,250. Since, however, the rate during 1913 was 0.4 per 100,000 of population in excess of the urban rate for 1912, the number of deaths from homicide in the continental United States during the year 1913 must have been considerably higher. The table following shows the homicide record of 30 American cities for which the information is obtainable with more or less completeness for the 30 years ending with 1913:

The table brings out the interesting fact that the homicide rate of 30 American cities has gradually increased from a minimum of 4.2 per 100,000 of population in 1891 to a maximum of 8.8 in 1907. Since that year the rate has remained fairly stationary, but a second maximum point was reached in 1913, when the rate attained to 8.7. Considered by decennial periods, it is shown that the average rate remained the same during the first 20 years, but that the rate increased from 4.9 to 7.9 during the last decade. The increase is, no doubt, in part the result of improved methods of registration, tabulation, and death certification. It also requires to be taken into account that for the earlier years of the comparison the returns are not for all of the 30 cities for which they have been complete since 1907. In a general way the table justifies the conclusion that a fairly stationary condition has been reached in the homicide rate, and that the increase during recent years can not be considered seriously alarming, unless compared or contrasted with the returns for the earlier period. Accepting, however, the present returns as accurate, it may safely be maintained that the position of the United States in the matter of violent deaths is decidedly deplorable. Every international comparison proves that the homicide rate of the United States is probably the highest for any civilized country in the world.

The following table exhibits the comparative homicide rates for 30 American cities, first, for the decade ending with 1912 and, second, for the year 1913, for individual cities, with the increase or decrease in the rate during the year compared with the average for the previous decade:

This table is of exceptional interest and practical value. The comparison brings out a startling contrast between the homicide rates of the southern cities and those of the North and West. The city of Memphis ranks highest in the homicide rate of American cities, and this unenviable position is not only maintained for year 1913, but, in fact, the rate shows an increase of 9.7 per 100,000 of population. The 7 cities with homicide death rates in excess of 15 per 100,000 of population are all southern cities with a large negro population. Of these 7 cities, 5 showed a more or less considerable increase in the rate for 1913 in comparison with the average rate for the previous decade. Of the 30 cities under review, all but 8 show an increase in the rate for 1913. It would no doubt be of interest to know the true homicide rate according to race for southern cities; but such an analysis, however, would not be necessary at this time, since the problem of homicide is fundamentally one of law and order and not of race. It would be much more interesting to know the true homicide rate of southern rural territory. Unfortunately, however, there are no trustworthy southern vital statistics otherwise than for large cities; but a beginning has been made in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, and Mississippi, and within a few years trustworthy and conclusive information should be available.

The limited development of hospital facilities outside of the large cities of the South tends to concentrate the victims of homicide in the large centers of population, and this in part explains the excessive rates for Memphis, New Orleans, etc. These cities draw a considerable portion of their hospital patients from the surrounding territory, but the fact remains that the rates are conclusive evidence of a local disregard for human life which imperatively demands the attention of the authorities and of the public at large.

Comparing the average homicide mortality rate of our large cities for the decade ending with 1912 with the rate for the year 1913, there was an increase in the rate of 1.2 per 100,000 of population; compared with the previous year, there was an increase in the rate of 0.4. The evidence is therefore quite conclusive that the present tendency of the homicide rate is distinctly in the wrong direction.

The table following exhibits the comparative rates of eastern, southern, central, and western cities:

Cities.	1903–1912.			1913.
	Number of cities.	Homicides.	Rate per 100,000.	Number of cities.	Homicides.	Rate per 100,000.	Increase in the rate.
Eastern	11	3,756	4.7	11	516	5.6	+0.9
Central	7	3,637	8.4	7	433	8.8	+.4
Southern	9	3,226	17.0	9	437	21.2	+4.2
Western	3	590	9.7	3	91	10.7	+1.0
All cities	30	11,209	7.5	30	1,477	8.7	+1.2

According to this comparison, the homicide rate during the year 1913 was highest in the southern cities, or 21.2 per 100,000 of population, followed by western cities, with a rate of 10.7; by central cities, with a rate of 8.8; and by eastern cities, with a rate of 5.6. The relative increase in the rate of 1913, compared with the previous decade, was highest in southern cities, or 4.2 per 100,000 of population, and lowest in the cities of the Central West, or 0.4.

Homicide occurs chiefly at ages 15 to 44. The table below will show the mortality rate by sex and age for the United States registration area for the decade ending with 1912:

Mortality from homicide, by age and sex, United States registration area, 1903–1912.

Ages.	Males.		Females.
	Number.	Rate per 100,000 population.	Number.	Rate per 100,000 population.
Under 5	668	2.8	602	2.6
5–14	367	.9	220	.5
15–44	14,963	12.6	3,812	3.4
45 and over	3,463	7.3	692	1.5

The rates at ages under 5 represent chiefly cases of infanticide. The rates at this period of life are practically the same for both sexes. At the age period of most importance, from a life-insurance point of view—that is, 15 to 44—the male rate is 12.6 against a female rate of 3.4 per 100,000 of population.

The age distribution of mortality from homicide in more detail is given in the table below. Of the deaths at ages under 5, about 80 per cent occurred during the first year of life.

Mortality from homicide, by age and sex, United States registration area, 1908–1912.

Unknown ages	128	.....	19	.....

[1] Of the males under 5 years of age, 389, or 80 per cent, occurred during the first year of life, and of the females, 335, or 78.1 per cent.

The table is self-explanatory and requires no discussion.

It is only for the last three years that the homicide returns of the Census Office have been published according to the method employed. The details of the analysis for the three years ending with 1912 are given in the table below:

Mortality from homicide by method employed, 1910–1912, according to sex.

Method employed.	Males.		Females.
	Number.	Per cent.	Number.	Per cent.
By firearms	5,446	62.1	1,202	52.8
By cutting or piercing instruments	1,400	15.9	282	12.4
By other means	1,929	22.0	792	34.8
Total	8,775	100.0	2,276	100.0

As shown by this analysis of deaths from homicide, of males, 62.1 per cent were caused by firearms. The corresponding proportion for females was 52.8 per cent. It is a matter of regret that the information should not be available to show the proportion of deaths from homicide caused by poisoning. The problem of murder in its final analysis is to a considerable extent a question of the effective regulation of the sale and possession of dangerous weapons and dangerous drugs. The analysis of the American statistics for the three years ending with 1912 suggests the direction in which it may be quite possible to achieve far-reaching reforms.

There is urgency for an international classification of crimes in conformity to the principles of standardizing statistical methods which underlie the international classification of causes of death. There is, furthermore, an urgent need for a Government inquiry into the occurrence of homicide on the basis of our judicial records in much the same manner as was done in the Government inquiry into the frequency of divorce. Whether it would be possible for the United States to develop a complete system of criminal statistics in conformity to the admirable judicial statistics for England and Wales and the German criminal statistics is an open question. It, however, would not seem difficult for the Government to obtain the required information regarding indictments, trials, and convictions for homicide, within a reasonably broad interpretation of the term.

The international aspects of the homicide problem are of interest and importance. Nothing emphasizes better the deplorable condition in this country than the fact that, for illustration, the homicide mortality rate of Greater New York should be six times the rate for London. The tables immediately above for Greater New York, London, Berlin, and Paris are included to facilitate the study of the problem. Of course, all international statistics of this kind are open to the criticism that the facts may not be strictly comparable. There is, however, a lesser liability to error in mortality statistics than in judicial statistics, which, as previously pointed out, are not available for the United States as a whole.

Homicide, in the experience of life insurance companies, is of considerably less importance than suicide or accidents. In the aggregate there are over 16,000 suicides per annum in the United States and over 80,000 accidents. Deaths due to homicide were not separately returned in the statistical tables of the medico-actuarial investigation, largely, no doubt, because murder cases are relatively rare in life insurance experience. The subject, however, is one of unusual interest, and as a broad public question is one of considerable practical importance, well deserving of more extended and qualified consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, December 15, 1914.

Hon. JOHN K. SHIELDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing herewith a table showing the number of homicides in the registration area during each year of the period 1900 to 1913. The total number of deaths charged to homicide is shown for each State of the area and for each city which had a population of 100,000 or over in 1910.

In this connection I desire to call your attention to the fact that the increase during the later years is probably more apparent than real. Unfortunately, the original returns of violent deaths are defective in many instances, so that classification is difficult with respect to the number of deaths from homicide, suicide, and accident. Beginning with the year 1905, this bureau began to make a very determined effort to secure explicit statements of violent deaths. It should be remembered that a death is never compiled under the heading of homicide unless an explicit statement of that fact is given in the return. In the earlier years of this period such returns as "pistol-shot wound," "knife wound," "fracture of the skull," etc., were compiled as accidental if returned without qualification. Since 1905, however, such reports have been returned to the sources from which they came, with the request for information as to whether death was due to accident, suicide, or homicide. More explicit descriptions secured in this way account very largely for the increase indicated in the later years of this period.

The whole subject of reporting and classifying deaths from violence was once in a very unsatisfactory state, but through the earnest efforts of registration officials, the medical profession, and the coroners in cooperating with the Bureau of the Census, positive assurance can be given that returns of homicide, together with other definite and specific classes, are not at the present time vitiated by the inclusion of uncertain causes to any appreciable extent.

Very truly, yours,

W. L. AUSTIN, Director.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to begin the construction of two public bathhouses and the work of converting portions of the tidal basin in Potomac Park into public bathing beaches, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment providing that any lieutenant colonel of the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, being one of the permanent officers thereof, who shall have served more than 6 years in that grade and more than 35 years continuously as a commissioned officer in the United States Army, the President is authorized to promote such officer to the next higher grade, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 20347), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment providing that so much of the act of Congress approved July 10, 1912, be amended so as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out existing contracts entered into under date of December 21, 1907, between the Secretary of the Treasury and Peabody & Stearns, architects, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the President to transfer to the active list of the Navy any officer retired on July 1, 1914, under the personnel act of 1899 as modified by the act approved August 22, 1912, who is now performing active duty, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20975), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment providing for a refund of sums paid for documentary stamps, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 21546), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted an amendment providing that no money appropriated for pay in the Navy or for the pay of retired officers of the Navy shall be used for the pay of any dental surgeons or for the pay of any retired dental surgeons in the United States Navy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20975), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for incidental and contingent expenses, including rent of building, at the assay office at Seattle, Wash., from $5,000 to $6,000, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 19909), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for wages of workmen and other employees at the assay office, Seattle, Wash., from $15,000 to $17,000, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 19909), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUGHES submitted an amendment providing that hereafter assistant appraisers of merchandise shall receive a compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the sum of $4,000 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. STONE submitted an amendment authorizing A. T. Bin Town Chu, a Chinese merchant, resident of the city of New York, to conduct a party of not exceeding 500 Chinese residents of the United States to China, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 21201), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PITTMAN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the Truckee-Carson project, Nevada, from $236,000 to $336,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUBTREASURY AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. STONE. I submit an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the commencement of the construction of a subtreasury building at St. Louis, Mo., intended to be proposed by me to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I know the sundry civil bill has been reported and is now on the calendar, but notwithstanding that fact, I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That course will be taken.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20189), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE SENATE RULES.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 551), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Vice President, and that the Vice President be the chairman, to take into consideration the rules for conducting business in the Senate of the United States, and report to the Senate such alterations and amendments, if any, as they shall judge proper; and may employ such assistance as may be required, and the necessary actual expense incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The said committee is hereby authorized to sit during the session or recess of the Senate at Washington or elsewhere.

THE SMELTING INDUSTRY.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 550), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate his findings and conclusions in the investigation conducted by the Department of Justice in the matter of illegal combinations in restraint of trade in the smelting industry, commonly called the Smelting Trust.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 552), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to appoint a subcommittee thereof to consider in the interval between the Sixty-third Congress and the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, or during a session or recess of the Sixty-fourth Congress, the proposed codification, revision, and amendment of the laws relating to the judiciary contemplated in the bill H. R. 15578, passed by the House of Representatives in the last preceding session, and that such subcommittee be authorized to employ and compensate such persons as may be found necessary to assist in any work arising in connection with such consideration, the expenses thereby incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the subcommittee.

THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispose of a matter of very great public importance, which is heartily urged by the Commerce Department. I refer to the bill (H. R. 19746) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes. The bill has passed the House and been sent to the Senate. It was unanimously favored by the Committee on Commerce and recommended by the Department of Commerce. It can be disposed of in a few moments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so long as this is a House bill I do not think we ought to consider it this morning. If it were a Senate bill, and had to go to the other House as an emergency measure, I would not object to its consideration. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I have not any doubt that the calendar will be taken up in regular order, and that all bills to which there is no objection will be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6854) to incorporate the Boy Scouts of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is a Senate bill, and I think it perhaps might as well be passed now as at any other time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

Mr. ROOT. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I think we ought to really consider it—that is, to really consider what kind of a corporation the Government of the United States ought to authorize for this purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for information, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The bill is evidently going to lead to debate, and I think it would be unfortunate to take up a bill on the calendar which is going to lead to extended debate. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not press the motion at this time.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, if the bill shall lead to extended debate, I shall not insist upon its consideration at this time; but I think the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] understands this matter fully and the precedents that we have for it, and that he will not interpose debate on the subject.

This is a bill similar to one enacted some years ago incorporating the American Red Cross. Its objects are of a similar character; they are benevolent and charitable and for the purpose of training the youth of the country. It has the very highest merit; it is national in its character, in its objects, and in its purposes.

There is no question in my mind that Congress has the power to incorporate such a society. There are provisions in the Code of the District of Columbia for the incorporation of religious, charitable, and benevolent societies, and numbers of others of a nature similar. The reason for asking a special act in this case is that those provisions do not give all the privileges and extend all the protection to this association that are necessary for the accomplishment of its purposes, just as in the case of the Red Cross.

I will briefly mention one of them: The charter of the American Red Cross protects its insignia and emblems of various kinds from imitation by anyone. That is one of the objects of this bill. There are people who are imitating the insignia, the emblems, and the buttons that are ordinarily used by this society. Those people have even gone so far as to use the words as brands for cigarettes to be sold to boys. They are branding various articles for sale with the name "Boy Scouts" and with their insignia. The object of this charter is to protect the association from such use and invasion of their insignia and emblems.

Behind this movement are benevolent men from all over the United States. This bill contains the names of prominent men from almost every State in the Union who are greatly interested in the movement and believe this charter necessary to carry on the great work they have in hand. For these reasons I hope that there will be no objection and that the bill will be allowed to pass.

I will further state that it has been favorably considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House and that the parliamentary situation in the House is such that, if this bill is passed, it can be immediately substituted for the House bill and be enacted into law at this session of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is perfectly manifest that this bill is going to be debated. The Senator from Tennessee, who thought there would be no debate, proceeded to make an argument himself upon it. I dislike to object, but I see no more reason for going to the calendar and taking up this bill and considering it than many other bills, and so I am compelled to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3897) to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to revise the location of its right of way, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, line 6, after "location," to insert "within three years from the passage of this act," and on page 3, line 7, after "forests," to insert: ": Provided further, That before the Secretary of the Interior shall consent to and approve the revision of location herein authorized, the Great Northern Railway Co. shall file with the said Secretary a relinquishment of all claims of whatever nature to that portion of its right of way affected by said revised location."

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask that the bill be read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior and upon the filing with the Interior Department and the approval thereof by said Secretary of maps of definite location, the Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Minnesota, be, and it is hereby, authorized to revise the location of that part of its line of railway along the southern boundary of the Glacier National Park, in the State of Montana, on the terms and conditions and subject to the limitations and restrictions granted by and contained in an act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875 (18 Stats., p. 482), as amended by an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stats., p. 1233): Provided, That all lands north of the north line of the revised right of way, when said revised line of right of way shall have been approved as aforesaid, shall be excluded from the Lewis and Clark National Forest and become and remain part of the Glacier National Park, and be subject to all the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish 'the Glacier National Park' in the Rocky Mountains south of the international boundary line in the State of Montana, and for other purposes," approved May 11, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 354), and to all the provisions of any act of Congress that may hereafter be passed relative to said park, and the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior heretofore or hereafter prescribed in accordance with law for the government of the park, and that any and all lands south of the north line of such revised line of right of way which may now be within the Glacier National Park shall become and remain a part of the Lewis and Clark National Forest and be subject to and be governed by the laws heretofore or hereafter enacted by Congress and the regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the control of national forests.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana what are the amendments of the House and what the effect is upon the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. MYERS. The House amendments provide that when the Great Northern Railway surrenders its old right of way, making some minor changes abutting on the Glacier National Park, wholly in the State of Montana, the old right of way shall revert to the United States Government.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all the amendments provide?

Mr. MYERS. That is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House.

The amendments were concurred in.

SURVEY OF OYSTER BEDS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3362) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas, which were, on page 2, line 2, after "publications," to insert "at a total limit of cost of $10,000"; and, on page 2, to strike out lines 6 to 13, inclusive.

Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. CULBERSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the resolution which went over yesterday on the objection of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] be now laid before the Senate. It is Senate resolution 549, relating to an amendment to the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The resolution (S. Res. 549) introduced by Mr. NORRIS on the 18th instant, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the standing rules of the Senate be amended by adding a new rule, as follows:

"Rule XLI. It shall be in order during the morning hour to make a motion that any bill or resolution then on the calendar shall be considered under the terms of this rule. Such motion, when made, shall lie over one day and shall then be decided without debate. No Senator shall be allowed to vote on a motion to consider a bill or resolution under this rule who is bound by any caucus or conference of Senators to vote in any particular way on said bill or resolution, or any amendment thereto, but when any Senator's right to vote upon such motion is challenged, such Senator shall be allowed to determine for himself whether he is disqualified from voting on said motion. When it has been decided to consider a bill or resolution under this rule, the same shall first be considered in general debate, during which time no Senator, except by unanimous consent, shall be allowed to speak more than three hours. At the close of general debate the bill or resolution shall be read for amendments, and on any amendment that may be offered no Senator, except by unanimous consent, shall speak for more than 15 minutes: Provided, That any Senator who has not spoken for three hours in general debate shall, in addition to said 15 minutes, be allowed additional time, but in no case shall such additional time or times, including the time used by such Senator in general debate, exceed in the aggregate three hours: Provided further, That if unanimous consent for additional time is asked in behalf of any Senator, either during general debate or when the bill or resolution is being considered for amendment, and the same is refused, it shall be in order by motion to extend the time of such Senator for a time to be named in said motion, which motion shall be decided without debate. When the bill or resolution is being read for amendment all debate shall be confined to the amendment which is then pending."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate in a discussion of this proposed rule; but all the propositions involved in it have been debated for several days, and there is not any doubt but that every Senator knows whether he is in favor of it or against it. It seems to me that it is no more than fair, after all the debate that has taken place, that we should reach a vote.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules. This resolution practically has been before the Committee on Rules, and the committee decided not to report it back adversely, but that it was not the time now to take up this question. Therefore I think it ought to go to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on referring the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on that question I desire to say just a few words. I do not know but that it may as well be settled in that way, or by a motion to lay the resolution on the table, because everybody knows that if it goes to the Committee on Rules it goes there to stay.

As the Senator has said, a resolution introduced by me involving all the propositions in this rule, with the exception of the one relating to the caucus, has not been reported. The facts are, as I understand them, that a motion to report that resolution out of the committee favorably was defeated, and then those who favored the resolution in order to get it out of committee and on the calendar made a motion to report it out adversely, and that was defeated. That shows that the Committee on Rules will neither report one way nor report the other way. If this were a new proposition, if it had not been discussed, and if most of the questions had not been for several days the unfinished business before the Senate, it seems to me that a reference to the Committee on Rules would be proper.

The proposed rule involves two propositions. It has two objects. One is to prevent a filibuster and the other is to prevent caucusing upon bills that are reported to the Senate. Those who are opposed to filibustering and who are opposed to caucusing ought to be in favor of a proposition of this kind. I realize that there are those who are in favor of retaining the right to filibuster and who are opposed to a caucus. If those Senators think more of the filibuster than they hate the caucus, of course they would be against it. There are others who are opposed to a filibuster and who are in favor of the caucus. If they love the caucus more than they hate the filibuster, they would be against it. There are other Senators who are opposed both to the caucus and to the filibuster, and I take it that they would favor some resolution of this kind. But it is subject to amendment. If some Senator wants to strike out the part which refers to the caucus, we can get a vote on it, unless it is debated until after 2 o'clock, and I am perfectly willing to have a vote on any of these propositions; but it does seem to me that after all this debate and all the consideration that has been given to this question we are entitled to a vote upon the merits of the propositions involved.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I said a day or two ago, I am in favor of a rule which limits debate in the Senate, and I think the allowance for debate provided for in this resolution is sufficient; but, as I remarked then and as I feel now, I will not vote for any cloture or any limitation upon debate upon a bill, resolution, or question of any kind which has been made the subject of a caucus. I endeavored so to qualify the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska when it was before us as an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; but I was not able to accomplish my object in that way, and we are now compelled to examine it in another form.

The Senator from Nebraska, in this resolution, proposes to reach that object by disqualifying every Senator who is bound by a caucus or conference order. I would vote for that if it were not for one thing. I do not believe it is within the constitutional power of the Senate to disqualify a Senator from voting upon a bill or resolution of that kind because he has been a member of a caucus and has thereby become bound, or may feel bound, to vote in a particular way.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator first to the fact that this is not a disqualification to vote on a bill or a resolution; and then I want to ask him another question. If it is unconstitutional to prohibit a Senator, under the conditions named, from voting to put a rule in operation, would it not also be unconstitutional to prohibit a Senator from making the motion; and is not that what the Senator's proposition involves?

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. NORRIS. He provides, in what he wants to do to get at the caucus, that no member of the party in which a caucus is held shall have the right to make a motion. Now, if it is unconstitutional to disqualify a man from voting, it certainly ought to be unconstitutional to disqualify a Senator from making the motion itself.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, while I do not think the instances are parallel, yet, in anticipation of the objection that has just been made by the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I am basing that suggestion on the Senator's argument. I do not think there is any constitutional question involved.

Mr. CUMMINS. In anticipation of that objection I had prepared the amendment which I offered in a little different form, and had stricken out the provision to which the Senator from Nebraska referred, so that it would read in this way:

> This rule shall not apply to any bill, motion, resolution, or question upon which Senators belonging to any political party have held a caucus and passed a resolution, or declaration in any form, attempting to bind the members of such party in the Senate to vote in any particular way.

My view of it would limit the application of the rule to those cases in which the majority party had not held a caucus and attempted to bind the members of their organization to vote in a particular way, and could not be subject to any possible constitutional objection. But mark, now, the language of the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska:

> It shall be in order during the morning hour to make a motion that any bill or resolution then on the calendar shall be considered under the terms of this rule. Such motion when made shall lie over one day and shall then be decided without debate. No Senator shall be allowed to vote on a motion to consider a bill or resolution under this rule who is bound by any caucus or conference of Senators to vote in any particular way on said bill or resolution or any amendment thereto.

If I said a few moments ago that the rule would disqualify a Senator from voting upon a bill or resolution, I was unhappy in my use of words. What the rule attempts to do is to disqualify a Senator from voting upon the motion to apply the rule limiting debate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator did not read all of his rule, and I wish to ask him now if his rule does not disqualify a Senator from making a motion?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator read the balance of his rule, which he has not yet read?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator refers to the second paragraph?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS (reading)—

> The fact respecting the existence of such caucus, resolution, or declaration shall be determined in the first instance by a committee of five Senators appointed by the presiding officer, who shall report within two days, and upon its report by the Senate without debate.

There is no disqualification at all in the rule that I have proposed. It simply renders the rule inapplicable to the instance concerning which a caucus has been held.

Mr. President, I do not believe it is within the power of the Senate to disqualify a Senator from voting upon any question that comes before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not this language in the Senator's proposition? I have it printed here in my hand:

> And where the application of the rule is moved by a Senator belonging to any such political party.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator stricken that out?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Even though it were not stricken out, there would be no disqualification in it. The whole purpose of my amendment is to determine certain cases in which the rule can not apply.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that. Now, I want to ask the Senator if he does not distinguish, on the constitutional question he is raising, between these two propositions—the disqualification of a Senator from voting on a resolution or on a bill and the disqualification of a Senator who by his own conduct has placed himself in a position where he can not vote upon a motion that makes the rule applicable? That is not voting on a bill or resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am unable to see any difference between the two instances; that is, the right to vote upon a bill and the right to vote upon a motion. A Senator comes here for the purpose of discharging his full duty. He enters the Senate with the right to vote upon every question that may come before the Senate and that may affect finally the deliberation or the action of the Senate. The fact that a Senator has entered into a caucus can no more disqualify him from voting in the Senate than though it were provided that if he had expressed his opinion with regard to the particular matter in hand therefore he should be disqualified.

I regret very much that this difference of opinion between the Senator from Nebraska and myself respecting the way in which to guard against the action of a caucus has so far separated us that he can not vote for my proposition and I can not vote for his, although I believe that we are united in the judgment that there ought to be a limitation upon the right of debate in the Senate.

For the reasons that I have given I intend to vote to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules, for there I shall hope to attach to it the amendment I have proposed instead of the provision which has been adopted by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does not the Senator offer his amendment to insert these words here, and let us have a vote on that and have the matter determined, rather than to send it to the committee, where it will be dead?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to lay the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to lay the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska on the table.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request seconded?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. While I am not in harmony with the Senator from Nebraska as to the exact rule proposed here, it seems to me that the pending question is the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules, and that a motion to lay the original resolution upon the table is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to lay the resolution on the table takes precedence of the other motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Inasmuch as we can not act upon this matter in the Committee on Rules at the present session, I withdraw my motion and will let the motion to table take precedence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has precedence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Florida withhold his motion just one moment that I may make a request?

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have the Lexington (Ky.) Herald, which contains an editorial on the question of cloture discussed very fairly and forcibly. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Lexington Herald, Tuesday, Feb. 16, 1915.]

REMEMBER THE FORCE BILL.

One false step quickly leads to another, with the almost inevitable result that disaster overtakes those who stray from the path to the edge of the precipice. Those who advocate the passage of the shipping bill now urge the adoption by the Senate of a rule to limit debate, so that the question may be brought to a vote.

Immediately dangerous as would be the passage of the shipping bill, disastrous as it would be to the Democratic Party, it is not so dangerous as is a cloture rule for the Senate.

During the first century of this Government both the Senate and the House were deliberative bodies, in which great governmental questions were discussed and debated by great men. Appeals to reason and to patriotism were the basis for seeking the votes of Members of the House as well as of the Senate. Upon the speeches made in both bodies the judgment of the country was based. The great figures of the first century of the Government won their spurs and achieved their reputation in the House, and until the dark days when Tom Reed presided over its deliberations—or, rather, ruled over its proceedings—the House of Representatives was the greater body.

Due to the insatiate desire for temporary party advantage, the House was changed by Reed's rules from a deliberative legislative body to a body which merely records in votes the purposes of the majority of the party in control. No longer is the Speaker of the House of Representatives second in power and in dignity only to the President. He is now but a mere presiding officer, from whose hands has been taken the power to appoint committees, who has been stripped of the power of recognition, the greatest power a presiding officer can have, and the debates of the House have deteriorated, until they no longer command the respect or even attract the attention of the country.

During the very period when the Republican Party, under the dominant leadership of Czar Reed, adopted the rules which destroyed the individuality of the House and changed it from a deliberative to a mere recording body, there was an episode in the Senate that should not be forgotten by southern men who to gain their point in the enactment of the shipping bill are willing to vote for cloture. The same intolerant spirit that led to the adoption of the Reed rules by the Republican majority in the House of Representatives led to the introduction of the force bill.

Under the Reed rules there was no doubt that the force bill, or any bill drafted by the leaders and desired by the most extreme element of the Republican Party, could be pushed through the House of Representatives. Due to the Reed rules, it was impossible even for so superb a minority as the Democratic membership of the House of Representatives at that time to prevent by argument or by filibuster the passage of any bill, no matter how vicious, indorsed by the leaders of the Republican Party.

The only salvation of the South from the enactment of the force bill rested with those Democratic Senators who, day after day, week after week, with watchless vigilance, check-mated every move of the Republican majority in the Senate. There is in the legislative annals of this country no more glorious nor more serviceable episode than the filibuster led by Gorman of Maryland, which finally resulted in the defeat of the force bill.

It was at that time proposed by the Republicans to adopt a cloture rule. The more violent earnestly favored it, as do now the more violent and less intelligent Democrats. But the saving patriotism of some of the Republicans, their realization that the deliberative character of the House had been destroyed, so the Senate remained the last rampart for those who fight for due consideration of any measure before the American Congress, magnifying the importance and increasing the dignity of that body, made them unwilling to violate the traditions of a century and reduce the Senate to a mere recording instrument of the wishes of the temporary majority.

Those Democratic Senators who remember that episode, the men from the South who owe to those Democratic Senators who filibustered with Gorman freedom from the force bill, that would have given to Federal judges and Federal soldiers the right to supervise every polling place, should be the last to denounce their colleagues who with equally strong conviction and equal courage now oppose the shipping bill.

Are the Democrats of this Senate going to adopt a cloture rule in violation of all the traditions of the Senate, destroying the power and the dignity of the Senate, because the Senators are equally divided in support of and in opposition to the shipping bill, and the Democrats, by reason of having the Vice President, who is not a Member of the Senate and not even permitted to vote except in case of tie, can pass this bill by a majority of one? Surely this can not be.

Are there no Democratic Senators who favor this bill but who recognize their obligation to uphold the dignity of the body of which they are Members? Are there none there who fully realize the danger of the course they are pursuing? During recent years there has been a constantly growing encroachment of the executive on the power of the legislative. Under our Government there is presumed to be absolute separation between the powers of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial departments.

President Roosevelt used his commanding personality and dynamic force to drive through Congress bills that did not meet the approval of the majority of the Members of Congress. President Wilson has followed President Roosevelt's example. All the power of patronage, all the force of personality, all the prestige of office, have been used by him to influence the legislative department of the Government. Whether one approves or disapproves this change, no one can escape realization of the danger that would come were there a strong, vigorous, ambitious, unscrupulous man President, with the power to command the leader of the House to apply the cloture rule and force to quick decision a measure that had the temporary approval of the party, and also to command equally prompt and inconsiderate action in the Senate.

Vicious as is the shipping bill, it is not so vicious nor so permanent a danger as is the adoption of cloture by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion of the Senator from Florida to lay the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska on the table the Senator from Nebraska has asked for the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19909, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to state to the Senator from Virginia it has never seemed to me quite fair that we should run through the bill and take up the committee amendments first and then go back and go over the bill again for individual amendments. I have no objection to the balance of the request, and I do not propose to make an objection to that, but I ask the Senator why should we not take the bill up and act on all amendments as we go through and not go through with it twice?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It will speed the dispatch of business. Long experience in the Senate has shown that.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that it delays it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure the Senator from Nebraska is mistaken about that. It injures nobody to get through with the committee amendments first, for the bill is then open to amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. This appears——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator objects, that is the end of it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to be technical about it. To the balance of the Senator's request I certainly would not object.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator's request. My attention was diverted.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The request was that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. LODGE. I am entirely in sympathy with that request; but there is no formal reading of the bill required at this stage. It is simply the right of a Senator to ask for it. The sensible way to deal with all appropriation bills is the way the Senator from Virginia has suggested.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The bill as passed by the House will not be formally read in the Senate unless desired. The first thing in order is to read the bill through from beginning to end, without any amendments being considered, if that is requested.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly. The bill is not to be read in that way unless——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. To avoid discussion I am willing to do anything. If the Senator objects, that is the end of it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not object. On the contrary, I think the Senator's request is exactly right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read for action on the committee amendments, and the committee amendments will be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," subhead "Senate," on page 2, after line 3, to strike out:

That in lieu of all mileage each Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses for himself and the dependent members of his family in coming from and returning to his home, at each session of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. That I understand is the mileage amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the first page of the bill read. It may have escaped my notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair heard it read.

Mr. LODGE. It was my fault that I did not hear it. I wanted to say a word about that, and just a word.

Of course I am in favor of the committee's action, but I trust there will be no compromise on that proposition. It seems to me if any system is bad it is the worst that is provided in the House arrangement. We know what would be this business of providing for necessary traveling expenses for the family and dependents. We should have a lot of petty questions brought up here everlastingly. In my judgment there is only one sensible way of dealing with this matter, and that is by abolishing mileage, abolishing the stationery allowance, and paying Senators and Representatives a sufficient salary to cover their expenses for traveling and for stationery. All the trouble is made by these arrangements in the nature of perquisites. But if we can not have that system the present system of fixed mileage is infinitely better than such a system as is proposed by the House. I am very glad the committee has stricken it out, and I hope the committee will not assent to it in conference under any circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I simply want an opportunity to vote on this matter, and I object to agreeing to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. All in favor of the amendment——

Mr. KENYON. Just a minute, please.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Every year now the House sends to the Senate a provision in this bill in relation to mileage. I do not know whether it is better than the present provision for mileage or not. I do know the present arrangement as to mileage raises a good deal of adverse criticism as to Congress. Now, the House, by adopting what is apparently on the face of it a fairer provision, puts up to the Senate the proposition of increasing the mileage both for the Senate and for the House. I think the House provision ought to be called. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that mileage ought to be abolished and all perquisites ought to be abolished and a salary paid that would be sufficient to cover the whole matter and relieve Congress from the adverse criticism this mileage question brings up if the present salary is not adequate. I am inclined to the belief that the present salary is sufficient.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether any calculation has been made as to what would be the expenditure under the House provision? Is it not likely that it would be more than the amount provided for in the bill?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know, Mr. President, but——

Mr. SHAFROTH. If Members and the dependent members of their families are to be brought to Washington, as it would provide, it seems to me it is likely to be more than the amount which the Senate committee has recommended.

Mr. KENYON. I do not believe the privilege will be abused. The argument was made here before this that some Members of Congress would travel in more luxury than other Members of Congress, but they would not do that more than once, because they would be responsible to their constituents therefor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the committee will be agreed to. The appropriation proposed by the House is entirely inadequate. Even with the language the House placed in the bill a few of the Senators who are more prompt in demanding mileage might receive their mileage and others could not. As they have worded it, it would seem that a Senator would have to stand, hat in hand, before the Presiding Officer while he went through item by item what meals he had had on the way, and as to the Pullman whether he had had a drawing room or a lower berth or an upper. To pass it as the House has it places it beyond the power of the conferees. Of course, there is a deficit in the mileage. I hope the amendment of the Senate committee will be agreed to and let it go to conference and let it be arranged there.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I shall not be a Member of the Congress during which this mileage is to be paid, and I can speak with entire impartiality on this subject.

It seems to me that the allowances for mileage and stationery have become a part of the compensation of a Senator or Representative quite as much as the prescribed salary. The mileage is a recognition of the fact that the Member of the House or of the Senate must leave his home and come to the Capital. It is also clearly recognized that, unless located very remote from the Capital, he goes back and forth between his home and Washington.

In this connection I may say that the striking out of the mileage provision at the end of the long special session in 1913 was an injustice to the Members of the House and Senate. The fact that they did not return home at the close of the special session of 1913 and return at the beginning of the regular session but emphasizes the length of our stay here and the necessity of going back and forth during that time. There were very few in the Senate who remained here during all of the extra session of 1913.

For many years this has been the custom. I think, nevertheless, it would be better, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], to make some provision for an increased salary. There is always a certain amount of criticism in regard to the mileage and the stationery allowances. There are very few Members of the Senate who do not spend more for traveling back and forth as an incident to the service here than that which is allowed under the law. To cut out that provision and substitute merely traveling expenses going and returning would, it seems to me, be unjust. Nevertheless, to avoid the inequality due to distance and relieve the Senate and the House from this constant criticism, it would seem to me much better to provide that each Senator or Representative shall have a specified salary, increased somewhat by reason of traveling expenses and stationery expenses, than to pay whatever his traveling expenses may be.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator believe that that ought to be done in the regular way?

Mr. BURTON. I think so.

Mr. WARREN. And not on an appropriation bill. That is what they have always demanded in the House, and we have been ready and anxious to meet it. The appropriation bill is not the place to change it.

Mr. BURTON. There is one feature which I may remark incidentally—the very wide difference between the mileage of Representatives and Senators who are near at hand and those who are far away. The mileage to a Member of the House living in Baltimore would be trivial, while that of a Senator or Member from Arizona or the State of Washington would be very considerable. It has come to be recognized, however, I think, as a part of the system, that the hardship of a Member located a considerable distance from the Capital is greater than that of one near at hand. There is plausibility, at least, in the argument or claim that their mileage should be very much greater. The traveling expenses may not be so much larger, because they do not go back and forth between home and the Capital so frequently, but they are farther away from their homes, and in a sense are entitled to larger compensation. I think there should be a readjustment of the salaries, and the question of locality might very naturally be taken into account.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator one question in reference to the difference in the mileage of a man living in Baltimore and a man living in San Francisco. I think the Senator will acknowledge the fact that every man who is here at all has some business in his own State. He ought to have some business there which requires his attendance at least twice a year. He has to go back, for his business will not take care of itself ordinarily unless he does. Therefore, in order even to look after that business, with these almost continuous sessions of Congress, a Senator coming from San Francisco would have to make the trip at least twice a year to look after his business there. Then he would have to pay several thousand dollars out of his own pocket, while a Senator residing over in Baltimore would not pay that many cents out of his pocket. So the thing equalizes itself after all. If we assume, first, that a man must bring his family here and in addition to that he must return to his own State once or twice during the year, the mileage now fixed by law will just about equalize the difference between the Senator living close by and one living on the western coast.

Mr. BURTON. Not only does the Member or Senator have business or personal affairs to attend to, but it is very desirable that he should keep in touch with his constituents. The original idea of mileage was to provide traveling expenses coming to Washington and returning. That was when the means of communication were crude and very different from what they are now. I think the present idea is altogether different and is a recognition of the fact that he must spend a part of his time here in Washington and a part at home and must make trips more or less frequently between the two places.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the matter of compensation is to be determined upon the basis proposed for such an amendment, I would suggest that it might be a good idea to turn to our salaries and strike out compensation for the last four weeks. That is a motion I would cheerfully vote for. We have spent the past four weeks at the rate of $1,000 an hour doing nothing except to obstruct the business of the country and also to decrease the public estimate of this body.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, does not the Senator think in the case of the Senator from New Hampshire, in view of the extra work he did, he ought to have his salary increased?

Mr. THOMAS. In view of the fact that one good result of the last filibuster will be to attract public attention to it in such wise as to bring about a change of our rules, I would be very glad to make an exception of my distinguished friend from New Hampshire, because I think he contributed more largely to that end than any gentleman on the other side of the Chamber through his display of such remarkable physical ability in keeping the floor as the tedious hours crept behind him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, the Senator from Colorado would not leave himself out, in view of the very important contribution he made in the same direction.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; I am willing to be included in the arrangement, if it is made, as I am a self-confessed obstructionist. I would make the single exception for the reason stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is strange how men differ in opinion upon any one of many subjects. I differ with the Senator from Colorado to this extent: I think the last 30 days' work in the Senate has been of greater benefit to the American people than any 30 days' work that has been undertaken in the Senate of the United States for many, many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. And saved $50,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only have we saved $50,000,000, but we have saved an un-American bill from being forced into law upon the American people. So far as I am concerned, I want to congratulate every Senator who took part in defeating that un-American legislation, and the American people are to be congratulated upon the success of the undertaking.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the present session expires I shall have a few words to say on that subject. I merely wish now to remark that there is nothing strange, I think, in the difference of opinion which the Senator from Utah and I entertain as to the result of the last four weeks' filibuster. I saw in one of the leading magazines this morning a picture of the distinguished Senator accompanied by a statement that he had accomplished the most remarkable feat of long and continued soliloquy that has up to this time been inflicted upon the Senate furnishings, thus establishing his physical right to his seat and perhaps his claim to compensation. When we buy gas from the gas companies and pay them 75 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, we are apt to think that the price is extortionate; but the people have been paying at the rate of a thousand dollars an hour for the "hot air" supplied by distinguished Members of this body during the past four weeks—a price which I think is entirely out of all proportion to the value of the product.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply desire to appeal to Senators not to discuss the ship-purchase bill pending the consideration of this appropriation bill. We have just 13 days of this session, and we are trying to dispatch the necessary business of the Senate in order to avoid an extra session; so I appeal to Senators to let the discussion of abstract propositions and irrelevant matters pass by for the present. I appeal to them to aid in passing the supply bills in order that the wheels of government may go along and that we may avoid an extra session. We can not do that if we are to discuss the ship-purchase bill on the appropriation bill now before the Senate. I especially appeal to members of the Committee on Appropriations, like the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who, I know, is in accord with what I say, to forego a discussion of this sort to a more appropriate time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Virginia need fear that the Senate will filibuster against a bill which provides for its own compensation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have not thought so; and yet it is mighty hard to distinguish this from a filibuster, when debate proceeds on irrelevant matters not at all connected with the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with what the Senator from Virginia has said. I assure him that I do not expect to take very much of the time of the Senate in discussing questions involved in this appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure the Senator agrees with me. All I want is a vote on this question.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], however, in just one word, as to the question of debate costing the Government $1,000 an hour, it has been stated so often here that I sometimes think the American people have come to believe it. The expenditures of the Government go on whether we are in session or whether we are not in session. The people understand that. The mere fact of figuring out the cost as being so much an hour, while it may do for some advertising purposes, will not apply to actual results, so far as they concern the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true, Mr. President; the Government goes on, but the business is suspended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the filibuster is now over, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that proposition.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "Senators," to strike out "$12,750" and insert "$51,000," so as to make the clause read:

For mileage of Senators, $51,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for "Clerks and messengers to committees," on page 3, line 22, after "$3,000," to insert "assistant clerk, $1,800," so as to read:

Banking and Currency—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia the reason for increasing the clerical force of that committee, when we are engaged in trying to retrench, with a deficit already and a larger deficit in view? I do not suppose it is a matter of very much consequence; but how can we expect others to economize when we increase the expense? The whole body of Government takes its color, its tone, and its methods from those at the top. If, while we talk retrenchment and talk about endeavoring to save money and cut down the salaries of poor fellows in the executive departments and endeavor to reduce expenses for letter carriers, we go on continually increasing the expenses of our own work and our own friends and our own dependents and our own clerks, how can we expect cheerful submission to our reductions in the executive departments and with all the 460,000 employees in the country?

Retrenchment, like charity, should begin at home. This additional clerk for this committee may be needed. I do not know as to that; but what I do know is that we have got now two committees to do the work which up to a few months ago was done by only one. We have two sets of clerks, two clerical forces, two schedules of expense for a Committee on Finance and a Committee on Banking and Currency to do what was formerly done by one committee; done perfectly well, done adequately, and done satisfactorily. We have gone on and doubled that expense, and now we are asked to still further increase the expenditure, to make another place for another man, so that we shall add to the already doubled expenditure.

It is a little thing. I do not care so much about this particular case. But you can not have retrenchment and economy in the Government of the United States when the men whose duty it is to provide for it will not themselves practice it. I am against the amendment unless some reasons for it are given which have not as yet been given.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I realize the importance of retrenchment and economy, and the Committee on Appropriations have made a very earnest effort to accomplish those objects. We have put the knife in very deeply wherever we felt that we could possibly do so; indeed, the fear I have about this bill is that we have denied appropriations that we ought to have allowed. That has been the general policy of the committee.

So far as this particular item is concerned, it reduces itself simply to this: The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], appeared before the committee and stated that it was impossible for him to dispatch the work of the committee unless he had an additional clerk. The responsibility is on each Senator to deal frankly and squarely with the committee and with the Senate. I bring it home to the Senator from New York. Suppose he were to appear before the Committee on Appropriations and inform them that, by reason of his practical experience with the work of his committee, he found himself absolutely unable to do justice to the work committed to it; that it piled up on him; that he was unable to dispatch it; and he asked the committee to give him an additional clerk, what could the committee do? We must accept the statement of that Senator who is charged with a public duty; we must assume that he is dealing honestly and frankly with the committee; and the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency says he can not do the work confided to him unless he has an additional clerk.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think the committee could ask the Senator to state to them what is the work of the committee that can not be performed without additional assistance. That committee has completed the great labors for which it was separated from the Committee on Finance; that committee, with the force it had, was able to go through the long hearings and discussions and preparations incident to the banking and currency bill. There is nothing of particular consequence that occurs to me at this moment before that committee. I think the Committee on Appropriations might well have called upon the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to state what was the exigency, and when he had stated it the committee might well have brought into the Senate that statement in order that the Senate might judge. You can not perform the duty of retrenchment on any such basis.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the work now taken care of by the Committee on Banking and Currency is almost entirely new work. It is not a work which heretofore has been done by the Finance Committee. It is work that has been created by new legislation. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency did give the Committee on Appropriations the facts regarding this matter, and I am glad to say that he is now present and can himself, instead of my repeating what he said to the committee, state for himself the necessities of his committee.

Here is the rural-credits bill, which is inviting correspondence from every part of the United States, and an immense quantity of it, no doubt, for I myself get a great mass of correspondence relating to that matter, although I am not a member of that committee. But, as I have said, the Senator from Oklahoma did give to the committee good reasons, satisfying the committee that he needed another clerk. If he had not satisfied us, not only by his general statement, but by detailed facts that he presented, the committee would never have reported the allowance for the additional clerk. The committee believed, and still believes, that on the statements of fact made by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency the additional clerk ought to be allowed and paid for in the interest of the efficient dispatch of the public business.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. We have looked into the question of whether a new clerk is needed there, and the unanimous opinion of those who did look into it seemed to be in favor of allowing it.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us how many clerks that committee has now?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It has three clerks now; and there are about 10 committees in the United States Senate that have more help than has the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I want to say that in adopting the banking and currency act relating to the Federal reserve banks we started out with a policy of inviting criticisms of the law, and that has brought an enormous amount of correspondence to the chairman of the committee. Since that time the chairman of the committee has written a number of letters to various persons interested in the rural-credits bill, and that has caused an immense volume of correspondence. We have also under way an investigation as to the stock exchanges in the United States, and that has also brought forth not only a large amount of protests, but also a large amount of correspondence.

There are, as I have said, a number of committees in the Senate that have an amount appropriated for them, largely in excess of the amount which the Banking and Currency Committee asks, and there is no more important committee in the entire Senate than is the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. LODGE. Does not this amendment give practically four clerks to the committee?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It gives four clerks, including the one authorized by the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The messenger is practically a clerk.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; including the messenger, this will make four clerks; and I desire to repeat that it is an important committee and should have that amount of help.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not wish to point out the fact that a dozen committees have a larger force than has the Committee on Banking and Currency. I do not think that has anything to do with the question. If the Banking and Currency Committee needs this service, it ought to have it.

We have had to deal with the Federal reserve act, of which the Senator from New York has spoken, and to which he refers as a concluded matter. It is not a concluded matter. The Committee on Banking and Currency is subjected to a constant flow of inquiries from the 25,000 banks of this country, which are asking questions every day about some feature of the Federal reserve act, wanting explanations about it, suggesting improvements in regard to it, and making objections concerning it. So that the committee have found it necessary to offer certain amendments to that act; and there is on the calendar now an amendment proposed which it has not been possible to have taken up because of the pressure of other business.

We have also before us a very important question affecting the codification of the national banking law, which ought to be disposed of, and which was under consideration heretofore by the Finance Committee, but is now before our committee.

The question of rural credits is also a very important one. There are two branches of the rural-credits subject, one affecting the landschaften system and the other the personal-credit system.

Then, also, the investigations made by the Pujo committee in regard to clearing houses and the regulation of stock exchanges is a matter which has occupied much attention of the committee and which involves a very large correspondence. The hearings on the question of regulating the stock exchanges embrace a thousand printed pages. The need for the additional assistance is obvious. I presented it to the committee and it ought to be granted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. He says that this extra work is largely the result of inquiries with reference to the new banking and currency act. Am I right about that? I understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. OWEN. In part; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator also speaks of a bill that has not yet become a law.

Mr. OWEN. The rural credits bill has excited a very lively interest all over the country, and there are two aspects of that measure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator whether the committee are engaged in any propaganda in favor of that bill, which requires extra assistance, or are they merely answering questions which may be asked?

Mr. OWEN. I will answer the Senator by saying that the committee, of course, is engaged in no propaganda, and I should like to know why the Senator asks that question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask it because the committee have an unusual amount of assistance.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is mistaken in saying the committee has an unusual amount of assistance. Every committee has three clerks. Even the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers has three clerks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; the Senator is mistaken as to that.

Mr. OWEN. Perhaps I am, but I think not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator is mistaken. There are only two clerks and a messenger assigned to that committee, although the messenger may be a clerk. I do not dispute the Senator, except that he is not so designated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They may not be designated as clerks, but neither has this committee more than two clerks, then, if that construction is placed upon the act of Congress. Every committee has three helpers, as they may be termed—two termed clerks and one termed a messenger; and that is all this committee has at the present time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not disposed to make any point about the amount of help the committee requires. I think it is an important committee, and if it really needs this help I am not disposed to withhold it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for clerks to committees, on page 4, line 18, after the word "clerk," to strike out "$1,440" and insert "$1,800," so as to read:

Education and Labor—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk, $1,800, messenger, $1,440.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. It is not my purpose to take upon myself the burden of dealing with all the minor changes and amendments here, but this is another illustration of the same proposition which I made a few minutes ago—that retrenchment should begin at home; and I do not think we ought to adopt any provision which increases the clerical forces of our own committees or increases their salaries without having good reason given for it. I dare say a good reason can be given for this, but I want it given before I sit still and permit the increase to be made. I should like to know what the reason is.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] asked for that increase. He is present and he can explain it to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I asked for that increase because I can not retain the assistant I have at less. There will be a very important matter before this committee during the coming session of Congress, the bill involving vocational education. He has had a large amount of correspondence during the past 12 months incident to that work and other educational work. It has grown. I am compelled to have as capable a man as I have to keep up with the work. I have to turn over a large amount of it to him, and he also aids in handling work before the departments. If Congress does not provide this amount, I shall have to pay it myself to keep the capable man who fills the place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 18, on page 5, the last words read being as follows:

Finance—clerk $3,000, assistant clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,600, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,440, two experts, one for the majority and one for the minority, at $2,000 each.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if economy of business administration is desired, I suggest that here is a list of clerks, at least some of whom are entirely unnecessary. There are two experts added. They may have been necessary before in handling the tariff bill, but they certainly are not necessary now. The Finance Committee has very little to do at present. Banking and currency has been taken from the Finance Committee, and yet there are left for the Finance Committee a clerk at $3,000, an assistant clerk at $2,220, an assistant clerk at $1,600, an assistant clerk at $1,440, a messenger at $1,440, and two experts at $2,000 each. These men are in no sense needed by the committee. They are really the clerks of the chairman, except that one expert goes to the leader of the minority on the committee.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can move to strike out the experts. They are not needed at this moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to strike out the experts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think that had better be passed over until the chairman of the committee is here and can be heard. He is not here now. He notified me that he had to go away. I do not think the amendment is in order at this time, anyhow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has already agreed to take up the bill first for committee amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is not a committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the amendment can, of course, be proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply ask that that item go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. The motion is not in order now, anyway, under the rules.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the item of appropriations for clerks to committees, on page 5, line 21, after the word "clerk," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000," so as to read:

Foreign Relations—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for clerks to committees, on page 6, line 5, after the word "clerk," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "$2,220" and insert "$2,500," so as to read:

Interoceanic Canals—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think that calls for some explanation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is the chairman of that committee, appeared before the committee and insisted that he could not get along without this increase; that he could not keep an efficient man. He insisted on it.

Mr. ROOT. That is quite natural, Mr. President. The most admirable impulses of our nature tend to make every chairman of a committee desire to increase the pay of his clerks. Some of us increase the pay of our clerks out of our own pockets; but observe the process: One at a time, one after another, all these clerks will have their pay raised. That has already been done. While we are very stern about the pay of the clerks in the executive departments, we are very kind and considerate about the pay of clerks of Senate committees. It is demoralizing to see the men who fix the salaries applying two different rules to two different sets of clerks—the rule of strict economy to the poor fellows who do not have access to us, who do not have an opportunity to appeal to our kindly sympathies, and the rule of large-hearted generosity to the men we appoint ourselves and who are in daily contact with us.

I should like to see all their salaries increased, but I am yielding now to an impulse to say something for the men who have not any "pull"; to say something for the men who can not get at a Senator and work upon his sympathies. You go through the list of the employees of the Senate from top to bottom and you will find that for services no higher in character, no more important, calling for no greater ability or experience, we are paying our own favorites here 50 per cent more than we permit the men in the executive departments to be paid.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ROOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I am in entire sympathy with the line of the Senator's argument; but he made a statement a moment ago to the effect that he wanted to say something for the class of officials who could not get at Senators. If there is any such class here, I should like to know it, because I have been laboring under the delusion, based upon my own experience, that everyone in public office had no trouble at all in getting at Senators.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, if they do, they do not get at me. If they do get at any Senator, it is with a barrier of repulsion between him and them. The poor fellow who gets hold of a Senator in the lobby or on the street or elsewhere in his casual and ineffective way does not really get at him. These gentlemen who are in our committee rooms and working with us, and for whom we have regard and esteem and often affection, are the ones that really get at us. I should like to see their salaries increased; but, I repeat, we can not retrench, economize, and have cheerful and effective service when we apply two different rules to Government employees; when we apply the rule of large generosity to our own friends and the rule of strict, severe, and parsimonious economy to the clerks.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, why does the Senator say that? If he will examine this bill, he will find that many of these department clerks get more salary. The first-class clerks get $1,800. The Senator has been making a fight here against one clerk getting $1,800.

Mr. ROOT. No, sir.

Mr. OVERMAN. Every first-class Government clerk in Washington gets $1,800. That was as I understood the Senator.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am not making a fight against a clerk getting $1,800.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what the Senator did a few minutes ago.

Mr. ROOT. No; I am making a fight against having these increases made without satisfactory evidence to the Senate that they ought to be made.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; but I take issue with the Senator when he says our clerks are paid more than the clerks in the departments, when if the Senator will examine this bill he will find that the heads of bureaus get three and four thousand dollars, every first-class clerk gets $1,800, and many of them are getting $2,700. I say that the department clerks, according to their ratings, are paid higher than our own clerks. Let the Senator go through the bill and see if that is not so.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I have been through these appropriation bills many times, and I am pretty familiar with the salaries that are paid to the department clerks. I oppose the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina with the assertion that our men are paid 50 per cent higher for similar service than the men in the departments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I take issue with the Senator. The Senator can take up any department in this bill—I do not care which one he takes up—and he will find that the clerks of the same class are paid higher than the Senators' clerks. The Senators' clerks, as a rule, get $1,440. Some of them, a few of them, get $1,800. Every first-class clerk in the departments gets $1,800; every second-class clerk gets $1,600; every third-class clerk gets $1,400; so most of our clerks only get what a third-class clerk in the department gets. Let the Senator examine the bill, and he will find that is true.

Mr. ROOT. The great bulk of the clerks in the departments get from $720 to $1,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. Our clerks at the head of these committees get either the same or within $500 of the salary of the chief clerk of a whole executive department.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, let us take up one department. You can take up any of them. My eye falls on the Office of the Auditor for the War Department:

Auditor, $4,000.

There is not a first-class clerk in the Senate that gets $4,000.

Mr. ROOT. There is not? Right here——

Mr. OVERMAN. The next item is:

Assistant and chief clerk, $2,250.

That is about what a majority of them get. Then there is a law clerk, $2,000; chief of division of accounts, $2,500; chief of division, $2,000; 2 assistant chiefs of division, at $1,900 each; chief transportation clerk, $2,000; clerks, 22 of class 4, $1,800 each. So these clerks in the departments are paid 50 per cent higher, instead of 50 per cent less, than ours of the same grade.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, what is it that these clerks of committees have to do compared with the work which the men in the departments have to do? The functions of our committee clerks are practically on a level with the functions of the clerks in the departments who are now in class 1, class 2, class 3, and class 4.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield further, the Senator says they do not have the same character of work, and he also made the statement that the clerks of Senators were paid more than the clerks in the departments. Now, I am going to take another one. Right on the next page, on page 42, is the Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury:

Comptroller, $6,000; assistant comptroller, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500; chief law clerk, $2,500; law clerks revising accounts and briefing opinions—1, $2,100; 8, at $2,000 each; expert accountants—6, at $2,000 each; private secretary, $1,800; clerks—8 of class 4; 3 of class 3; 1 of class 2—

And so forth. I will tell the Senator that if he will examine the matter, as I hope he will do, he will agree with me that our clerks are not paid salaries equal to those of clerks who are doing the same class of work in the departments. I do not care what department we take.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an observation?

Mr. ROOT. In the first place let me observe that I do not agree with the Senator from North Carolina at all and I propose to call attention to some of the facts in this very bill.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield at this juncture?

Mr. ROOT. I will.

Mr. MYERS. I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that employees in the Government departments begin work at 9 o'clock in the morning and quit at 4.30 in the afternoon, and it is my understanding that during the summer time they get every Saturday afternoon off and they get 30 days holiday during the year. The clerk of the Senate Committee on Public Lands has been working all winter from 8 o'clock in the morning until 7 at night, and often after dinner, and every Sunday as a rule, and both the stenographers of that committee have kept about the same or pretty nearly the same hours. The employees of committees I know often have to do all the work for Senators and the Senate work, and they have no such opportunities as civil-service employees in the departments of the Government. They have no such privileges and promotions. I know that is true in very many instances. I know it is true of the Senate Committee on Public Lands. The employees of that committee and of Senators often have to handle important, weighty, and responsible matters which require considerable skill and judgment and amount to more than the ordinary routine work of department employees.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. I merely wish to suggest another fact to the Senator. My committee is not asking for any increased pay, but I think we would be justified in doing it, considering the amount of work. Of course, the most of it comes to me perhaps as a Senator rather than as chairman of the committee. But I want to suggest this thought to the Senator: Within the last few years we have been in constant session here, probably 10 months in the year. The salaries which our clerks are getting were for the most part fixed years ago when the Senate was in session hardly six months in a year, and now, when they are required to be here almost twice as long as they were some years ago, their salaries are not proportionately increased. When it comes to clerks in the departments I am not aware that the character of their work has very materially changed; but I do know that in some of the departments and bureaus there are twice as many clerks now as there ought to be.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I will agree that there are a great deal nearer twice as many during the last two years.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, to what extent have they increased in the last two years over what they were before?

Mr. ROOT. I was agreeing about it with the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I understood the Senator to make the statement that in the last two years there were more than there ought to have been.

Mr. ROOT. That was the extent of my agreement with the Senator from Ohio. It is his proposition, not mine.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean to say by that that there were not more clerks in those departments two years ago than there should have been?

Mr. ROOT. No; I do not mean to say anything about it. I meant to limit my agreement. The Senator made a proposition, and I agree with it up to a certain extent.

Mr. POMERENE. That is certainly a very clever limitation.

Mr. ROOT. Well, I am very glad to have the approval of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think that we differ very much on that subject.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, let me call attention now to the clerks upon the page that I open in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. What page?

Mr. ROOT. Page 43. It begins: Office of Auditor for Treasury Department: Auditor, $4,000; chief clerk and chief of division, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; two chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; clerks—18 of class 4, that is, $1,800; 15 of class 3, that is, $1,600; 13 of class 2, that is, $1,400, and lower than the lowest clerk's salary that we pay; 31 of class 1, that is, $1,200, the salary we pay to a messenger and lower than any salary paid to any clerk of any committee. There are 31 of that class. Nine at $1,000 each, that is, $200 less than we pay to a messenger. Four at $900 each, $300 less than we pay to a messenger. Three assistant messengers, and so forth.

Office of the Auditor for the War Department: Auditor, $4,000; assistant and chief clerk, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; chief of divisions of accounts, $2,500; chief of division, $2,000; 2 assistant chiefs of division, $1,900 each; chief transportation clerk, $2,000; clerks—22 of class 4, that is, $1,800; 49 of class 3, that is, $1,600; 55 of class 2, that is, $1,400; 45 of class 1, that is, $1,200; 9 at $1,000 each; and 3 at $900 each. For the Office of the Auditor for the Navy Department, I find 13 of class 4; 22 of class 3, at $1,600; 20 of class 2, at $1,400; 23 of class 1, at $1,200. So I can go through this bill.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] calls my attention to the Post Office appropriation bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. On what page?

Mr. ROOT. On page 24. By this it appears that there are 466 clerks of grade 10, not exceeding $1,800 each; 1,658 of grade 9, not exceeding $1,700 each; 601 of grade 8, not exceeding $1,600 each; 6,985 of grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 2,041 of grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 1,839 of grade 5, not exceeding $1,300 each; 2,441 of grade 4, not exceeding $1,200 each, our messengers' pay; 2,672 of grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each, less than our messengers' pay; 2,429 of grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each, $200 less than our messengers' pay; 2,213 of grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each, $300 less than our messengers' pay. Altogether, as the Senator from Michigan has footed it up, 19,863 clerks in the Railway Mail Service at less than $1,500 a year.

I say, sir, upon a long experience and observation both of the executive departments and of the legislative work of the Senate, the duties performed by these thousands of clerks, who receive no more pay or less pay than our messengers, are equal in dignity, importance, and difficulty to the work of any clerks of our Senate committees with the exception of not more than a dozen.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has forgotten probably the fact that every one of those clerks is entitled to promotion. They go in at $1,200, and they go up to $1,400 and $1,600 and $1,800. Our clerks have no chance of promotion; they have no 8-hour law; they work 10 and 12 hours in a day. The department clerks work from 8 o'clock until 4 o'clock and have the balance of the day. I still maintain that the clerks in the departments get a larger salary, relatively, than our clerks.

Our clerks are called messengers, but the Senator knows that they are the hardest-worked clerks we have, and that some of the most efficient are called messengers. The typewriters and stenographers are generally called messengers.

Now, take the Department of State, which the Senator presided over so ably. He will find that the clerks of that department are getting a great deal higher pay, where they receive salaries that have not been changed since the Senator was the head of that great department. I should like to see some of the clerks in that department get more; I do not think they are probably paid as high as they ought to be paid; but I say the same grade of clerks in the departments certainly get more, and I stall maintain that they get more than Senators' clerks.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, without discussing the proposition as to the pay of the clerks of Senate committees, I call attention to the condition in the department with reference to clerks. Recently there has been an investigation by the efficiency department, as it is called of the Civil Service Commission. Upon a scientific examination of the force in the Office of the Treasurer of the United States, it was found that the office could be conducted for $40,000 a year less than it is being conducted; that there were a great many superfluous clerks there.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; Mr. President, that is true; but——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one word more. In order to try out the proposition as to whether these superfluous clerks could be dispensed with the man in charge of the investigation segregated the superfluous clerks and asked them not to go to work. He would go and find that they were working. They were afraid that they would lose their positions, and they insisted on working. In order to carry out the test he had to take these superfluous employees and put them in another room, and herd them in there to keep them from working, assuring them all the time that they were not going to lose their positions, explaining to them what the purpose of the investigation was, and supplying them with magazines and newspapers. They were kept there in idleness and forced to remain in idleness in order to run that office on an economical and businesslike basis. I venture to say the same condition exists in very many of the offices of all the departments of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. I admit that is true; but a great many clerks have been discharged. There has been great saving in one of the departments, and this investigation is going on. In one department since we considered the bill we found we could dispense with a thousand clerks. I am not fighting the salaries of clerks and I am not asking for an increase of any salaries here, but I do think the Senator from New York was wrong when he said that the clerks in the departments are paid lower salaries than clerks of Senators. When he takes into consideration the fact that every one of those clerks is entitled to promotion, that they are continually promoted. There are three or four grades under the civil service, and a clerk who goes in at the $1,400 grade is then promoted to the $1,600 grade, and then to the $1,800 grade. Never, as long as time lasts, will one of our clerks be promoted. Then, those clerks have their hours from 9 to 4 or 4.30 o'clock. Our poor clerks work day in and day out and night in and night out. When you take that into consideration I say our clerks are paid much less than any clerks on earth.

Mr. President, I do not want to prolong this debate. All I ask is that the Senator from New York will go with me some time and look into the matter. I do not propose to relieve the Department of State of its clerks. I think they are valuable clerks, and probably ought to be paid more than any other clerks. They are pretty valuable people.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; they are good clerks.

Mr. OVERMAN. I doubt whether the clerk in the Senator's office gets fourteen hundred dollars——

Mr. ROOT. Under ordinary circumstances they have a vacation half the time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not for the last six years.

Mr. ROOT. It is to be hoped that those conditions will not continue. Since that subject has been brought up, I want to say that we, in considering the labors of these clerks, ought not to assume that the bad practice of the last few years is to be continued. If we are going to have good legislation, we must not continue it. The city of Washington is like a boiler shop, and the Members of the Senate and the House have the sounds of strife and of political movement dinned into their ears continually, until after a time they can not hear from home. They can not hear from the real thought and feeling of the people of the United States. The Members of the Senate and the House ought to go home and live there a considerable part of every year, so that they may get into touch with their constituents and reorient themselves and get an idea of what the country is thinking and feeling, instead of staying here and squabbling 12 months in the year and getting every month farther and farther away from a real appreciation of the feeling and opinion and purpose and needs of their constituents.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not take any issue with the Senator on that question.

Mr. ROOT. Therefore we are not to assume that these clerks are to work 12 months in the year, but we are to hope and expect that Congress will go back to the good old practice of coming here and considering legislation during a reasonable period and then going home to get into touch with the people of the country, allowing their clerks a reasonable vacation.

Mr. President, there is one thing I want to refer to. The particular question is upon the increase of the salary of a clerk for the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. I would like to ask how many meetings of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals there have been during the present session of Congress? I am informed there has not been one meeting of that committee since the tolls question was disposed of, nearly a year ago.

Mr. THOMAS. There were meetings of the committee upon the tolls bill, which constitutes the only business that committee has had since I have been a Member of the Senate.

Mr. ROOT. Very well. Then, sir, for what is it that we are to increase the compensation of this clerk?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to answer that. Because the chairman of the committee has insisted upon having a $3,000 head of the clerical force of that committee instead of one at $2,500.

Mr. ROOT. How did he confine himself to that demand? Why did he not make it $12,000?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, there is this feature about this particular case: It is an increase here of $280. The Senator who is chairman of that committee represents the great State of New York and he has a degree of correspondence that is enormous. There is no doubt about that. Is it possible that we are to consider a man who has such a large constituency as not being entitled to have proper help in his work? We find as a matter of fact that when men come from large States there ought to be some concession made to them with respect to their clerks, and there generally is, because they represent generally a constituency with whom they have a large amount of correspondence. While his committee may not meet often there is continual correspondence between the Senator and his constituents.

It seems to me that this is a great amount of talk to be made over an increase of $280 a year. People differ in regard to what the expenditures of the Government should be. Some man thinks that if we make an increase of $100 or $200 it is extravagant. Other people think that expenditures in other directions are very extravagant.

Mr. President, the Senator from New York himself introduced a bill at the last session of Congress to erect a monument up at Lake Champlain for $250,000 and it was given. For an ornamental purpose, at a time when the Government is not making expenditures, it seems——

Mr. ROOT. May I ask the Senator from Colorado whether this is an ornamental matter?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it is not. It is more a useful than an ornamental matter. Whenever you come to the question of an appropriation for something that is ornamental, of all times when you can dispense with it is a time when the Government revenues are not equal to the expenditures.

Now, I do not blame the Senator. I think his idea in regard to what is extravagant and what is not extravagant is different from that of other people. I have been a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate and continually Senators come there wanting some additional help. We have been generally trying to fight them and trying to make the allowances just as low as we reasonably can. In the same way in the Committee on Appropriations we endeavor to do it. A claim comes in for an increase of $3,000 and we try to cut it down to $2,500. From my knowledge concerning these matters, while as a matter of fact we try to cut them down, yet there is merit in almost every application that is made. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this increase ought to be allowed.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] alluded to the great amount of extra work that the Senator from New York and his office force have to perform and which he has to perform as a Senator on account of the great constituency which he represents. Mr. President, I represent a constituency only second to that of the Senator from New York, and yet at the opening of this session of Congress the salary of my principal clerk was reduced from what he formerly received, $2,220, to $2,000, and the salary of my assistant clerk was reduced from $1,440 to $1,200. Both these men have exactly the same amount of work to perform that they had two years ago and both of them have just as much to do in the way of attending to correspondence on account of the great constituency that I represent as the clerks of the Senator from New York.

This brings me to the point of the great favoritism that is shown by giving the assistants of one Senator one amount of pay and of another Senator another amount of pay for exactly the same kind, quantity, and quality of work. That is the point which is made, and I think that is what is in the mind of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] in objecting to the increase, not as a matter perhaps of extravagance but of extreme favoritism.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator if the reduction which he complains of was not caused by the fact that he held the chairmanship of a committee more than two years ago, the clerk of which had a salary of $2,250 a year, and he has had an assignment as chairman of another committee the clerk of which receives a less amount?

Mr. OLIVER. It was not, Mr. President. I happened to be then in the same position that is now occupied by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], chairman of a committee which never had any work to do, a committee which might be called a "paper committee," and now I do not happen to be chairman of any committee, but my office force has just as much work to do as it had then. It has the work that pertains to other committees of which I am a member, though not a chairman. I am a member of several important committees of the Senate, and all of them entail work upon me and work upon my office force. I with my colleague attend to all the wants of all the nearly 9,000,000 people of Pennsylvania. The correspondence connected with that requires work, and my clerk is just as much entitled to $2,500 a year as is the clerk of the Senator from New York, because he does just as much work and his work is worth just as much money.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator whether there has been any reduction in the pay of any of these clerks from four years ago up to the present time.

Mr. OLIVER. There has been a reduction in the salary of my clerk of $280.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was by reason of the fact——

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will yield to me, I wish to say that what the Senator from Pennsylvania describes as occurring in his clerical force occurred in exactly the same way in my clerical force.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was because the Senator lost his chairmanship. Is not that the fact?

Mr. LIPPITT. It does not make any difference what chairmanship was lost, the fact is that two men in my office allowed to me by the provisions of this bill had their salaries reduced some $200 apiece. The amount of work that they had to perform, the number of hours that they had to use in performing that work, and their capacity and efficiency are exactly the same as they were before our good friends on the other side of the Chamber came into power. What really happened was that the clerks of some Senators had their salaries increased and others had their salaries cut down.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There have been very few that have been increased.

Mr. LIPPITT. I know that the salaries of my men were cut down, and I made it up out of my personal pocket.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator will find that it was because he lost the chairmanship of his committee. A certain salary is attached to the clerk of a Senator who has a chairmanship, and when a person has not a chairmanship that salary does not apply. That has been the rule the last four or five years, and there has been no change made with respect to it.

Mr. OLIVER. That is an explanation perhaps, but it is not a defense.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. There are two grounds on which the pay of clerks is based. One is a committee like the Banking and Currency Committee, where the work of the committee requires it. Now, the Senator is placing his defense of this increase in the case of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. He can not put it on the ground of the work of the committee, because the committee does not meet, but he puts it on the ground of the personal work which the Senator from the great State of New York is called upon to do, which I entirely recognize. But why is one Senator from New York, independent of the committee, entitled to a still further increase when the other Senator from New York, with precisely the same work, is not entitled to it—if you put it on that basis?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no doubt if the Senator from New York would appear before the committee and represent that his clerks are unable to do his work there would be some increase added to the force. As a matter of fact, there are two elements that enter into the salary of clerks. One is the element of committee work and the other is the element of the large correspondence with constituents. Both of them are matters that should be taken into consideration in determining the question.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, if it had occurred to me that my colleague was chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and I had known he wanted this increase for his personal convenience—not for the affairs of the committee but for his own correspondence—I should not have selected this particular increase for the purpose of pointing my moral; but I did it without realizing that it was the committee of my colleague. So long, however, as it is up and it is put upon the personal ground, I can only say that it is a very fortunate thing for the gentleman who is engaged in writing out the correspondence of the Democratic Senator from the State of New York, because of his employer's politics, his services are to be rated at $2,500 a year and his salary to be increased, while the gentleman who is doing the same thing for the Republican Senator from New York has his salary cut down to $2,000. I did apply, I did protest, I did say to the committee that the great correspondence that was incident to being one of the representatives of 10,000,000 people called for a very great amount of labor compared with that of the representatives of smaller States; but the salary of my friend and assistant was cut down, and I shall sit and see, with a mild degree of envy, the salary of the friend and assistant of my colleague increased upon purely political grounds, and none other.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to state to the senior Senator from New York that the junior Senator from New York appeared before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate nearly two years ago and insisted upon an increase of this particular salary, but the committee refused it. There have been one or two applications made there by him; and as a compromise of matters, while the interoceanic canal bill was before the Senate, we agreed that he should be allowed the increase for one or two months only, but outside of that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate refused it, not because his clerk was a Democrat or because the other clerk might be a Republican.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have not the slightest idea of following this debate through all of the collateral and irrelevant matters that have been discussed. The proposition is a very simple one and a very narrow one. It is to add $280 per annum to the salary of the clerk of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. The Committee on Appropriations thought that $280 ought to be added to his salary, and they so reported. It may be that the committee was in error, but all the Senate have to do is to vote on the matter. That is all I ask them to do. If they do not think this $280 ought to be allowed, let them vote down the proposition. If they think it ought to be allowed, let them sustain the committee. I have, however, no pride of opinion about it, and will not be hurt in the slightest degree if the committee is overruled, but I must say a word in defense of the committee from the attack made on it by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

The Senator from New York started out with the statement that the committee had not dealt fairly in this matter of salaries, and that he wanted to say something for those who had been treated unfairly. The Senator from New York may be the only fair man in the Senate; evidently he thinks so, but I differ from him. I believe he is as fair as anyone else, but I do not think he has a monopoly of fairness.

I think the Committee on Appropriations have dealt with this matter as fairly as they could deal with it. The committee are not infallible; they may have made a mistake in this instance, and I am perfectly willing for the Senate to overrule it, but I must resent the imputation that has been made that the committee has not dealt fairly in fixing these salaries, and that is exactly what the Senator from New York said.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia is mistaken. I made no imputation upon the committee. The Committee on Appropriations does not fix the salaries; the Senate fixes the salaries. What I said applied to the Senate, and it included me as well as it did every other Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Well, I thought the Senator was referring to this report and that is the way I understood it, and I think that would be the interpretation of anybody who listened to his remarks. The question was on the action of the committee; the Senate had not increased this salary by $280; the committee had reported in favor of it, and the committee, and nobody else, had done it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee recommended it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The committee recommended it, and the Senate has not acted upon it. So the charge of unfairness could not have applied to the Senate when the Senate has not acted on it at all, but could apply only to the committee. The committee have dealt as fairly with it as they are able to deal and with just as much fairness as the Senator from New York has done. He is a little too free in making accusations against the motives of other people. It is a very difficult work which the Committee on Appropriations have to perform. They are besieged and beset with appeals of all sorts for all kinds of appropriations, and particularly for increases in salaries. We have endeavored to deal as fairly with the matter as we could, and we think we have dealt fairly with it. We have reported this little increase of $280 for the clerk of the Senator's colleague. If the Senator does not want to allow that increase, all I ask is that the vote be taken and that the matter be settled in accordance with the judgment of the Senate, which will be perfectly satisfactory to me. I am exceedingly anxious to see progress made on this bill. I would rather have seen it voted out at the start than to have spent a great deal more than $280, which this discussion has no doubt cost. I do hope that we can have a vote on the amendment and settle it in accordance with the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am going to take but a moment, I will say to the chairman of the committee; but I want to state that I am glad this discussion has come up, because it emphasizes the same point I tried to make a little while ago in discussing this very matter.

It seems to me there is more injustice and more inequity in the provisions of this bill than you would find in any appropriation bill that comes before this body, not as comparing our employees with the other employees of the Government, but in equity and in justice among our own employees. That grows out of the system the Senate has adopted with reference to fixing the salaries of its own employees. That side of the Chamber is not to blame for it. It grew up under the Republican administration; it has come down to us, and the same system is being followed now that was followed under the preceding Republican administration. So it can not be charged to partisanship or to that side of the Chamber, or anything of the kind, but we have adopted no system at all with reference to fixing the salaries of the employees of the Senate.

I have offered an amendment, and have had it printed, which I expect to propose when the proper time comes, changing the present system and providing for salaries for the clerks of Senators, and so on. It seems to me that we ought to do this. There is not a Senator from any State in the Union but is entitled to a secretary of high-class ability.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean to provide for clerks of committees, or of Senators individually and not for committees?

Mr. JONES. No; I propose to provide clerks for committees and also for Senators individually. I merely want to state briefly what I just now stated, that every Senator, no matter from what State he comes, big or little, ought to have at least one good man as his secretary. No matter what the size of the State, that man will have everything that he can do during all the time that he can give to his work. So it seems to me that every Senator ought to have a clerk, to be paid exactly the same salary.

I provide in my amendment that every Senator shall have a clerk, to be paid $2,500 a year. Take the Senator from New York. We give his clerk $2,500 a year because that Senator comes from a great State. That is true; and yet the secretary of the Senator from Rhode Island does just as much work and has just as much work to do as has the secretary of the Senator from New York, because each secretary can only do so much. No doubt more work comes to the Senator from New York than comes to the Senator from Rhode Island; but that should be met by additional help, and not by increasing the salary, for a man can not do any more than the secretary of the Senator from Rhode Island has to do and must do. Due allowance can be made for that increased work by providing additional assistance, and that is what we ought to do.

I have provided in my amendment, in brief, this: I recognize that there are certain committees that do a great deal of committee work, and I provide clerks for the Committees on Commerce, Appropriations, the District of Columbia, Finance, Foreign Relations, Interstate Commerce, the Judiciary, Banking and Currency, Public Lands, and Post Offices and Post Roads. I propose to give each of those committees a clerk at $2,750 per year.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I notice the Senator from Washington has included the Committee on the District of Columbia as doing some work. Has the Senator any knowledge that the Committee on the District of Columbia, as a committee, has done any work?

Mr. JONES. I have.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, can the Senator tell us when that committee had a meeting?

Mr. JONES. I can tell when they have not had a meeting.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that very well. Has the committee reported a bill at this session of Congress?

Mr. JONES. I do not care to refer to the committee. I want to say that that committee has a great many bills and a great many matters that ought to be considered.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. JONES. The committee, for some reason, has not had any meeting at this session of Congress. I know that in the preceding Congress that committee met regularly every week; that it had many bills before it; and that it reported out a great many of them.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say to the Senator from Washington that I am in entire sympathy with his plan. I do not know about all its details, but I think he is calling attention to a serious proposition here, and one that ought to be remedied. I do not believe there is any doubt about that; but when I see a committee like the Committee on the District of Columbia classified as one of the great committees, and then try to get a bill reported out of that committee, or even to get it considered by that committee, and I find that they never meet, I think they ought to have the same clerical help that the Committee for the Disposition of Useless Papers have.

Mr. JONES. I want to say as to the Committee on the District of Columbia not holding meetings, that it has only occurred in the last year or so, as I remember. In the preceding Congress the committee met every week, and sometimes two or three times a week; it had hearings and considered various bills and made many reports, and it was one of the most active committees of the Senate. During the present Congress it has had a great many bills before it. So that, altogether, I thought that it should be included in this list.

Then I give these committees a messenger during the sessions of Congress. It is a fact, as every Senator knows, that there are many committees of this body the employees of which, when the Senate is not in session, have nothing to do. That is something which we ought to remedy; we ought to change it. If Congress adjourns on the 4th of March, as we hope, and does not convene again until December, there are many, many employees of the Senate who will have absolutely nothing to do during all that period of time. That can be taken care of and ought to be taken care of by Congress providing that these places shall be filled while Congress is in session.

Without going further into that, I have included some other committees in the proposed amendment; but I will not stop now to go into the matter fully. I provide that each Senator shall have a clerk at $2,500 a year and an assistant clerk at $1,500 a year. That would allow a Senator to have a clerk remain in Washington when the Senator himself is not here, and also to have one at his home when he needs one there. I do not know how it is with most Senators; but I will say frankly that I could get along—and I have probably about as much work as any Senator here, outside of the chairmen of some of the big committees—I could get along when Congress is not in session with one clerk at home and one clerk or an assistant clerk here in Washington. Then, when the Senate is in session, I provide for a stenographer at $1,440.

If we would adopt some such plan as that—I do not say that that is the best plan—but if we could adopt some basis like that it would be more equitable, and we could save money for the Government of the United States.

I have the assurance of the chairman of the Committee on Rules that that committee is going to give this matter during the coming summer the most careful consideration, and will try to work out a method of reorganizing the committees of the Senate. There are about 51 of these committees that ought to be done away with absolutely. They are simply a fraud, a subterfuge, to secure additional help that Senators need as Senators and not as chairmen of committees.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to take further time in regard to the pending amendment. The Senator from New York needs the additional help, so far as that is concerned, but he does not need that help any more than does his colleague from his own State. It simply illustrates the injustice of the system under which we give to the secretary of one Senator from a certain State $2,500 and the secretary of the other Senator from the same State $2,000.

I shall offer the amendment to which I have referred at the proper time; but I promise the chairman of the committee that I will not take very much time then to discuss it. As I have said, we have the assurance of the Committee on Rules that they are going to look into this matter and try to work out a more equitable system in the administration of the affairs of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item of appropriation for clerks to committees, on page 8, line 4, after the words "in all," to strike out "$423,740" and insert "$426,680."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 4, to insert:

For additional amount for the clerk to the Committee on Rules for revising and preparing for publication biennially, under the direction of the committee, the Senate Manual, to be immediately available, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 8, to insert:

For compiling the Navy Yearbook for the calendar year 1914, under the direction of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, on page 8, line 18, after the word "each," to insert "1, $1,050," so as to read:

Messengers—4 (acting as assistant doorkeepers) at $1,800 each; 32 at $1,440 each; 1, $1,050; 1, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, on page 9, line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$139,680" and insert "$140,730."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 20, after the word "folders," to strike out "six" and insert "seven," and, in line 21, after the words "in all," to strike out "$16,720" and insert "$17,720," so as to make the clause read:

Folding room: Foreman, $1,400; assistant, $1,400; clerk, $1,200; folders—7 at $1,000 each, 8 at $840 each; in all, $17,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 19, to insert:

For driving, maintenance, and care of automobile for the Vice President, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On page 10, line 22, I move to strike out "$2,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 22, after the word "folding," it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,500," so as to read:

For materials for folding, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "House of Representatives," on page 12, line 18, after the word "Commissioners," to strike out "$43,750" and insert "$175,000," so as to make the clause read:

For mileage of Representatives, Delegates, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for office of Doorkeeper, on page 19, line 2, before the word "preceding," to strike out "eight" and insert "seven," so as to make the clause read:

Successors to any of the employees provided for in the seven preceding paragraphs may be named by the House of Representatives at any time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 21, to insert:

For driving, maintenance, and operation of automobile for the Speaker of the House of Representatives, $1,500.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question as to this item for driving, maintenance, and operation of automobile for the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Why was not that inserted by the House? Why is the Senate called upon to insert that item?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not know why the House did not insert it; but we put in $1,500 for the expenses of the automobile of the Vice President, and we felt that it was hardly a consistent course that it should not be provided for both. I know that the House people were over here and asked us to do it. I do not know whether it was an accident or how it was, but I know that we were appealed to from the House side to make the same provision there that we made for the Vice President. The $1,500 is a meager allowance, and will not be fully equal to the expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Library of Congress," on page 25, after line 6, to insert:

Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, and for the acquisition of material required for their work, and for other expenses incidental thereto, $25,000, together with the unexpended balance, if any, of the sum appropriated under the head of "Legislative reference" for the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this is the same amount that was carried in the previous bill for this work?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Exactly the same, according to my understanding.

Mr. KENYON. I think it is a very useful thing and is getting to be a very necessary thing.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I started out with some prejudice against it, but some experience with it has satisfied me that it is useful and that the appropriation ought to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 21, after "$1,600," to strike out "one $1,500" and insert "three at $1,500 each"; in line 22, before the words "at $1,400," to strike out "two" and insert "three"; and on page 26, line 4, after the word "Librarian," to strike out "$35,100" and insert "$39,500," so as to make the clause read:

Distribution of card indexes: For service in connection with distribution of card indexes and other publications of the Library, including the following salaries now authorized and being paid: Chief of division, $3,000; chief assistant, $1,800; assistants—1 $1,600, 3 at $1,500 each, 3 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,100 each, 3 at $1,000 each; and for services of assistants at salaries less than $1,000 per annum and for piecework and work by the hour, $15,600, including not exceeding $500 for freight charges, expressage, traveling expenses connected with such distribution, and expenses of attendance at meetings when incurred on the written authority and direction of the Librarian, $39,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 15, to strike out:

The Librarian of Congress shall hereafter perform the duties, except those of disbursing officer, required of the superintendent of the building of the Library of Congress as provided in the act approved February 19, 1897 (29 Stat. L., 545).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 21, to strike out:

The Librarian of Congress is authorized to appoint a disbursing clerk, who shall also act as assistant superintendent of the Library building and grounds and perform the duties of disbursing clerk under the aforesaid act and the act approved July 19, 1897 (30 Stats. L., p. 136). The disbursing clerk shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine and shall receive a salary of $2,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that I shall offer an amendment on line 5, page 28, after the committee amendments have been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice of the Senator from Utah will be noted.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 5, after the word "grounds," to strike out "Disbursing clerk and assistant superintendent, $2,500," and insert "Superintendent, $3,000, and the salary of the superintendent of the Library building and grounds shall, from and after the passage of this act, be at the rate of $3,000 per annun, and the amount appropriated for the salary of said superintendent for the balance of the fiscal year 1915 shall be available for the payment of said salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum"; in line 13, after the words "clerks," to insert "1 $2,000"; and in line 26, after the words "in all," to strike out "$74,345" and insert "$76,845," so as to make the clause read:

Library building and grounds: Superintendent, $3,000, and the salary of the superintendent of the Library building and grounds shall, from and after the passage of this act, be at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and the amount appropriated for the salary of said superintendent for the balance of the fiscal year 1915 shall be available for the payment of said salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum; clerks—1 $2,000, 1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 1 $1,000; messenger; assistant messenger; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; captain of watch, $1,400; lieutenant of watch, $1,000; 16 watchmen, at $900 each; carpenter, painter, and foreman of laborers, at $900 each; 14 laborers, at $540 each; 2 attendants in ladies' room, at $480 each; 4 check boys, at $360 each; mistress of charwomen, $425; assistant mistress of charwomen, $300; 58 charwomen; chief engineer, $1,500; assistant engineers—1 $1,200, 3 at $900 each; electrician, $1,500; machinists—1 $1,000, 1 $900; 2 wiremen, at $900 each; plumber, $900; 3 elevator conductors, and 10 skilled laborers, at $720 each; in all $76,845.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that amendment may be passed over.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. May I ask the Senator why he wants it to go over?

Mr. SMOOT. I want it to go over because I want to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Let the committee amendment be agreed to, and then the Senator from Utah can offer his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose my amendment would not interfere with the committee amendment, and therefore I have no objection to its being agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has no objection to its being agreed to at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I simply give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment which does not affect the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Botanic Garden," on page 29, line 17, after the word "Congress," to strike out "$14,593.75" and insert "$16,593.75," so as to make the clause read:

For assistants and laborers, under the direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $16,593.75.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 23, after the word "Congress," to strike out "$6,500" and insert "$8,500," so as to make the clause read:

For procuring manure, soil, tools, fuel, purchasing trees, shrubs, plants, and seeds; and for services, materials, and miscellaneous supplies, and contingent expenses in connection with repairs and improvements to Botanic Gardens, under direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Executive," on page 30, line 7, after the word "clerks," to insert "2 at $2,500 each"; in line 8, before the words "of class 4," to strike out "six" and insert "four"; and in line 11, after the words "in all," to strike out "$73,440" and insert "$74,840," so as to make the clause read:

Office of the President: Secretary, $7,500; executive clerk, $5,000; chief clerk, $4,000; appointment clerk, $3,500; record clerk, $2,500; 2 expert stenographers, at $2,500 each; accountant, $2,500; 2 correspondents, at $2,500 each; disbursing clerk, $2,000; clerks—2 at $2,500 each; 3 at $2,000 each, 4 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 4 of class 2, 3 of class 1; messengers—2 at $900 each, 2 at $840 each; 3 laborers, at $720 each; in all, $74,840: Provided, That employees of the executive departments and other establishments of the executive branch of the Government may be detailed from time to time to the office of the President of the United States for such temporary assistance as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 20, to insert:

For such expenses as, in the opinion of the President, are properly connected with the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal and each and every purpose connected therewith, $160,000, to be immediately available, to be expended at the discretion of the President and accounted for on his certificate solely. The President is authorized to utilize the services of such officers of the Army and Navy as he may designate to assist in the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal. The services of the officers of the Army while so employed shall be counted as service with their organizations within the meaning of all laws relating to the detachment of officers from their organizations for duty of any kind. The actual expenses of officers of the Army and Navy while on such duty shall be paid them in lieu of any mileage allowance to which they may be entitled by law. The President is authorized to use such vessels of the United States Army transport service and of the Panama Railroad for the purposes indicated herein as in his opinion can properly be spared, and any expense connected with this use of such vessels shall be payable out of the appropriation herein made, and any vessel not carrying freight-earning cargo used for the purposes indicated herein shall during such use for those purposes be exempt from payment of Panama Canal tolls.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that amendment may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over in the absence of objection.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Civil Service Commission," on page 33, after line 4, to strike out:

For establishment and maintenance of system of efficiency ratings, $30,000. The Civil Service Commission shall investigate and report to the President, with its recommendations, as to the administrative needs of the service relating to personnel in the several executive departments and independent establishments in the District of Columbia, and report to Congress details of expenditure and of progress of work hereunder at the beginning of each regular session: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation in excess of $4,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 14, to insert:

For maintenance of system of efficiency ratings, $40,000. The Civil Service Commission shall investigate and report to the President, with its recommendations, as to the administrative needs of the service relating to personnel in the several executive departments and independent establishments in the District of Columbia, and report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session details of expenditure and of progress of work hereunder, including investigation of duplication of statistical and other work in the various branches of the Government service: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation in excess of $4,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," in the item of appropriation for salary of Secretary of State, etc., on page 35, line 14, before the word "messengers," to strike out "five" and insert "six"; in the same line, before the word "assistant," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-four"; in line 17, after the word "operator," to insert "driver, $840; hostler, $720"; and in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$320,060" and insert "$321,740," so as to read:

Chief messenger, $1,000; 6 messengers; 24 assistant messengers; messenger boy, $420; packer, $720; 4 laborers, at $600 each; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; driver, $840; hostler, $720; in all, $321,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 18, to insert:

For emergency clerical services, to be expended by the Secretary of State in his discretion, $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Can we have a little explanation of what that item is for? It proposes to appropriate $30,000 for emergency clerical services. I am not objecting to it, but I simply would like to be informed why it is desired.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The State Department estimated for that and was very insistent that it was necessary. The department wanted $75,000 instead of $30,000, but the committee provided for only $30,000.

Mr. KENYON. The request from the Secretary of State was for $75,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator have the letter of the Secretary read? That, I think, will explain it in detail.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (reading)—

I am constrained to ask and earnestly and sincerely urge that the bill be so amended in the Senate as to provide a lump-sum appropriation of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the continuance of such temporary force during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, in order to adequately and properly perform the duties devolving upon this department.

It is a long letter. I think that covers that feature, though.

Mr. KENYON. Is there anything showing the number to be employed?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No. It is a fund that is to be disbursed as the necessities may require, in accordance with the judgment of the Secretary of State. If the Senator desires it, the entire letter can be read. It is a long letter, however—four or five pages in length.

Mr. KENYON. I wish we might have a little more information about it. May we have the letter read? Would there be any objection to that?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No; I have no objection whatever.

Mr. KENYON. I ask, then, that the Secretary read the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 22, 1914.

The Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MARTIN: In submitting its estimates for the support of the Department of State for the ensuing fiscal year, earnest desire was expressed for slight increases in the permanent force assigned to this department. These increases were submitted to and approved by the President, who realized the necessity for them. Owing to the present disturbed conditions in Europe, which affect the entire world, a great additional burden of work and responsibility has been imposed upon both the technical and clerical force of the Department of State. The volume of this work has increase 300 per cent since the 1st of August, and the numerous and intricate questions growing out of the European situation bid fair to continue this increased work for an indefinite period. Only because of the appropriation for the relief of American citizens abroad has it been possible, through the employment of a temporary force, to keep up the immense volume of work with which this department has had to deal. This temporary force, of course, is of limited tenure, and no provision is made for its employment beyond the present fiscal year. With the Department of State looking after the diplomatic interests of the greater part of Europe, and with no end to the present European struggle in sight, it seems imperative that ample provision be made for the extra clerical force necessary for the department to properly and adequately perform its duties. These facts were fully set forth to the House Subcommittee on Appropriations handling the legislative bill, but apparently to no avail, as the bill has already passed the House carrying no provisions whatever for any increase in the clerical force or any provision for the temporary force. In view of these facts, I am constrained to ask and earnestly and sincerely urge that the bill be so amended in the Senate as to provide a lump-sum appropriation of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the continuance of such temporary force during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, in order to adequately and properly perform the duties devolving upon this department.

I beg further to invite your attention to the request contained in the annual estimates of the modest increase in the appropriation for rental of buildings occupied by the Department of State, in order that the outlying bureaus of the department may be brought together and housed in a conveniently located building. The quarters assigned to the State Department in the State, War, and Navy Building have long since been outgrown. They are crowded to the limit and several important bureaus have been forced to take up quarters in two outlying, widely separated, and inadequately arranged buildings. It is believed that for a rental of not exceeding $15,000 a modern office building conveniently adapted to the needs of the department will be erected by private parties immediately across the street from the entrance to the Department of State, and will provide for almost as convenient quarters as though housed in the department building proper. The present scattered condition of the bureaus of the department not only renders efficient administrative work impossible, but is a source of constant irritation to numerous callers, including Senators and Representatives, who, upon calling at the department, often find that they must be referred to buildings located some distance away. The present rent paid by the department amounts to $11,200 per annum. The buildings occupied for which this rental is paid give an available floor space of 13,000 square feet. The proposed new building will afford an estimated available floor space of 16,000 feet, much more conveniently arranged, and much better adapted for efficient administration. It is believed that in this building can also be accommodated the several commissions associated with the Department of State, for which an annual rental of $5,200 additional to the $11,200 above mentioned is paid. The provision of $15,000 would therefore present an actual saving in the rental expenditure for the coming fiscal year.

I have also the honor to invite your attention to the fact that for the past 10 years, under the authority provided in the appropriations "For the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses," we employed a stableman for the care of horses, at a monthly salary of $55. The disbursing clerk of this department has recently been notified by the Comptroller of the Treasury that this expenditure will be no longer allowed unless the employment is specifically provided for. This matter should therefore be remedied in the appropriations for the coming year.

I beg further to call your attention to the case of Mr. John Barry, who has been the driver for the Secretaries of State for the past 35 years. Mr. Barry is carried upon the department's rolls as an assistant messenger at a salary of $60 per month. He is a most efficient, capable, and careful man. I understand that the carriage drivers of the other Cabinet members receive much higher salaries than Mr. Barry, and I earnestly recommend, in view of his long and faithful services, that he be specifically provided for.

I therefore have the honor to request that your committee amend the bill as it affects the provisions for the Department of State providing for the matters above presented as follows:

After line 9, on page 33, insert the following: "For emergency clerical service, to be expended by the Secretary of State, in his discretion, $75,000, or so much thereof as may be required."

Strike out lines 24 and 25, on page 33, and insert: "For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for the Department of State, $15,000; the Secretary of State is hereby authorized, in his judgment, to enter into a lease for a period of five years for the occupancy of a suitable building, in close proximity to the Department of State, for the housing of all outlying bureaus and offices of the department: Provided, The annual rental thereof shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated, any unexpended amount thereof to be available for heat and power connections with the State, War, and Navy Building."

After line 23, on page 33, insert the following: "One driver at $900 and one stableman at $720."

Every effort has been made to keep the required expenditures in the Department of State to the lowest possible limit, but it seems imperative, in view of the vastly increased amount of highly important work which the department is required to handle, and which bids fair to constantly increase as long, at least, as the present conditions continue in Europe, that the amounts herein requested are vital and necessary. I earnestly and urgently request the favorable consideration of your committee of the matters herein presented.

Very truly, yours,

W. J. BRYAN.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire if Mr. Barry has been taken care of in the bill. I notice that the salary of the driver is placed at $840. I assume that that is Mr. Barry. Has he been taken care of?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. He has. That has been provided for. This $30,000 is all that we gave of the $75,000 asked. I will say that it was my personal judgment that the Secretary ought to have had $75,000, but the subcommittee did not take that view, nor did the full committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," in the item of appropriation for Office of the Secretary, on page 37, line 22, after "$1,100," to insert "assistant painter, $900"; on page 38, line 9, after the word "each," to strike out "skilled laborer, $840" and insert "carpenter, $900; wireman, $900"; and in line 10, after the words "in all," to strike out "$485,980" and insert "$187,840"; so as to read:

Painter, $1,100; assistant painter, $900; plumber's assistant, $780; 85 charwomen; carpenters—two at $1,000 each, one $720. Winder Building: Engineer, $1,000; three firemen; elevator conductor, $720; four watchmen; three laborers (one of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the elevator conductor); forewoman of char force, $480; eight charwomen. Cox Building, 1709 New York Avenue: Two watchmen-firemen, at $720 each; laborer. Auditors' Building: Forewoman of char force, $480; 25 charwomen; elevator conductor, $720; five laborers, at $500 each (one of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the elevator conductor); two female laborers, at $480 each; carpenter, $900; wireman, $900; in all, $187,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 2, to strike out:

The reading was continued to line 24 on page 59.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On behalf of the committee, on page 59, line 24, I move to strike out "$2,600,000" and to insert "$2,500,000," so as to read:

For salaries and expenses of 40 revenue agents provided for by law, including per diem not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, and fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries and expenses of storekeepers and storekeeper-gaugers, $2,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 18 on page 60.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer the following amendment, to come in on page 60, after line 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, after line 18, insert:

Restricting the sale of opium, etc.: For expenses to enforce the provisions of the act approved December 17, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," including the employment of agents, deputy collectors, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, clerks, and messengers in the field and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, including not to exceed $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence to employees while officially engaged away from their designated posts of duty, being for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, $292,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 5, on page 61.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On page 61, line 5, I move to strike out "$90,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

For rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia, telephone service, and other miscellaneous expenses incident to the collection of internal revenue, purchase of necessary books of reference and periodicals for the chemical laboratory and law library, not to exceed $500, and reasonable expenses for not exceeding 60 days immediately following the injury of field officers or employees in the Internal-Revenue Service while in line of duty, of medical attendance, surgeon's and hospital bills made necessary by reason of such injury, and for horses crippled or killed while being used by officers in making raids, not exceeding $150 for any horse so crippled or killed, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Mints and assay offices," on page 68, line 6, after the word "melter," to strike out "chief clerk and cashier," and in line 7, after "$1,800," to insert "chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $3,000," so as to make the clause read:

Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for assay office at Salt Lake City, on page 68, line 9, after the word "employees," to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the clause read:

For wages of workmen, and other employees, $2,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public Buildings and Grounds," on page 77, line 17, after the word "park," to strike out "watchmen" and insert "police," so as to make the clause read:

For sergeant of park police, $950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 18, after the word "park," to strike out "watchmen" and insert "police," so as to make the clause read:

For second sergeant of park police, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 19, after the word "day," to strike out "watchmen" and insert "privates of park police," so as to read:

For day privates of park police, as follows: One in Franklin Park and adjacent reservations on New York Avenue; one in Lafayette Park, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 10, after the word "night," to strike out "watchmen," and insert "privates of park police," so as to make the clause read:

For night privates of park police, as follows: Two in Smithsonian Grounds and neighboring reservations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 6, after the word "park," to strike out "watchmen" and insert "police"; and, in the same line, after the word "ammunition," to strike out "$400" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase and repair of bicycles and revolvers for park police and for purchase of ammunition, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 9, after the word "bridge," to strike out "watchmen" and insert "police," so as to make the clause read:

For purchasing and supplying uniforms to park, Monument, and bridge police, $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," on page 81, after line 8, to strike out:

Library: Clerks—1 of class 2, 1 of class 1; assistant messenger; laborer; in all, $3,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 10, to strike out:

Office of Naval Records of the Rebellion: Chief clerk, $2,000; agent, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy from the officers of the late Confederate Navy, $1,800; clerks—1 of class 4, 3 of class 2, 3 of class 1, 2 at $1,000 each; copyist; coypist, $720; assistant messenger; necessary traveling expenses for collection of records, $100; in all, $17,840. All employees provided for by this paragraph shall be exclusively engaged on the work of this office during the fiscal year 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 20, to insert:

Office of Naval Records and Library: Chief clerk, $2,000; clerks—2 of class 4, one to be selected from officers of the Confederate Navy (agent for collection of Confederate records); 4 of class 2, 4 of class 1, 2 at $1,000 each; coypist; coypist, $720; assistant messenger; laborer; necessary traveling expenses for collection of records, $100; in all, $21,100. All employees provided for by this paragraph shall be exclusively engaged on the work of this office during the fiscal year 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the Nautical Almanac Office, on page 86, line 24, before the words "one $2,000," to insert "one $2,200"; in the same line, after the words "one $2,000," to insert "one $1,800"; and on page 87, line 2, after the words "in all," strike out "$15,640" and insert "$19,640," so as to make the clause read:

Nautical Almanac Office: For assistants in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac—one $2,200, one $2,000, one $1,800, two at $1,600 each, two at $1,400 each, three at $1,200 each, two at $1,000 each; copyist and typewriter, $900; assistant messenger; messenger boy, $420; in all, $19,640.

Mr. JONES. With reference to the first amendment and also the one following, "one $1,800," as the chairman of the committee knows I am very strongly opposed to those amendments; but in the interest of time I do not want to present the matter that I have gotten, and, furthermore, I do not want to do anything that will interfere with the proper conduct of that office. So I ask the chairman if he would not be willing to reject the first amendment and provide for two clerks at $1,800. If that would be satisfactory to the chairman of the committee, it would be agreed to by me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in the interest of economy of time, I will try to make the bill as acceptable as possible, and I am willing that that amendment shall be made; but if when the bill goes to conference any good reason can be shown against it, while I will insist on it myself, the Senator must understand it may be very difficult to retain it.

Mr. JONES. I want to suggest to the Senator that, of course, it will not be proper in conference to restore the one at $2,200, but the question would be whether to retain two at $1,800. I would not care if they are both rejected. We would save that much and not cripple the office, in my judgment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to the amendment the Senator suggests.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the first amendment be rejected, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves to amend the amendment of the committee, on page 86, line 24, by striking out "one, $1,800" and inserting "two, $1,800 each."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be authorized to change the totals throughout the bill where it may be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that action will be taken.

Mr. JONES. I simply want to say in connection with these amendments that I hope the people in the Nautical Almanac Office, when they get these two additional officers, if they do, will see if they can not carry on the office all right with them. I am satisfied they can do it. I have facts and data here that I intended to present, but I will not do it now. I will expect them to take care of the office with those two additional assistants. There are matters that ought to be investigated, but if an attempt is made to correct abuses in the office, adopt efficient methods, and not seek to punish or humiliate those who would assist in doing effective work, I shall be satisfied. Unless better methods are followed, the Nautical Almanac Office should be transferred to another department.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 91, line 15, after "$1,100," to strike out "one, $1,000" and insert "three, at $1,000 each," and in line 16, after the words "in all," to strike out "$8,100" and insert "$10,100," so as to make the clause read:

Division of Naval Militia Affairs: For the following, authorized by section 17 of the Naval Militia act approved February 16, 1914: Chief clerk, $1,600; clerks—1 of class 2, 2 of class 1, 1 $1,100, 3 at $1,000 each; messenger boy, $600; in all, $10,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," on page 94, line 11, before the word "Building," to strike out "Old Post Office Department" and insert "General Land Office," so as to make the clause read:

General Land Office Building: Engineer and electrician, $1,600; assistant engineer, $1,000; 4 firemen; 3 watchmen, acting as lieutenants, at $840 each; 20 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; 14 laborers; 9 laborers, at $480 each; 3 skilled mechanics (painter, carpenter, and plumber), at $900 each; in all, $39,380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for General Land Office, on page 96, line 10, after "$2,000," to insert "who may, with the approval of the commissioner, designate a clerk of the General Land Office to act as such depositary in his absence," so as to read:

Depositary acting for the commissioner as receiver of public moneys, $2,000, who may, with the approval of the commissioner, designate a clerk of the General Land Office to act as such depositary in his absence; clerk and librarian, $1,000; in all, $631,250.

For books for law library of the department, including their exchange, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Commerce," in the item of appropriation for the office of the Secretary, on page 121, line 25, after the word "each," to strike out "2 firemen, at $660 each (1 fireman transferred from Census Office)" and insert "3 firemen (1 transferred from Census Office)"; and on page 122, line 6, after the words "in all," to strike out "$170,360" and insert "$170,480," so as to read:

Three elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 firemen (1 transferred from Census Office); 13 laborers; 2 laborers, at $480 each; cabinetmaker, $1,000; carpenter, $900; chief watchman, $900; 10 watchmen (2 transferred from Census Office); 25 charwomen (5 transferred from Census Office); in all, $170,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 17, after the words "per day," to strike out "$552,300" and insert "$512,000, $150,000 of said sum to be immediately available for the completion of the canvass of manufacturing establishments," so as to make the clause read:

For securing information for census reports, provided for by law, semimonthly reports of cotton production, periodical report of stocks of baled cotton in the United States and of domestic and foreign consumption of cotton; per diem compensation of special agents and expenses of same and of detailed employees, whether employed in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere; cost of transcribing State, municipal, or other records; temporary rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia; for supervising agents, and employment by them of such temporary service as may be necessary in collecting statistics required by law: Provided, That the compensation of not to exceed five special agents provided for in this paragraph may be fixed at an amount not to exceed $8 per day, $512,000, $150,000 of said sum to be immediately available for the completion of the canvass of manufacturing establishments.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to inquire what that item is—"$150,000 of said sum to be immediately available for the completion of the canvass of manufacturing establishments." When was that authorized by law?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will try and find it for the Senator, but it is provided for by law. It is an appropriation in accordance with law, and this $150,000 made available immediately enables the Director of the Census to reduce the appropriation from $552,000 to $512,000, because it will enable him to carry on the work continuously and economically instead of irregularly.

Mr. BURTON. Is this appropriation of $150,000 in the nature of a deficiency appropriation or is it an annual appropriation?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a part of the appropriation for the year 1916. It is not a deficiency, but it is taken from the $512,000; it is made available immediately to enable the work to go along continuously and economically, and it will enable the Director of the Census to reduce the aggregate appropriation from $552,000 to $512,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the appropriation for last year was not sufficient to carry on the work to the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. In order that the work may continue right along, $150,000 of this amount for the coming fiscal year is now made available for the work for which they anticipated they would have appropriations in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator from Ohio desires it, I can have the letter from the Census Bureau read.

Mr. SMOOT. It had better be read.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is not in any sense a deficiency, but by being made immediately available it will effect an economy in the service.

Mr. BURTON. Before the letter is read I should like to ask, What is this "canvass of manufacturing establishments"?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a census of manufacturing establishments. It is a regular branch of the census work.

Mr. BURTON. In the usual form, giving the number of establishments, the capital, employees, wages, raw material, and finished product?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a complete census of general industries, as I understand, as provided for by law.

Mr. BURTON. When was that authorized?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can not immediately lay my hand on the statute which is now in force, and which provides for this census, but I know there is such a statute.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that it was provided for in the legislative bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. BURTON. What is the total cost of this census?

Mr. SMOOT. I forget exactly the amount of the appropriation, but I will say to the Senator that whatever the amount of the appropriation, it is not sufficient to carry on the work to the end of this year.

Mr. BURTON. There has been a census every five years of manufacturing establishments?

Mr. SMOOT. This is not the particular census of which the Senator speaks; this is the census which was provided for by the appropriation for the taking of the census of manufactures. There is, however, an appropriation made other than this for the general census of the United States. This has nothing whatever to do with that.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. In the statement prepared by the Director of the Census I find this, which will probably answer the question of the Senator from Ohio:

> There has been appropriated and set aside for the census of manufactures of 1914, $470,000, to be expended for field work during the fiscal year. It has also been estimated that the office work during the year ending June 30, 1915, on this branch of the census would amount to approximately $380,000, making a total expenditure for the present fiscal year of $850,000.

Of course, the addition of $150,000 would make it an even million dollars. As I understand, that will complete the census of manufactures.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. When is the result of this investigation to be promulgated—immediately upon its completion?

Mr. BRYAN. According to this statement, that is the purpose; it is not to be postponed.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not for the purpose of the next census, is it?

Mr. BRYAN. No; as I understand, the Director of the Census states that he will be able to publish it shortly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is, to my mind, an illustration of the tremendous waste of money which we are making in this country by these investigations at great cost. They are practically out of date when we get their results. The census of the manufacturing establishments this year would not give us any information next year, nor would they have much relation to the condition of things the year before. If they are printed and promulgated, however, immediately upon completion, they ought to be completed as speedily as possible.

I presume that this is good work, valuable work, and I do not oppose it; but I have been interested in noticing the investigations by the Department of Labor. They send out their agents all over the country to ascertain the wages, the number of employees, and all that, and by the time we get the information in print, the whole condition has changed. Not only that, but they are duplicating that kind of work in several of the departments. I think the whole thing ought to be very carefully looked into with a view of practicing not only economy but common sense in such matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BURTON. The letter was to be read, I believe, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
> BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
> Washington, February 2, 1915.
> MY DEAR SENATOR: Confirming our conversation of yesterday, I desire to request that you have the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, amended as follows: On page 119, after line 2, and in lieu of the word "Provided," on line 3, insert the following:
> "Provided, That of the amount appropriated by this paragraph the sum of $150,000 shall be immediately available for the completion of the canvass of manufacturing establishments."
> You will please note that I have reduced the total amount of the appropriation for collecting statistics from $552,300 to $512,000, which is a decrease of $40,300 in the amount allowed by the House. I am willing to drop $40,300 of the appropriation for taking the census of manufactures if I can get $150,000 of the total made available at the time the bill becomes a law. I am asking that this be done in order that I may have sufficient money to push the canvass and complete my field work by June 30, 1915. It is my intention, if this money is made available, to finish the field canvass earlier than it has ever been done before and to publish the final results several months in advance of the publication of any preceding census of manufactures.
> If this money is not made available immediately upon the passage of the bill, I very much fear that my appropriation will be expended before the close of the fiscal year. If this should happen, it would place the bureau in a very embarrassing position, as the canvass of the manufacturing establishments would have to be abandoned until the appropriation for the next fiscal year became available. The bureau will have a large number of clerks and special agents in the field in connection with this canvass, and if the appropriation should be exhausted it would be necessary to return them to the office here or to their respective homes, and later send them into the field again at very heavy expense to the bureau. By having $150,000 available before the end of this fiscal year, a contingency of this kind would be prevented.
> Very truly, yours,
> WM. J. HARRIS,
> Director.
> Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
> Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
> United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I wish to ask one question. Who are these five special agents provided for in this paragraph? Where are those provided for? In a hasty reading I am unable to see where provision is made for them.

Mr. SMOOT. They will be paid out of the lump sum.

Mr. BURTON. I know, but this provision reads:

> Provided, That the compensation of not to exceed five special agents provided for in this paragraph may be fixed at an amount not to exceed $8 per day.

Mr. SMOOT. They are to be paid out of the lump sum.

Mr. BURTON. I know that; but who are the "five special agents provided for in this paragraph"? How are they chosen? Are they under the civil service?

Mr. SMOOT. I should say they are not. I should say they would be appointed by the Director of the Census as soon as the $150,000 appropriation is available or upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURTON. That seems to have been in the bill before. Provision is made that $150,000 is to be immediately available.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think these five special agents are under the civil service. Though the Director of the Census does appoint special agents at three or four dollars a day for special work, there are five or six men who are under civil service. I know that. I know nothing about these five special agents, however.

Mr. BURTON. There is some confusion here. I did not understand the statement of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said these five special agents were under civil service, but the Director of the Census does appoint a great many agents who are provided for special work.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator that I am quite sure these special agents are not under civil service. The five special agents who will be appointed by the Director of the Census, I have no doubt, will be paid out of the sum provided for by this appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. The probability is, Mr. President, that the House of Representatives copied the phraseology of the bill of last year, because these five special agents are not provided for in this paragraph, so far as I can find, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has called attention to the same thing. I think the words "provided for in this paragraph" ought to be stricken out. They can be restored in conference if they ought not to be out, and I move to strike out the words "provided for in this paragraph."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 123, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "provided for in this paragraph."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that in that paragraph he will notice, beginning at the end of line 7, this language:

Per diem compensation of special agents and expenses of same and of detailed employees—

I think it is to that language the phrase "provided for in this paragraph" refers; but as to the five special agents, they could not be paid to exceed $8 per day. I think, therefore, those words should not be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let the vote whereby my amendment was agreed to be reconsidered. I think the Senator from Utah is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the vote whereby the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the amendment will be regarded as not agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Well, Mr. President, that is not an authorization to employ special agents. The language in lines 7 and 8 reads:

Per diem compensation of special agents and expenses of same and of detailed employees, whether employed in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere—

That does not seem to imply the creation of any new office. Indeed, so far as it goes, it negatives that idea, because it speaks of "detailed employees," while the words which the Senator from New Hampshire proposed to strike out were "provided for in this paragraph." I do not see any place in the paragraph where there is provision for any special agents.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This paragraph provides the compensation, but there must be some provision of law somewhere else authorizing the employment. I agree with the Senator from Ohio. I do not see any specific authority here for their appointment, but it does provide for the compensation of special agents.

Mr. BURTON. Under those circumstances, I should be inclined to think, Mr. President, that the proposed amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire was appropriate. At least, I think the language had better go out, and, if necessary, it can be restored in conference. I am especially interested in this paragraph, in knowing whether these appointees are to be outside the civil service.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can not answer that. I am not very particular whether they are or not. I am not watching for appointments to positions involving a few dollars, and I am very indifferent to that matter one way or the other. I do not think the Government will be wrecked if the Director of the Census has to appoint them; and I do not think that it will be wrecked if he should have to go to the Civil Service Commission for them.

Mr. BURTON. Except, Mr. President, that the whole tendency in the management of the departments and bureaus by this administration has been to wreck the civil service.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Well, Mr. President, I am not going into a discussion of that question, either.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I understood that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire had been withdrawn, but the amendment of the committee has not yet been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 124, to strike out:

That section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, is hereby repealed.

And insert:

Census of agriculture: For taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, providing for the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $2,286,100.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I object to that amendment, and I want to submit a few observations in regard to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, there will be some discussion about that amendment, and I suggest that it be passed over until we get through with the remainder of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 124, line 13, after the word "clerks," to strike out "nine" and insert "ten," and in line 17, after the words "in all," to strike out "$119,280," and insert "$121,080," so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Chief, $6,000; assistant chiefs—1 $3,500, 1 $3,000; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,500, 1 $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,250; chief clerk, $2,250; translator, $2,000; stenographer to chief of bureau, $1,600; clerks—10 of class 4, 6 of class 3, 1 $1,500, 15 of class 2, 14 of class 1, 13 at $1,000 each (2 transferred to Secretary's office), 14 at $900 each (1 transferred to Secretary's office); 3 assistant messengers; 2 laborers; in all, $121,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, line 17, after the words "United States," to strike out "and for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each," and insert "for clerks to commercial attachés," so as to make the clause read:

Commercial attachés: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; for clerks to commercial attachés; and for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, books of reference and periodicals, travel to and from the United States, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, line 5, after the word "each," to strike out "1 $900" and insert "3 at $900 each," and in line 6, after the words "in all," to strike out "$15,540" and insert "$17,340," so as to make the clause read:

Steamboat-Inspection Service: Supervising Inspector General, $4,000; chief clerk and Acting Supervising Inspector General in the absence of that officer, $2,000; clerks—2 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 1 of class 1, 2 at $1,000 each, 3 at $900 each; messenger; in all, $17,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, line 16, after the words "New York," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty-three"; in line 20, after the name "Milwaukee," to strike out "eight" and insert "two"; in line 22, after "$2,500," to insert: "Providence, R. I., 2 at $1,800 each; Cleveland, Ohio, 2 at $1,600 each; Chicago, Ill., 2 at $1,600 each; Grand Haven, Mich., 2 at $1,600; Detroit, Mich., 2 at $1,600 each; Portland, Oreg., 2 at $1,600 each"; and, on page 128, line 2, after the word "each," to strike out "$152,500" and insert "$174,500," so as to make the clause read:

Assistant inspectors, as authorized by act of April 9, 1906, for the following ports: New York, 33 at $2,000 each; New Orleans, 4 at $1,800 each; Baltimore, 6 at $1,800 each; Boston, 6 at $1,800 each; Philadelphia, 8 at $1,800 each; San Francisco, 8 at $1,800 each; Buffalo, 4 at $1,600 each; Milwaukee, 2 at $1,600 each; Norfolk, 4 at $1,600 each; Seattle, 8 at $1,600 each; traveling inspector, $2,500; Providence, R. I., 2 at $1,800 each; Cleveland, Ohio, 2 at $1,600 each; Chicago, Ill., 2 at $1,600 each; Grand Haven, Mich., 2 at $1,600 each; Detroit, Mich., 2 at $1,600 each; Portland, Oreg., 2 at $1,600 each; $174,500.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have received quite a number of complaints that the inspection service was so much behind that boats were delayed in beginning the business of the season. I take it this paragraph increases the number of inspectors and seeks to remedy that situation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator is correct. The number of inspectors is increased for the purpose of making the inspection more prompt and more efficient.

Mr. BURTON. When will this provision go into effect?

Mr. OVERMAN. On July 1.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On the 1st day of July next.

Mr. BURTON. If the evil exists, it is pressing now, and I will inquire if there is any objection to stating that these amounts shall be immediately available?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It seems to me the time is so near at hand that we can better afford to go along and await the regular course for the law to become operative rather than to make the amounts immediately available.

Mr. BURTON. The provision is in pursuance of the recommendations of the Supervising Inspector and of the Secretary of Commerce, is it not?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is duly recommended and estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 128, line 3, after the word "Service," to strike out "$353,600" and insert "$375,600," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Steamboat-Inspection Service, $375,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 128, line 25, after "$80,000," to insert:

Provided, That after the passage of this act the officers and employees of the Steamboat-Inspection Service traveling in Alaska may be allowed, in addition to actual traveling expenses, actual expenses of subsistence not to exceed $7 per day when authorized by the Secretary of Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, line 12, after "$1,200," to strike out "Bath, $1,000"; in line 13, after "$3,000," to strike out "Gloucester, $600"; in line 15, before the name "Philadelphia," to strike out "Pascagoula, $300"; and in line 17, after the words "in all," to strike out "$29,500" and insert "$27,600," so as to make the clause read:

Shipping service: For shipping commissioners in amounts not exceeding the following: Baltimore, $1,200; Boston, $3,000; New Bedford, $1,200; New Orleans, $1,500; New York, $5,000; Norfolk, $1,500; Philadelphia, $2,400; Portland, Me., $1,300; Seattle, $3,500; Providence, $1,800; Rockland, $1,200; San Francisco, $4,000; in all, $27,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, after line 13, to insert:

For investigation and standardization of methods and instruments employed in radio communication, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, after line 18, to insert:

For investigation of the methods of measurement and technical processes in the manufacture of pottery, brick, tile, terra cotta, and other clay products, and the study of the properties of the materials used in that industry, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. There is rather an exceptional provision at the bottom of page 143 and at the top of page 144, reading as follows:

Retired judges: Salaries of judges retired under section 714 of the Revised Statutes, so much as may be necessary for the fiscal year 1916.

No amount is given. Is that one of the continuing appropriations paid out of the Treasury without legislation specifying the amount?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is never made definite. The item is to pay judges who have retired, and that is a varying amount. We might make a specific appropriation now and within 30 days another judge might retire and there would be no provision to pay him. It is an indefinite appropriation, and necessarily so. It is always made in that form and it is entirely free from any injustice or any wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if it is not a continuing appropriation and paid every year without a direct appropriation being made of a specific amount?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I believe it is customary to make this provision, continuing it every year. It covers a varying class, and the amount can not be fixed without doing injustice to some one.

Mr. BURTON. I am aware, Mr. President, that it is in accordance with law, but I do not see the need of the provision here.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Well, it certainly does not do any harm and, in my judgment, it is necessary.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know that it can do any harm, either.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am quite sure it can not.

Mr. BURTON. But it is a rather singular provision to put in an appropriation bill in the midst of a number of specific appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The amount expended last year is given in the Book of Estimates, but exactly what it will be another year depends on circumstances which have not yet developed. There may be other judges who will retire whose salaries would have to be paid. At any rate, the provision can not possibly do any harm.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Ohio will refer to section 714 of the Revised Statutes, he will see that authorization is made for these payments. That section reads:

SEC. 714. When any judge of any court of the United States resigns his office, after having held his commission as such at least 10 years, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the same salary which was by law payable to him at the time of his resignation.

I think, therefore, this is a continuing appropriation in accordance with the provisions of law.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The provision is in the usual language; it is in accordance with the rules of the auditing department of the Government, and it is certainly a safe piece of legislation.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Judicial," on page 145, line 4, after the words "law books," to insert "including the exchange thereof," so as to make the clause read:

Books for judicial officers: For purchase and rebinding of law books, including the exchange thereof, for United States judges, district attorneys, and other judicial officers, including the nine libraries of the United States circuit courts of appeals, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General: Provided, That such books shall in all cases be transmitted to their successors in office; all books purchased thereunder to be plainly marked, "The property of the United States," $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the first amendment passed over, I believe, was on page 28, relating to the Library.

Mr. SMOOT. The first one, I think, is on page 5. As I recall, an amendment was passed over in line 17, on page 5, covering the words "one for the majority and one for the minority."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That relates to the experts for the Finance Committee. The Senator is correct. That, however, is a provision in the House text.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to move to strike out the words "one for the majority and one for the minority, at $2,000 each."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not a committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are some committee amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have called attention to the first committee amendment passed over, on page 28.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I do not think, Mr. President, there was an amendment passed over at the point indicated by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. There was merely notice given that an amendment would be offered at that point.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. An amendment was agreed to there, as I understand, but the Senator from Utah proposed to add to it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Virginia has no further committee amendments to offer, when all the committee amendments that have been passed over have been agreed to, I will offer an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I inquire if the amendment, on page 28, after the figures "$2,500," in line 6, was agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Now, I will go to page 28. Is that the page?

Mr. SMOOT. The next item is on page 30.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Oh, yes; about the Panama Canal. That was passed over, I think, at the request of the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been read. It was passed over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the amendment, on page 30, line 21, making an appropriation for the expenses of the formal opening of the Panama Canal. The Senator from Utah asked that that be passed over. It has not yet been adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have sent word to a Senator who desired to speak upon it. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to discuss it?

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to speak on it. I simply wanted to know if there was any statement before the committee showing what this $160,000 is for.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There was an informal schedule sent to the committee from the War Department which estimated for an appropriation of $250,000. In that $250,000 there was provision made for the President and for representatives of foreign Governments and for administrative officers and officials who have done this great work—engineers like Goethals and all the engineers who have been associated with the work.

There was provision made for them, and there was also provision made for taking a large delegation from Congress. It included about $100,000. Three ships were to be set aside for the transportation of Members of Congress. The committee thought that scheme ought not to be carried out. They thought Congress ought to be represented, however, and under the provision as it now exists the President will invite a fair representation of both Houses of Congress.

It was my suggestion to the President that we should not undertake to fix the personnel of this committee, but leave it to him. He said he would not like to undertake that duty; and I then suggested that the presiding officers of the two Houses could relieve him of it; that the President of the Senate could designate the Senators and the Speaker of the House designate the Members of the House to make a committee or a representation of the two Houses of Congress on this occasion and the expenses of that committee of the two Houses of Congress have been provided for in this $160,000. It is largely intended to pay distinguished attention to the South American Republics. The estimate did not go into very great detail, but in a general way it did make out a scheme of the kind I have mentioned.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, then, a large portion of this $160,000, or at least a portion of it, is to be used for the purpose of paying the way, the expenses, hotel bills, and so forth, of Members of Congress to attend this exposition?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On the contrary, Mr. President, an exceedingly small quantity of it is to be so used. The $100,000 provided for that purpose the committee thought was too large. It did not want any junket. It did not want any large representation from Congress, and we struck out about $100,000 in order not to permit a thing of that sort. A very small committee is to be selected, in order that the Congress may have official representation on this great occasion; but only a very small part of this $160,000 will be required to pay that expense. Indeed, it will be paid out of what had been intended for other purposes. They will have to economize in the other purposes I have mentioned in order to make provision for a small representation of the two Houses of Congress.

There is not to be anything like a junket. There is not to be anything like a great occasion for the pleasure of Senators and Congressmen. It is simply to provide for official representation of the two Houses at the formal opening of the canal, and a very small part of this $160,000 is to be expended for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, of course the officials of the other American Republics are to be invited.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They are to be chiefly the objects of attention on this occasion.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if it was not understood by the committee that none of the Members of the House and none of the Members of the Senate would be asked to accompany the President on this trip, or that if they did they would pay their own expenses?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Unless the President chose to invite a few Members of each House, which I think he contemplates doing, but which he need not do unless he chooses.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it was distinctly understood that that was not to be the case—that none of the Members of Congress were to be asked.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was not my understanding.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will state that I was on the subcommittee with the Senator from Utah, and the original idea was this: We at first provided for $250,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. The idea then was to provide for a large number; but rather than have a scandal about it, or a controversy about it, we struck out $100,000——

Mr. SMOOT. Ninety thousand dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ninety thousand dollars, which was the estimate for Congress. Now, if the President chooses to invite a few of his friends, I presume he will do so. I do not know whether he will do it or not.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that, so far as the intent of the committee is concerned, it has eliminated the entire amount which it was anticipated would be spent for Members of Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. Exactly—$90,000.

Mr. BORAH. So there is really no specific provision here, in the mind of the committee, to provide for Congressmen?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. Then whom is it for?

Mr. OVERMAN. The President has a right to invite anybody he pleases. He can leave Congress out.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is true; but what I wanted to get at was the intent of the committee, and whether or not the committee was intending to appropriate for congressional representation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The original intention was to put in $100,000 for Congress; but on account of the fact that there might seem to be a scandal about it in the country we struck that out entirely, and that was the estimate which we did strike out.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that my understanding was that no Member of Congress would be invited to take this trip at Government expense. It was my understanding, when the estimated appropriation of $250,000 was first made, that Members of Congress would be invited, but the $90,000 reduction was made with the understanding that none should be invited. That is how I understood it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have understood from the first that whether the amount was $250,000 or $160,000, in either instance it was left for the President to expend this money as he saw fit. There was no direction that any Congressman should go, but I knew by an informal statement sent to me from the department that the scheme for the use of this $250,000 included the sending of three ships, with about 250 or 300 Members of Congress on board. For my part, I did not approve of that. I did not care whether there was a scandal or not, but I did not think it was wise or just or reasonable to take three shiploads of Congressmen down on this occasion. I did think, however, that there was some fitness in having a few Members of Congress represent the legislative department of the Government on this formal occasion. I understood from the War Department, and I also understood from a conversation with the President, that he would like to have some Members of Congress present on the formal opening of the canal. I told him the committee had determined to strike out this $90,000 because it did not approve of this great delegation going down there at the expense of the Government. It was said in the conversation, either by him or by myself, that if he wanted to have any Members of Congress present, he could invite them and pay for them out of the $160,000. He said it would be very embarrassing to him to make the selection of a small committee to be present on this occasion, and I suggested that, if he desired it, I had no doubt the Vice President and the Speaker of the House would assist him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Vice President has no right to take a hand in legislation. The Vice President announces now that he will appoint no Senators. That can be depended upon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I take it for granted that if the President of the United States should request you to aid him in the selection of a few Members of Congress to go down there, there would be no insuperable objection on your part; but that is a matter with which we are not concerned. We appropriate $160,000 and put it at the disposal of the President, to be paid out on his order only.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, does the Senator from Virginia think that the Congress has any concern with how this $160,000 is to be expended?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think it has; and it has done its part when it has put this sum at the disposal of the President of the United States, who is practically to be in charge of its expenditure. He is to invite the diplomats and the rulers of these South American Republics who have taken a deep interest in the Panama Canal, and he wants to extend to them some courtesies on the occasion of this formal opening. It is all put at the disposal of the President of the United States to be used in that way.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I understand from the Senator that there is some tentative scheme of this outlined trip and the expenditure of this money that he has had the good fortune to have presented to him by the War Department, or some other department. I should like to get at the basis upon which this $160,000 was arrived at. For instance, I heard objections here from certain Members of the Senate to the mileage proposed by the committee for the Senators, and rather some little insistence that the mileage provided by the House should be retained, which as I recall was $12,700 for mileage for 96 Senators from their homes to attend the sessions of Congress and return. That, as I figured out, roughly speaking, would amount to $133 apiece. I am perfectly willing to vote the $250,000 mentioned in the tentative scheme that the Senator speaks of if such an amount is necessary to carry out any legitimate purpose in opening the Panama Canal; but, query: If $133 apiece, on an average, is sufficient to pay the mileage and all expenses of a Senator in going to and from his home to attend the sessions of the Senate, how much is necessary to pay the expenses of the President of the United States to and from San Francisco, taking into consideration the fact that he is also to be furnished with transportation, with war vessels, I presume with food, and with sleeping quarters for himself and his entourage, whether that may consist of diplomats, members of the staff of the Army or the Navy, or of Members of Congress. How much per capita is it? How do you arrive at this $160,000?

As I say, if it is necessary to vote the $250,000 that was originally asked, I am perfectly willing to vote it; but I should like very much to have the same advantage that the Senator from Virginia has had of an examination of this tentative scheme, to find the basis upon which the amount of $160,000 or $250,000 was arrived at, and how much the Senator concluded to strike off, or for what reason he concluded to strike off the arbitrary amount of $90,000, leaving it at $160,000 now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I explained to the Senator that we struck out what had been intended for, transportation and maintenance of Members of Congress. That was $90,000, and that was stricken from the bill.

Mr. FALL. Exactly. How many Members of Congress was it intended to take upon this trip?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There was no way to fix that. It was estimated, though, that about 250 might be taken, and that it would take about $90,000 or $100,000. Of course, there is no way of figuring out these expenses minutely and mathematically. It is an approximate estimate; and the estimate was $250,000, including about $90,000 for Members of Congress.

Mr. FALL. But there must be some basis even for an approximate estimate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was estimated by the Secretary of War that it would take $160,000, excluding this large delegation from Congress.

Mr. FALL. And that is in addition to the amounts which are already appropriated and being used for keeping up the ships which will be used. I can understand why, if the shipping bill had passed, we will say, and $40,000,000 had been put into vessels, and it had been the intention to take the merchant-marine fleet which we were to acquire around to San Francsco, quite an amount of money would be necessary to pay the expenses; but the vessels which are now in the service of the United States are being appropriated for and being paid for. It is proposed now to use those vessels, as I understand, and that in addition to their use and the expenses which are being paid by the Government there shall be a further amount of $160,000. Upon what basis is that $160,000 arrived at? As I say, all that I have before me now is the basis of the mileage, for instance, of Senators.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, surely the Senator can not mean to compare this to mileage—to take the representatives of the South American Republics, the diplomats and others——

Mr. FALL. There is nothing said about them.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (continuing). And extend to them hospitality, and nobody knows how much hospitality. Nobody can foresee what ought to be done. The purpose was simply to put the Chief Magistrate of the country in a position to do those things that hospitality requires, and extend those courtesies which should be extended to our South American neighbors, and to the engineers and scientific men who have been connected with this great work, on the occasion of the formal opening of the Panama Canal. The nearest estimate we could get from the War Department was that it would take $160,000, leaving out of consideration a large congressional delegation.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, we are now arriving at something which we can discuss. For the first time we understand now that the purpose of this appropriation is partly to pay the expenses of diplomats of other countries. Nothing whatsoever is said about that in the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is entirely up to the President to do all the things he thinks necessary and proper to be done on this great occasion to commemorate the opening of the greatest engineering work that ever has been completed in the history of the world.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should like to make a brief statement.

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The President is not limited to diplomats. As I myself heard him say, he is likely to have in the party those persons who have been most directly interested in building the canal. It has been suggested that probably ex-President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt will be invited, and everybody who was connected with the building of this great canal ought to go.

Mr. REED. On the same boat, Mr. President?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; on separate boats. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is for the President of the United States to say whether he will invite either Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Taft.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is no limitation on his authority, and there are no instructions to him. It is simply a question of whether or not Congress is willing to put at his disposal this amount of money for the commemoration of this great event.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have learned in the last few days of my legislative experience, and I am having it impressed on me now, that the ideas of some Members of the Senate are not in accord with those of others, and certainly those of one, that there shall be no question whatsoever as to any act of the Chief Executive of this Government; that he shall not be held responsible for the expenditure of the people's money. Forty million dollars may be placed in his hands absolutely without any restriction for building a railroad in Alaska. Forty million dollars more may be placed in his hands for the purchase of vessels without restrictions.

Mr. OVERMAN. What kind of restrictions would the Senator put on him?

Mr. FALL. I would not vote the money unless I knew what was going to be done with it, and I will not vote it unless I have some better evidence as to what is to be done with it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator were going to draw the amendment, I should like to know what kind of an amendment he would draw and what kind of restrictions he would impose.

Mr. FALL. If I had intended to appropriate $160,000 or $160, I should have specified what the purpose of it was.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator would put everything in it in detail, and state how much was to be expended for each item?

Mr. FALL. I would undoubtedly say that it was for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States to invite to accompany him upon this ship foreign diplomats, for instance.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to know how the Senator is going to specify how much of this $160,000 shall be spent for that purpose, and in what way it shall be spent.

Mr. FALL. Before I voted $160,000 or $1,000 or $250,000 I should want to know something about the plan, so as to base the estimate upon it intelligently.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator would like to provide a certain amount for mileage, I suppose, and a certain per diem, and so much for subsistence, and so on, and say how much each foreigner should be allowed, and what it would cost each foreigner to go, and all those things, and how much grape juice should be supplied. [Laughter.]

Mr. FALL. I think it would be very easy, Mr. President, to say that the ships of war which are being furnished free, the naval vessels which are being furnished free, the services of the officers of the Army and Navy of the United States, which are being furnished free, are not included in this $160,000. Then I should think it would have been easy enough—the committee have been in consultation with the President—to arrive at some general conclusion with him as to the total number who would accompany him, whether of his political or domestic family, or of foreign families, royal families, or merely commoners.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think he will draw any political line as to whether he will invite a Republican or a Democrat.

Mr. FALL. I have never yet heard a matter of this kind presented from a Republican source, and I am not here to draw any partisan or political lines; but I am asked here to vote away a sum of money that is being taken somewhere from the people of the United States. I think the President of the United States is still responsible to the people of the United States. I have just as much respect for his high position as is entertained by any Member upon that side of the Senate Chamber, or any member of the committee. I do not for one moment question the honesty of the President of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator recognize that whenever you attempt to specify exactly what shall be done a great many other things will arise that ought to be done, and they will be excluded by reason of the mention of the specific things?

Mr. FALL. The Senator understands well enough that I am not asking him nor the committee to specify the exact amount of money which shall be spent; but I am asking from the committee information to which, as a Member of the Senate, I am entitled as to what basis they used in arriving at the amount of $160,000 as being necessary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was the opinion of those who were to have the matter in charge, taking into consideration the foreign diplomats who were to be brought there, and the other persons who have some interest in the building of the canal, that this amount would be required.

Mr. FALL. I have understood that, but that answers nothing. How did you arrive at the conclusion that you should strike out $90,000 from this item?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have told the Senator two or three times that that was arrived at by striking out all moneys appropriated to take Congressmen down there.

Mr. FALL. How many Members of Congress were you going to take with that $90,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Two hundred and fifty or three hundred—three vessels loaded with them.

Mr. FALL. And you struck out $90,000 for 250 or 300 Congressmen?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We did.

Mr. FALL. And you have left in $160,000 for how many?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know how many the President will take with him or how many diplomats he will invite from the South American Republics and from the world everywhere to be present on this occasion. I will say to the Senator, if he will excuse me for one moment, that this estimate was sent to us in a lump sum from the office of the Secretary of War. It was discussed in the committee; and, so far from there being any politics in it, there was not a single Republican or Democrat either in the Committee on Appropriations who said one word against the allowance of $160,000 for the purpose specified in this amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I repudiate the use of the word "politics" in this discussion. I have not used it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not say the Senator used it, but it has been used.

Mr. FALL. I have no earthly objection to the expenditure of any amount of money to enable the President of the United States to go to the San Francisco Exposition in the proper style befitting the President of the United States to carry out the purposes of this amendment, if I understand what they are, but I want some basis for my vote.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will read it to the Senator again.

Mr. FALL. I have read the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is all the basis I can possibly give the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Then, if that is all, I can certainly say that I have no more information than I had from reading it in the first place, and I do not propose to vote the money of the people, so far as I am concerned, without some better basis. I notice that there is another item here of $25,000 for the contingent expenses of the President. Now, that is the usual amount.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, surely the Senator does not mean to say that he considers this a provision for the personal expenses of the President?

Mr. FALL. I do not know what it is for. That is what I am asking.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This amendment makes clear what it is for.

Mr. FALL. I do not think it does. That is where we differ. I am asking some specific questions for information, and I can not get it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope the Senator will let me read it, so that it will go in the RECORD.

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (reading):

> For such expenses as, in the opinion of the President, are properly connected with the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal and each and every purpose connected therewith, $160,000.

That is the purpose for which the $160,000 is appropriated.

Mr. FALL. I am not willing to leave everything to the President of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is impossible to make a detailed statement of what these expenses are going to be.

Mr. FALL. It is entirely possible and perfectly feasible for the Senator, if he knows anything about the foundation of this item, to explain to the Senate of the United States upon what it is founded. Some basis must be had for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have given the Senator all the information at my command.

Mr. FALL. Well, it is not satisfactory to me.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FALL. I will.

Mr. KENYON. It seems to me the Senator is getting some information.

Mr. FALL. I think so; yes.

Mr. KENYON. The $90,000 was to cover the expenses of 250 Congressmen, as I understand the explanation.

Mr. FALL. I so understood from the explanation of the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. These Congressmen probably would be treated as well as diplomats or our brethren from South America.

Mr. FALL. They would have to receive different treatment from that accorded to them recently, then.

Mr. KENYON. Well, they probably would receive at least as good treatment. Therefore, the $160,000, at that ratio, would carry about 450; so the Senator has secured the information that this appropriation will carry about 450 people.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Senator for the calculation he has made, which I have not had the time to make in the earnest effort in which I am now indulging to get information. How many diplomats, for instance, are included in this number of 450, approximately? The expenses of Army officers and Navy officers and officials of the Government, as I understand, are already being paid by the Government. Are there 450 diplomats, Members of Congress being excluded? I do not think we have 450 diplomats in the United States at the present time, including neutrals and belligerents.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FALL. For a question. I do not wish to yield the floor.

Mr. REED. It occurs to me that a much graver question than the one the Senator is discussing is involved in this matter, and has been brought out in the debate, and I want to get the Senator's opinion on it.

Mr. FALL. I am always ready, in my humble way, to give my opinion.

Mr. REED. It is stated that it is the purpose to take both ex-President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt on this trip.

Mr. FALL. Do I understand that that is the purpose?

Mr. REED. That has been stated. I wanted to ask the Senator what he thought would become of the doctrine of neutrality? [Laughter.]

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the other nations of the world have not joined with this Nation in declaring Panama a neutral zone. We have only done it ourselves, except by a treaty with England, some portions of which seem to have been repudiated. The other nations have not treated it as a neutral zone. I do not know whether I am correct in stating that possibly a part of this money is going to be expended for the protection of the diplomats or the members of the party who are to go through the Panama Canal to San Francisco, or whether it is simply for transportation. I want to get at something. Now, 450 people are to be carried along in addition to the President. The Senator says this is not for the payment of the expenses of the President, as I understand.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course everybody knows that. The Senator need not ask me that question. He knows that $160,000 is not appropriated to pay the personal expenses of the President; and the amendment says it is for all expenses incident to the opening of the canal.

Mr. FALL. That means entertainment, music, and so forth?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It certainly must mean entertainment. That is certain. Not only South America, but the nations of the world, are interested in this great event.

Mr. FALL. Bands are furnished, I think, on all the naval vessels. Music is furnished free, I believe.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think it ought to be. I have nothing to do with the arrangements; but if they do not have music of the very highest order, they will be very remiss in the discharge of their duty, in my judgment.

Mr. FALL. I agree with the Senator. I think there is no doubt about that.

Mr. SHIVELY. In order to meet and obviate the objections made to this appropriation an amendment can be added that everybody on the voyage shall be required to live on mush and milk and shall eat it out of a jug with a pegging awl. [Laughter.]

Mr. FALL. If the Senator from Indiana, who is so familiar with mush and milk, desires to offer that amendment, I shall make no objection to it, because he knows more about it than I do. I am originally from Kentucky.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, something has been said here about inviting ex-President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt. I have had no conversation with the President except that I did communicate with him over the telephone and told him we proposed to leave out any provision of $90,000 for Congress. That is the extent of my communication with him. I do not know whom he will invite or whom he will expect to come, but I shall be very much surprised if he fails to invite ex-President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt. There is no politics in this matter, and as they played a very conspicuous part in the construction of the canal it seems to me that the courtesy of the occasion would require that they be invited and that they be provided for in a luxurious way in view of the distinguished part they took in the construction of this great work.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, let us understand this matter, to see what is done. I want to state to the Senate the facts. I want to state whom the President took into his confidence. The Senator from New Mexico seems to be doubtful and suspicious. I am surprised that such a broad, patriotic Senator should be suspicious of the President and think he is going to spend some money that he ought not to spend. I will say to him that Mr. MANN, of the House, and Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, and other Republicans were discussing this matter with the Democrats. Senators on both sides of the Chamber were discussing it, and this side of the Chamber agreed that this ought to be done. We laid the whole thing before them, and they agreed on the amount right through.

Mr. FALL. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. OVERMAN. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. FALL. Why did you strike out the $90,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because of complaint on the part of some Congressmen, and some criticism, we struck out all about Congress. That was the amount we talked about; and the President called to his chamber the leaders on this side of the Chamber, so-called—and they are the leaders—and in the House of Representatives, and we all agreed on it. Now, the Senator is raising a row and having a suspicion go up that the Government will spend some few dollars it ought not to spend, and asking for every little detail, when all the President has done is to ask the Secretary of War how much money it will take, and the Secretary of War sends down to him and tells him what it will take. We got from the Secretary of War the amount it will take, and we propose to make the appropriation. What would the Senator have us do?

Mr. FALL. The Senator realizes that the names he mentions are those of the leaders of both Houses. It appears that after a consultation with the leaders of both Houses the House refused to put a dollar in this bill for any such purpose as is herein specified. There appears to be an understanding, however, the House of Representatives having failed to vote a cent, that we should place it in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us get the facts straight again.

Mr. FALL. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. OVERMAN. The House of Representatives never had this matter before the committee.

Mr. FALL. This bill was before it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all, in regard to this matter. This bill was pending in the House, and it was not intended to put it in the bill, but it was to be a separate measure.

Mr. FALL. Then this is new matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is no new matter. It is a matter put in so that we could pass it. The Senator knows that I introduced a joint resolution. I suppose it was introduced also in the House; but it is impossible to get it through at this session unless we put it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FALL. What amount of money was appropriated in the joint resolution?

Mr. OVERMAN. In the original joint resolution $250,000, just the amount agreed on.

Mr. FALL. Exactly. That has been, apparently, the amount agreed on all the way through.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the amount understood between us, and we afterwards concluded to put in $160,000, the estimate that was understood in the President's executive chamber.

Mr. FALL. How was it understood? How did you arrive at the amount?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator has been told a dozen times that the President asked the Secretary of War how much it would take, and he stated what it would take, and he recommended it, and the committee recommended it. What does the Senator want? Will he let us know?

Mr. FALL. What is your estimate?

Mr. OVERMAN. We made no estimate. The Secretary of War made an estimate of $250,000, and we have taken the word of the Secretary of War that that is the amount required.

I want the Senator to suggest an amendment and say how he would make it. I would just like to know what sort of an amendment he would propose.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is very welcome to the responsibility which he so gracefully assumes of spending the people's money without any estimate of any kind, not even providing that so much of the amount as may be necessary shall be expended, but providing an outright appropriation of $160,000 for certain purposes not shown in the bill at all.

Mr. President, I was just seeking to go back to some basis of legitimate estimates in expending the people's money. One of the Senators seemed to think $12,700 was enough mileage for Senators. I am willing to agree that the President of the United States is greater than the majority of this body. He has shown that, and they have shown it. I am willing to agree to that, and I would say——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him long enough to express the hope that he will continue to show it?

Mr. FALL. I know you will continue to show it, judging by your actions.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly I will follow the lead of the President of the United States as long as he is doing as well as he has done heretofore.

Mr. FALL. Following the Senator's own words, as well as the lead of the President of the United States, assuming that the President is greater than the majority of the Congress, he, in his judgment, thinking that $12,700 is sufficient for all the Senators of the United States, he should at least agree with me that $12,700 should be enough for the President of the United States. But admitting that he is greater than the entire Congress or the Senate, then double the amount, and with what is already provided for, as he has $25,000 already provided for in the bill, we would have some basis.

Mr. WARREN. It is not provided for in this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I wish to correct the Senator's continued and repeated statement that $12,750 is appropriated for mileage. The bill appropriates $51,000 for the mileage of Senators and $175,000 for the mileage of Members of the House.

Mr. FALL. I agree with the Senator that the $51,000 ought to continue to Senators.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator still continues to speak of $12,750.

Mr. THOMAS. I am sorry to say that the Senator is as accurate in that statement as he has been in his criticism of the manner in which the President is expected to spend this money.

Mr. FALL. I notice that the tolls are omitted. I am glad the President has concluded with the foreign diplomats, at least that he does not find it necessary to the carrying out of his foreign policy that the ships carrying them should pay tolls. In fact, I have found some little sentiment of gratification in this discussion if not in the amendment as offered by the committee itself.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and others. Question!

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment. I wish to say that I shall vote against the whole appropriation, but I think this amendment would make it better.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any expenses of Members of Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment on the table.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I am paired for the afternoon with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], and I therefore ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I do not see him in the Chamber and withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. In his absence I will withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Ashurst	Hughes	Perkins	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Johnson	Pittman	Stone
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Swanson
Burleigh	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Thompson
Camden	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Tillman

Goff	McLean	Shields

So Mr. KENYON's amendment to the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the appropriation of $104,000 in the last naval appropriation bill for this purpose. The language of that appropriation is as follows:

Provided further, That the sum of $104,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be expended, on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, for entertaining the officers and crews of foreign fleets which may be sent to attend and participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in consequence of the invitation of the President of the United States, extended in pursuance of the authority contained in the joint resolution of Congress approved February 15, 1911, and of the authority contained in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1911.

This law as it now stands provides:

For defraying such other expenses incident to the visit of the said foreign fleets as the Secretary of the Navy may deem proper, and the said sum shall be available until November 15, 1915.

It also provides for a rebate in tolls. I should like to ask the Senator whether the amount sought to be appropriated in the present bill is in addition to this sum, which has already been appropriated?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The appropriation to which the Senator from Michigan now refers has no relation whatever to this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It has no relation to this matter?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. None whatever. It has nothing to do with the ceremonies of opening the Panama Canal. It is simply for the entertainment of the officers of foreign navies who may attend the Navy rendezvous at the Panama Exposition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand that even now this appropriation is being used for the purpose of entertaining naval visitors from abroad. I make no point against it. It is a very appropriate thing to do.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It will have to pass the auditing department of the Government and be shown by proper vouchers to have been expended in accordance with the provisions of that law, which has no relation whatever to the purpose of the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then, if I understand the Senator from Virginia correctly, the $160,000 contained in the present bill is not for the purpose of being expended by the Navy Department?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is not, but by the President of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The appropriation heretofore made stands, and is to be expended as the Secretary of the Navy may think proper?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. For entertaining officers of foreign fleets at San Francisco.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 124, to strike out lines 1 and 2, as follows:

That section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, is hereby repealed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Census of agriculture: For taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, providing for the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $2,286,100.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to submit a few observations with reference to this item, provided anybody will listen to them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as this item amounts to over two and a quarter million dollars, and as the Senator from Iowa is going to speak to it, before he does so I think we had better have a quorum, as we are going to be asked to vote upon it. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Nelson	Simmons
Bankhead	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Gore	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Gronna	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Hollis	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Hughes	Page	Smoot
Bryan	James	Perkins	Sterling
Burleigh	Johnson	Pittman	Stone
Burton	Jones	Poindexter	Swanson
Camden	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Catron	Lane	Ransdell	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Tillman
Chilton	Lodge	Robinson	Townsend
Clapp	McCumber	Root	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Warren
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	White
Dillingham	Myers	Shively	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KENYON. I yield for a question.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I do not care to ask a question. I had another matter in view.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like briefly and in as logical a manner as I can to explain this provision, which seeks to add $2,286,100 to this bill. I think in a time of prosperity this would be an absolutely indefensible proposition, but it is even more so now, at a time when the Nation's revenues are not in the best condition. This item is entitled "Census of agriculture," which possibly may make it alluring at first glance to those who represent agricultural constituencies. I represent an agricultural constituency, and, as I believe, the best agricultural State in the Union; but there are no farmers, so far as I have been able to discover, who are asking for this appropriation.

The proposed census of agriculture will give no information that is not now possessed. It will be a duplication of work, because the same facts can be found by anyone who desires them in the census which has heretofore been taken or in the agricultural publications which are issued year by year. It does seem to me that when additional taxes are being levied upon the people under the guise of war taxes this Congress ought not to appropriate, except where it is essential, or reasonably essential, for the public interest and welfare to do so. The report of the House committee says as to this item:

Under section 31 of the act of July 2, 1909, providing for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, it is required that in the year 1915, and once every 10 years thereafter, a census of agriculture and live stock shall be taken; accordingly, based on estimates regularly submitted by the Department of Commerce, there is recommended in the accompanying bill the sum of $2,286,100, including provision for the payment specifically of 1,000 temporary employments. As this expenditure is not an annual one, and will occur only once every 10 years, it constitutes no element for intelligent comparison of appropriations of one year with another, therefore the following comparison of the bill with the estimates submitted for 1916 and the appropriations for 1915 is made without reference to the estimates for this special service or the amount recommended therefor by the committee.

The House had this matter under consideration, and in the House bill as reported to that body it was provided as follows:

Census of agriculture: For taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909, providing for the thirteenth and subsequent censuses, including the employment, in addition to the regular force of the permanent Census Office, of not to exceed 1,000 temporary clerks at a salary of not to exceed $1,000 per annum for a period not to exceed two years, the Director of the Census—

And so forth.

The item also provided for "the employment of special agents at a salary not to exceed $6 a day, with actual and necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of not to exceed $4 a day in lieu of subsistence," and so forth.

So that here is the carrying out of a provision of law, and that provision of law is taken from the act providing for the thirteenth decennial census. Section 31 of that act provides:

That there shall be in the year 1915, and once every 10 years thereafter, a census of agriculture and live stock, which shall show the acreage of farm land, the acreage of the principal crops, and the number and value of domestic animals on the farms and ranges of the country. The schedule employed in this census shall be prepared by the Director of the Census. Such census shall be taken as of October 1, and shall relate to the current year. The Director of the Census may appoint enumerators or special agents for the purpose of this census, in accordance with the provisions of the permanent census act.

Now, it is true, Mr. President, that this appropriation was made to carry out, I assume, the terms of that act. Upon discussion in the House of Representatives an amendment was offered to repeal section 31 of the act of 1909, and that amendment was carried, and is in this bill as it came from the House. The committee of the Senate, however, struck that out and substituted practically the old House proposition for this census of agriculture.

I contend, Mr. President, that there is no necessity for this census; that there is no demand for this census in the agricultural communities; that it will do one any good except those who are to obtain the great number of jobs that are proposed to be created by this provision.

Further than that, it is practically a duplication of work, for the Committee on Agriculture, in a bill which will be before the Senate in a short time, has provided an appropriation for a Bureau of Crop Estimates covering it, as will be found on page 58 of the Agricultural appropriation bill:

All necessary expenses for collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, and interpreting data relating to agriculture; for making and publishing periodically crop and live-stock estimates, including acreage, yield, and value of farm products.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. What is the amount of the appropriation in the Agricultural bill?

Mr. KENYON. The amount appropriated is $283,480, to cover the entire expenses of the Bureau of Crop Estimates.

Mr. BRYAN. But for the crop estimates, what is the amount?

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that I do not think that is differentiated from the general sum. Yes; $142,000, as I read the bill. It is a little difficult to get at its real meaning.

Mr. President, there are three things to be covered by this enumeration of the census. One is the acreage of farm lands; another is the number of acres devoted to the cultivation of the principal crops; another is the number of domestic animals. I may say, in passing, that the print of this census would not be along for a year or two, the way things are ordinarily done, and would be of no value to the farmer. The farmer does not need this. He gets every year from the Agricultural Department a yearbook, and I hold in my hand the Yearbook for 1913. That yearbook, as I view it, with 145 pages, is devoted to the very things that would be covered by this agricultural census, and the farmer does not even read that yearbook in full.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENYON. I do, for a question.

Mr. BORAH. Was there any showing before the committee as to who desired to have this item put in the bill and what it was for?

Mr. KENYON. I will answer the Senator's question by turning to the hearings before the House committee. The Postmaster General appeared before the House committee and urged this appropriation, and I think I will place in the RECORD some of his language. These are the hearings for the year 1916, as I understand:

Mr. BURLESON. I think the inquiry should be directed to ascertain the number of acres in the farm in cultivation, the number of acres planted to the principal crops, and I think the principal crops are corn, wheat, oats, cotton, tobacco, and potatoes. I do not think it was intended to cover anything else.

Further down:

Mr. BURLESON. Then the bill was reintroduced, and I went before the Committee on the Census and made an argument—

In that I think he refers to the bill of 1909, providing for taking a census, to which there was added this provision for an agricultural census—

I went before the Committee on the Census and made an argument, and Secretary Wilson appeared and made an argument, and we hoped to put it through at that time. Later on, when Mr. Crumpacker brought forward his bill, I took advantage of that opportunity and said: "Now, Brother Crumpacker, this goes in or there will be trouble," and he put it in.

That is the way this provision was engrafted on the original bill of 1909. The yearbook that is issued every year by the Department of Agriculture contains all of these things and all of these data.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Is the information which is contained in the yearbook such accurate information as would be gathered from a census properly taken?

Mr. KENYON. I think the claim is now made that that is the reason for taking the census. I did not know of that until to-day; but I understand that the hearings before the Senate committee tended to show that the estimates here were not exact, and that is undoubtedly true.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator let me put in one paragraph here from a letter of the Secretary of Agriculture in reference to that matter?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I will ask the Senator when that letter was written?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is dated December 15, 1914. I quote this in response to the question asked by the Senator from Idaho.

Accurate and timely estimates of crop and live-stock production are of vital interest to farmers, transportation companies, dealers, merchants, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers. Such estimates enable farmers to market their crops intelligently, transportation companies to estimate the number of cars required to move the crops, and other business men to avoid economic waste and loss in the conduct of their enterprises. Both producers and consumers are benefited by the economic and commercial adjustments which are based on estimates of agricultural production.

Then he goes on and shows by percentages that the statements that he is now circulating are false.

Mr. BORAH. From whom is the Senator reading?

Mr. OVERMAN. This is a letter from Secretary David F. Houston. He goes on to show that he can not make accurate estimates now on anything at all because of the errors he has found.

Mr. KENYON. That was before the year 1910, was it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; this is 1915.

Mr. KENYON. But he is referring to estimates before the year 1910. I do not think that discrepancy has existed since that time.

Mr. OVERMAN. But it is since the census reports are so incorrect. He is basing the estimate for this year on the census that has been taken, and he finds that in every State there is a difference, sometimes as high as 120 per cent. I presume that if we should look at Idaho, if I could find it, we would find a similar error. Let me see if I can find Idaho.

Mr. KENYON. Why would not those same discrepancies occur in the proposed census?

Mr. OVERMAN. The law itself requires that this census shall be taken every five years, and we think it is important that it should be done, in order that we may have correct estimates. It is impossible to get a correct estimate unless we have a census more frequently than once every 10 years.

Mr. KENYON. It is impossible to get correct estimates of crops, anyhow.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is another question.

Mr. KENYON. Take corn or oats. Some of it is put into silos; at times hogs are turned into cornfields. It is just a question of estimating, exactly the same as these reports are founded on estimates. You can not get anything more accurate.

Mr. OVERMAN. The estimate of the number of acres in the Senator's State is incorrect, I suppose. I will not say the Senator's State, but in many of the States the census reports are not correct, as shown.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, not exactly correct; no; but they come as near as human probability could expect them to be.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KENYON. I yield for a question. I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator says that recently the estimates have been more nearly correct.

Mr. KENYON. Since the census of 1910.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes. If that be true, if the service has been improved in such a way that the estimates are reliable, then, of course, these figures no longer have much significance. Just as an instance, however, the estimate for 1909 for South Carolina on the acreage of wheat was 381,000, and the census disclosed 43,000.

Mr. KENYON. There are a great many erroneous figures or estimates in 1909, but I ask the Senator if he will produce any for 1913 or 1914?

Mr. SHIVELY. No; I will not.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator can not.

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not say that the 1913 or 1914 estimates are correct or not correct. I am merely calling attention to those which have come under my observation and which are five or six hundred per cent in excess of the real fact.

Mr. KENYON. The census that was taken in 1910 was not published until 1913, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the practice of publishing the estimates each year necessarily brings the ninth year, just before the general census is taken, off as far as possible from the facts. Each year there is an estimate made, and then the next year an estimate is based upon that year and the next one upon that year, and at the end of the ninth year all of the mistakes that have been made during all of the 9 years show as soon as the general estimate of the 10 years is made. That is why the estimates of 1909 are so far from the facts—because they have been based upon the 9 preceding years, and all of the mistakes that were made during the 9 years show as soon as the census is taken for 1910. The present mode of estimating crops is no better than it was in 1908 or 1909, and the estimates are made exactly the same now as they were made then, but when the year 1919 comes all the mistakes of all the estimates of all the years will show as soon as the census is taken for 1920.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have before me corroborative evidence, I think, of the statement of the Senator from Utah. In the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate there seem to be some discrepancies in 1909 and in 1899, every 10 years running on the "9" figure; but from 1909 on there are none shown at all.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, can not the Senator see that it is not possible to show that a mistake has been made in the estimate unless we provide for enumerations, so that we can find out what the fact is?

Mr. KENYON. We have had every year the figures in the agricultural yearbook, which I understand the Senator says are incorrect.

Mr. BRYAN. But the reason the chief of the bureau does not show that there is a mistake since 1910 is because he does not know. It is simply an estimate, and the very purpose of this provision is to stop the estimate and attempt to get at the fact in 5 years, instead of waiting for 10 years.

Mr. KENYON. If nobody knows that there have been any mistakes in the estimates, who has been hurt by them?

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the Senator see—I think the Senator must see—that the only way to find out whether you have made mistakes or not is to go and get the facts? The Senator says that nobody has contended that the estimates snce 1910 are not correct. The department does not believe they are correct, because, acting upon past experience, it knows that they have not been correct; and the very purpose of this provision is so that instead of allowing the estimates to accumulate from year to year for 10 years, within half that period we will take another census, so as to let the estimates begin from the census and from the facts ascertained. If you make an estimate based upon an error of the crop for one year, and base your next year's estimate upon that error, you very soon pile up errors until we had better stop issuing the estimates at all.

Mr. KENYON. Why, of course there will be errors, and when you multiply the errors for 9 or 10 years it will amount to some considerable amount; but does the Senator from Florida believe that the mistakes that have been made in estimates are sufficient to warrant this Congress, in the present condition of the finances of this Nation, in voting two and a quarter million dollars for this kind of a proposition?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if I did not think so I would not be supporting the proposition. When the Senator gets through I will state why I think it is proper to support it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand this bill to be one making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government. This amendment provides for taking an agricultural census. I hope before the Senator takes his seat he will endeavor to explain if he can, what connection there is between an agricultural census and the expenses of the national legislative, executive, and judicial departments.

Mr. KENYON. Of course the theory is that it is one of the expenses attached to the executive branch of the Government acting through the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. THOMAS. But that is only a theory.

Mr. KENYON. It is only a theory; and of course the condition of affairs in the country now as to our finances is a condition, not a theory.

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree with that. A few moments ago the Senator read from the testimony of Mr. Burleson explaining the manner in which the statute was enacted.

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. My only reason for taking up the time of the Senator is to emphasize the vicious practice by means of which so-called riders are attached to all sorts of bills entirely foreign, generally speaking, to the subject matter of those bills.

This is a provision which, if it is a good one, ought to stand or fall upon its own merits. It is placed in here as a part of this bill doubtless because it is the only way in which its passage can be secured, and it can be secured here by forcing it through upon the alternative either of making it a part of the bill or having the bill itself fail of passage. It is not right.

Mr. KENYON. It gets back to the old proposition, upon which I think the Senator and I agree, that the President ought to have the power to veto any item in an appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, there is no question but that if the President had the power to veto specific items in appropriation bills, he could and would save the people of this country millions of dollars every year.

Mr. KENYON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. THOMAS. And if in our Constitution there were the same provision that appears in the constitutions of nearly all of the States of the Union, providing that no bill shall refer to more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, it would be impossible to effectuate legislation such as this.

Mr. KENYON. Of course I absolutely agree with the Senator, and I think the Senator will agree with another proposition—that if appropriations are to go on as they have been going on, and such matters as this are put into appropriation bills, and no system is established of correlation between the different committees or between the executive departments and Congress, this Government is going on the rocks financially.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that prophecy may be verified, Mr. President. The difficulty lies in our system. Both parties are to blame for it.

Mr. KENYON. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS. Neither party seems to be able to correct it. Until some satisfactory system of estimating our receipts and expenditures can be made the basis of financial legislation the expenditures of the Government are going to increase, and increase constantly; and there is no question but that it will lead to bankruptcy unless some such method can be devised and put into effect in the course of a few years.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he does not think this item is quite as germane to the title of the bill as many other items named in the bill. I turn to page 123, just at random, and for an example; and under the heading "Census Office" I find this:

> For securing information for census reports, provided for by law, semimonthly reports of cotton production, periodical report of stocks of baled cotton in the United States and of domestic and foreign consumption of cotton—

And so forth.

That is quite as germane, is it not, as the item now under consideration?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, unquestionably.

Mr. STERLING. Is not this an item for the payment of the expenses of one of the departments of the Government, an appropriation for the executive department, and therefore is it not proper so far as that is concerned?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, I am not raising the point that it is not proper, possibly, in this bill. I am raising the objection that it is a perfectly useless thing, in the first place, and, secondly, that if there is any necessity for it this is not the time to appropriate this two and a quarter million dollars.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. Just a word further, if the Senator will permit me, not exactly in the nature of a question.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate I can not yield for anything but a question.

Mr. JONES. There is no filibuster on now.

Mr. KENYON. Is that applicable only during a filibuster?

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is all.

Mr. STERLING. I will waive the matter until later, then.

Mr. JONES. Referring to the proposition of the President having the power to veto a proposition in an appropriation bill, I will say to the Senator I think it might be well if the President had that power, and I would vote to give it to him; but I do not think that it would result very much in the curtailment of appropriations. I wish to suggest to the Senator that in the sundry civil bill alone Congress is appropriating $12,000,000 less than the estimates from the department, and the President would not very likely veto any proposition in a bill that was urged pretty strongly by one of his executive officers. So we are not going to get economy by vesting the President with the power to veto an item in an appropriation bill. The only way is to make the appropriations and cut them down ourselves.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Ohio for a question.

Mr. POMERENE. The question I desire to ask is this: It was stated by the Senator that there were certain estimates of acreage, and so forth, given in the Agricultural Yearbook, and it was stated that those estimates were not reliable.

Mr. KENYON. I have not said that.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; I say it was stated that those estimates were not reliable. Is the Senator able to give us any information which would indicate the difference between the actual acreage and the estimates which are given?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the estimates of the crops and statistics that are sent out in the Agricultural Yearbook every year are not reliable, we had better stop publishing it, because it is a matter of great expense. This is sent all through the country, and I have never before heard it claimed that they were not reliable and up to date.

Mr. POMERENE. In reading some of the testimony, I notice that there seemed to be certain discrepancies in certain States, but whether that was shown I have not been able to advise myself. I was wondering whether the Senator had any specific information on that subject.

Mr. KENYON. I have some here, and if I can find it I will refer to it later.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator please, I will read just a few lines from the statement given before the subcommittee by Secretary Redfield as to one State:

> Senator SMOOT. For what period of time, Mr. Secretary?
> Secretary REDFIELD. From 1899 to 1913. If I may take your own State, Mr. Chairman—
> I happened to be chairman of the subcommittee—
> as an example, I find that the acreage of corn in North Carolina in the year 1899 was found to be in error by a shortage of 262,000 acres, and in 1909 it was found to be in error by an excess of 438,000 acres.

Then in Utah there was about the same percentage, and so with a great many of the States.

Mr. KENYON. I will answer that. We appropriate every year about $150,000 in the Agriculture appropriation bill for the Secretary of Agriculture to get these estimates. If they are wrong every year why do we keep on doing this?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion there to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I will yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I was on the committee that reported this bill, and I took leave to differ from the committee on this particular item. I did not believe that it ought to be passed. But I want to say that it is almost impossible, even if you have an accurate census taken one year, to estimate what will be the acreage the next year. Whenever the price of products in one line goes up a great acreage follows, and whenever a product declines, as the price of wheat or something like that, gets low, then, as a matter of fact, the production falls. But accuracy of estimate is almost impossible. I have found that whenever you make an accurate statement in regard to the census on a matter, the people are very much disappointed in it. It is true in population; it is true in everything. Every State is trying to boom its products, saying it produces so much, and certain statements are made in relation to it, and whenever you take an accurate statement it is disappointing to the people, and they want to have another one taken right over again.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, here are three finely bound books, "Thirteenth Census of the United States," volumes 5, 6, and 7. They are all devoted to agriculture and were published in 1913, and every conceivable question extant, of crop, stock, land irrigation, everything that could be thought of with relation to the farming interests of this country, is covered in that census which we have had only for use now for a couple of years.

I wonder how many farmers have ever read it or paid any attention to it, or very few other people, for that matter? If this is being done in the name of the farmer he has not asked for it and he does not want it. There are too many statistics now that are compiled by theorists as to the farmer. We simply stuff him with statistics. He knows a good deal more about it than the young fellow with rolled-up trousers at the bottom, who goes to him with a cigarette and instructs him how to farm and asks questions of him, such as: "How many children have you, and why," and "Are you married, and why," and "Have you no children, and why," and a lot of infernal nonsense that is ground up for the farmers every year. They do not want it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the statistics or estimates are very valuable to the man who wants to buy or sell on the market, so as to ascertain whether he can make a bigger profit out of the farm than he could otherwise?

Mr. KENYON. Exactly. It might do the Chicago Board of Trade a lot of good to have these expenditures made. Here is a census that has cost this country $15,000,000, and $4,000,000 of that was devoted to this agricultural census.

Now, over on the House side, I want to read what some of the Democratic House leaders said about this matter. Mr. PAGE of North Carolina said, in the debate——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRYAN. For the sake of economy of time more than anything else I object to the Senator from Iowa reading from the debates in the House of Representatives and from speeches made there.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Chair hold that this is correct?

Mr. BRYAN. Jefferson's Manual, on page 96, says that it is improper to refer in the Senate to what is said in the House, and vice versa. The rule is not based on whether it is adverse criticism. I think the Senator from Iowa is familiar with that. If the Senator, for example, will read from a Member of the House, and desires to commend him for what he said and to agree with him, some other Senator in answer to that might be led into an adverse criticism of what was said. The correct way is not to refer to debate in the House at all.

Mr. KENYON. Without conceding the point, I believe there is a good deal of force in it and I do not want to make a precedent of it. Of course, I am perfectly willing not to read the debate, but I will merely refer to matters that took place.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As the question is one of time, I should think we could agree that within half an hour from this time we shall take a vote on this amendment. Would that be satisfactory?

Mr. KENYON. I will not take more than 10 minutes, and that would require a roll call.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We want to get this bill out of the way.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, we spent a great deal of time this morning over an item of $280. We are now considering one of two and a half million dollars, and yet there are not half as many Senators upon the floor as were in attendance then. I wonder if $280 for an employee is more important to the senatorial mind than two and a half million dollars to be expended upon a measure of this sort. It seems to me that we ought to debate it. If we are going to have a cloture rule, that is all right; but we have spent weeks here in idle debate upon many subjects, the purpose of which was of course entirely obvious. Now the Senator is calling attention to a very large item in an important measure at a time when the revenues of the Government are not in a satisfactory condition, and it is something, it seems to me, to which we should give our most serious attention.

Mr. SHAFROTH. My object was simply to facilitate the passage of the bill. I do not believe that the amendment just offered would carry, and I wanted to dispose of it just as soon as we reasonably could. I recognize that it is a big item and that it ought to be carefully considered.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will give bond that it will not be carried, I will quit; but I have not taken very much time of the Senate in the last few weeks. I have not been in sympathy with the filibuster, although not at all opposed to filibustering.

I will not offend the legislative sensibility of my friend from Florida, and I will not read the RECORD, but I want to say that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House made a speech against this provision of the House bill. He seemed to have some serious doubt about the financial condition of the Government. In that speech he showed what were the estimates for the fiscal year 1916 and how the expenditures would be a great deal more than the estimates. He pointed out that it was most unfortunate that the country was now subjected to this war tax, and that it was the duty of the Government to refrain from any unnecessary appropriations. He made a very strong argument, which I hope those who are in doubt will read.

Now, Mr. President, in addition to all this information which the farmer has and which he knows vastly more about than those furnishing it, there is a bulletin issued every once in a while that goes out to the farmers of the country covering the matters in which they are peculiarly interested and setting forth some of the facts that would be covered by this census. The last one is January 1, 1915. It is so up to date that it deals with the question of the foot-and-mouth disease. I think it can not be questioned that it is accurate, because it places Iowa as the first State of the Union in the production of crops.

I would not vote against anything, Mr. President, that in my judgment was for the benefit of the farmers or the agricultural interests of the country, because agriculture is the basis of all our wealth and all our prosperity, but I believe that this is not for the benefit of the farmers of the country, but merely creates a vast number of jobs the salaries of which the farmers in additional taxes must help to pay for.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa is correct in his conclusion, that this amendment will serve no useful purpose and that its only effect will be to give employment to enumerators, of course it ought not to be agreed to. I am rather forced to the conclusion that the Senator from Iowa has not given the hearing that was had by the Senate committee that careful attention to which it is entitled before the statement was made that this item is indefensible. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator from Iowa raise any objection to the item immediately preceding this one, which completes the expenditure of $1,000,000 for the taking of the census of manufactures.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there was no roll call on that, but I voted against it. I am not any more in favor of that item than I am in favor of this one.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well. I have the purpose in rising to try to explain to the Senate briefly the reasons which led the committee to recommend the inclusion of this item in the bill. At first blush it appeared to us that we might save this expenditure, and that we might justly do so. I take leave to say just here that the members of the Committee on Appropriations are as anxious to save wherever it can legitimately be done as is the Senator from Iowa.

But, Mr. President, there came before the committee the Secretary of Commerce and the Director of the Census, and we were furnished with a carefully prepared statement from the Director of the Census and from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Now, let us see what the Secretary of Agriculture says about this item. He says:

> The necessity for taking an agricultural census in 1915 is especially urgent because of the fact that unprecedented changes in the acreages sown to different crops will probably take place during the coming season because of the abnormal marketing conditions resulting from the war in Europe. It is already apparent that the largest acreage of winter wheat in the history of this country has been sown. If the war continues, the acreage sown to spring wheat next season will probably be larger than for many years. The acreage already sown to winter oats and cover crops in the South is believed to be larger than ever before.

The Director of the Census pointed out that they have two ways of furnishing statistics on crops. One is by an estimate acquired as carefully as possible by communications with individual farmers and with organizations that the State has created. Another is by an examination, by an enumeration, by the taking of a census. A census is taken every 10 years. The last census deals with conditions existing in 1909. The last time the Government acquired the facts upon which the acreage and the condition of agriculture could be stated was for the year 1909. Therefore it is not surprising that the statistics with the tables furnished, and from which the Senator read, do not show any discrepancy between the estimate and the census or enumeration since 1909, because no census or enumeration has been taken or had.

That is the very purpose of this item. It was the very purpose Congress had in view when in 1909 it provided that midway between the taking of the census of population, of agriculture, of manufactures, and of live stock there should be taken an agricultural census. As I understand from the hearings and from the statements made before the committee, the Bureau of the Census takes the census of 1910 as the basis, and they add to or subtract from that basis in order to arrive at an estimate of acres planted to agricultural products. From year to year that is done. If an error is made, the error is repeated from year to year.

So, Mr. President, however valuable the census of 1910 may be, five years have gone by. Suppose it is inaccurate; that a mistake has been made and is continued; what would be the result if it is not corrected until 1920? Let us see what was the result in the preceding 10 years. I will only call attention to mistakes of estimates, which amounted to more than 40 per cent.

In Alabama the wheat crop was underestimated 54.2 per cent in 1899; in 1909 it was overestimated 61.7 per cent. In Arkansas in 1899 the wheat crop was underestimated 40.1 per cent; in 1909 it was overestimated 149 per cent. In Colorado in 1909 the wheat crop was underestimated 58.7 per cent. In Connecticut in 1899 the estimate was higher than the enumeration, and there was a mistake of 89.7 per cent. In Delaware in 1899 there was an overestimate of 205 per cent on the oat crop. In Georgia in 1909 there was an overestimate of the wheat crop of 163.3 per cent, and in 1899 there was an overestimate of the oat crop of 49.8 per cent. In Idaho in 1899 there was an underestimate of the wheat crop of 46.6 per cent and of the oat crop of 50 per cent; in 1909 there was an underestimate of the oat crop of 42.2 per cent. In Kansas in 1899 there was an overestimate of the oat crop of 49.9 per cent. In Kentucky in 1899 there was an overestimate of the oat crop of 43.8 per cent. In Maine in 1899 there was an underestimate of the wheat crop of 70.7 per cent, and in 1909 there was an overestimate of 164 per cent. In Maryland in 1899 there was an overestimate of 63.3 per cent, and in 1909 of 43.1 per cent upon the oat crop.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida how it is known that a mistake was made in the first estimate when they did not have a census? Here it is stated a mistake was made. How do they know a mistake was made?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado, like the Senator from Iowa, has not yet grasped this question. The only time they can tell when a mistake is made in the estimate of a crop is when they have taken the census. In 1909 they made an estimate and also in 1909 they had made a count. They found that the estimate was wrong in some instances by 700 per cent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; and in the other years I can readily see that where a census is taken the mistake can be corrected; but if you have a census only once in every 10 years, I should like to know how you can say that these estimates are wrong or not wrong?

Mr. BRYAN. You can only tell at the end of the period.

Mr. SHAFROTH. At the end of 10 years?

Mr. BRYAN. Of course. The very object of this item is that the period shall not be so long and that the mistakes shall not be so great.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If there has been a mistake in the estimates for the years following 1909 the mistake is estimated on the census of 1910, is that it?

Mr. BRYAN. There has been nothing but an estimate since 1909, and in the very nature of things there can not be.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not understand how you can say that an estimate was off 62 per cent or off 105 per cent when you have not a census by which to correct it.

Mr. BRYAN. But they had a census in 1909; and when they took the census they showed that the estimates were out of plumb.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But they were out of plumb for that one year.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes; that is the only year they take the census—at the end of the 10-year period.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to get some information on this point. I notice the amendment reads:

> For taking, compiling, and completing the census of agriculture required by section 31 of the act approved July 2, 1909.

The House bill has a provision repealing that act. This is to complete the census. I infer from that that some work has been done along that line?

Mr. BRYAN. I beg to say that this amount of money will enable the Director of the Census to take, compile, and complete the agricultural census, and that he will have it available by July 1, 1916.

Mr. GALLINGER. When was the work done?

Mr. BRYAN. It has not been done.

Mr. GALLINGER. It needs completion. The language is "completing the census."

Mr. BRYAN. This is the idea: We are giving authority here to take, compile, and complete the whole work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it proposed to make an entirely new census of agriculture?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. To start de novo?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And to complete it?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. Now, take Massachusetts. In 1899 the estimate on the oat crop there was greater than the enumeration showed by 121 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Just a moment. In Minnesota in 1909 they overestimated the wheat crop by 70.9 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator know how these mistakes can be corrected except by the taking of a census every year?

Mr. BRYAN. Why, Mr. President, of course there may be some mistakes, but the Senator ought to know that if you correct the basis upon which you are acting and do not repeat the mistakes each year it will not be as great in 5 years as it would be in 10.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is true, Mr. President, but I must confess I am more concerned about the estimates of the national revenues just at present, and it seems to me that they ought to be considered in this connection.

Mr. BRYAN. I did not yield to the Senator for a speech. I understand his position.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask whether these estimates are made on the quantity of such products as wheat?

Mr. BRYAN. They are made on the acreage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. On the acreage?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. To resume where I was interrupted, I will state that in Mississippi the estimate of the oat crop in 1909 was 150,000 acres, while, as a matter of fact, there were only 97,000 acres, an overestimate of 54 per cent.

Mr. President, I will not take up each State, showing the mistakes which have been made, but they range from a very small amount to as much as 700 per cent.

Now, is it of any value to have these figures correct? Does it make any difference whether these estimates are right or wrong? We issue a Statistical Abstract, which is accepted as containing correct information. Ought it to be issued when in it, according to the admission of the very departments which compile the information, are errors ranging from a fraction of 1 per cent to 700 per cent? Is it of any value to the farmers, for whom my friend from Iowa speaks, to have some idea of the acreage sown to wheat? Is it of any interest to the cotton grower to know the number of acres planted in cotton? Why, Mr. President, do we undertake to have this Government, through some one or more of its departments, arrive at estimates of the crops of the country? There are corn exchanges in the big cities; there are cotton exchanges; they make their estimates every year of the acreage of wheat or of the bushels of wheat that will be produced and of the acreage of cotton or of the bales of cotton that will be produced. They are interested in showing that there will be a large supply, an oversupply, of these products of the farm, while the farmer is interested in having the impression prevail that there will be an undersupply so that the price will be higher. The exchanges that sell these great products upon the market issue their estimates. The farmers do not get out a bulletin showing the acreage or making their estimates. Who will do it for them? Are they to take the estimates of the cotton exchanges and of the corn exchanges and of the wheat exchanges? Are they to be satisfied with whatever estimate is arrived at by gentlemen interested in depressing the price of their products? Is it of no consequence to the producer to have some idea of whether there will be an oversupply of farm products or whether there will be an undersupply? If a man is trying to make up his mind what to plant this year, ought he not to have all the information possible as to the sort of crop he will plant? Are you willing to leave the department to go ahead and make guesses, in which, when once an error creeps in, it remains? Are you willing simply to let the producer depend upon the statements and estimates of interested parties as to their products? If not, who else is to make the estimates?

That has been assumed to be the duty of the Government. It has been doing it for many, many years; but it has been found out that if you only make the enumeration, as the census is taken, every 10 years, the statistics are mere guesswork, and it would be of great value to the people who produce these products and as a matter of public concern to have the real facts known.

The Senator from Iowa pointed to the three books containing the census of agriculture for 1909, and which he says are now useless because out of date. Perhaps they are not as valuable as they were when published, but they are valuable. However, Mr. President, it does seem to me that we ought to do one of two things. We ought to quit issuing the yearbooks which the Senator says and the departments that issue them say are unreliable and misleading, or, if we intend to issue these reports, they ought to be issued in such form that everybody who reads them would have some reason to suppose that they are reliable.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator realize that the present agricultural appropriation bill contains an appropriation of quite a large sum of money "for making and publishing periodically crop and live stock estimates, including acreage, yield, and value of farm products"?

Mr. BRYAN. How many men are provided for that purpose, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. KENYON. I do not think that is stated.

Mr. BRYAN. The number is 79. Does the Senator think that they could take a census of the agricultural acreage of this country?

Mr. KENYON. Of course they will only get an estimate from the farmers. The census is more accurate, I grant; but, nevertheless, it is more or less an estimate, and it can not be anything else. Why not stop appropriating this other money if it does not result in obtaining accurate information?

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President, I think not. I do not believe the Senator from Iowa has ever yet found out the reason for the insistence of the department for the inclusion of this item in this bill.

Mr. KENYON. Well, I have my idea about their insistence.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator asks why do they not contradict the estimates since 1910. Because they have not yet secured the facts by which they could show whether they were true or untrue. That is the complete answer. They can not show whether they are accurate or reliable until they get the facts again, and it is not compatible with the proper respect which should be entertained for the accuracy of Government publications to send them out year by year containing estimates that may be wrong, which have been wrong in the past, and which are calculated to mislead the public, when we can obtain the facts. I have no doubt the money proposed to be expended for getting the facts every five years will be well expended and will be in the interest of accuracy and of economy.

The Senator from Iowa says he stands for the farmer. Then the farmer ought to have an estimate made and a census taken by a disinterested party, and ought not to have to rely upon the estimates furnished by people who are buyers of the very articles the production of which they estimate. Every farmer will claim that there is a short crop and every buyer will claim that there is a large crop. It seems to me it is the duty of the Government, if it can do so, to arrive at the facts.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. It seems to me, from listening to the Senator from Florida, that this appropriation will be more valuable to the brokers, the men who sell the crops long or short, than it will to the farmer himself. I do not believe that as a rule the farmer reads these statistics.

Here is an appropriation asked for of about $2,000,000 to take a census. It seems, under the present plan, that nine times out of ten the department guesses at it, and guesses wrong, to the tune of 700 per cent, say. It seems to me that it would be cheaper to strike a general average of the errors and base their estimates on conclusions deduced in that way, and thus they would arrive pretty nearly at the facts.

It reminds me somewhat of the old man whose boy came home from college, and the father was interested in knowing what information he had gathered there; and having been a graduate of the same school he put his son through an examination. The father was telling a neighbor about it the next day. The neighbor asked: "How did he come out?" The father replied: "He did finely. Nine problems out of ten I put to him he said he did not know, and his answer was right about every one. The tenth problem I placed before him he tried to solve, and made a fool of himself." [Laughter.]

It seems to me that here we have a case where nine times out of ten the guess is wrong, and the farmer has been fed on that sort of information for, lo, these many years. Unless this appropriation is a continuing one, the misinformation will begin to accumulate year by year in the same proportion that it has in the past.

It is my opinion that with the funds of the Government in the condition they are now, it is going to cost the farmer more than the information will be worth to him. I question the wisdom of it at this time. I think he will be able to get along better than he has in the past, and at less cost, if the department will furnish him a fair average of its errors based on past experience, to be used by him for his guidance in the future.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say only a word on this item.

I think it is a mistake to say that a careful enumeration of acreage and crops is of no value, but I believe it can be done more cheaply by the States than it can be done by the Government of the United States. In North Dakota we require the assessors to take an enumeration of the acreage every year, and a report is made to the commissioner of agriculture, so that from year to year we have the acreage. Of course, it is very easy to make a mistake in estimating a crop, even if you have the acreage. If you estimate a crop of 20 bushels to the acre early in the season, perhaps later on something will happen to the crop, and you will get only one-half or two-thirds of that, so that necessarily there is a mistake in the estimate. That will happen even if you appropriate this money and appoint census enumerators to take the census under the provisions of this amendment; but it is of value to the farmer and to the country.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. The enumeration is to be taken as of the month of October, which is supposed by the department to be the best month for getting an accurate return.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Formerly it was taken, by the Thirteenth Census, in the spring. Of course floods and frosts might come along and destroy the crop, but it was thought that the month of October would give a pretty fair idea of that year's crop.

Mr. GRONNA. That is true, Mr. President, as the Senator from Florida has stated. If a census is taken after the crop has been harvested, of course you can get correct figures. It will not be an estimate; it will be actual results. But the question is whether or not we shall appropriate this great sum of money. Every year we are appropriating more and more money. I remember that when I was a boy I heard a Member of Congress say that the Congress had been extravagant; they had expended almost half a billion dollars. Now we expend more than $1,000,000,000 every Congress.

I believe it is of great value, not only to the farmers but to the entire country, to have a census or an enumeration of agricultural products and of stock, but the question is whether we should pay this immense amount of money for it. So far as North Dakota is concerned, we take the census every year at the expense of the State. It is very little work for the assessor, when he makes his assessment—and that has to be made every year—to take an enumeration of the acreage. Of course we would not have the estimate of the crop, because that would have to be done in the fall of the year.

I think, however, I shall vote against the amendment, because we are appropriating more money than we ought to appropriate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. This item provides for the expenditure of $2,286,100. That is added to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill by a rider placed upon it by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

It is difficult for me, sir, even to imagine any proper defense for the insertion of the provision calling for this expenditure at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he calls this a rider upon an appropriation bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, of course, it is a rider.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, Mr. President, this item is estimated for by two departments of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not care if it is estimated for by all of the departments and by the British Parliament.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am talking about whether or not it is a rider.

Mr. THOMAS. My understanding of a rider is an amendment not germane to the bill, and the mere fact that there has been an estimate for this item does not make it germane.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did the Senator read the two lines that were stricken out?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I did. I am sorry to say that I read the two lines that were stricken out.

Mr. OVERMAN. Those two lines were stricken out by the committee, and this amendment was reported to the House as we have it.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. On the floor they struck out the two lines and the effect of that was to repeal the law. Instead of repealing the law as it was passed by a former Congress, we have carried into effect the law that was passed.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, Mr. President; I am quite aware of the fact that in this bill the House repealed, or attempted to repeal, a section of another law. That was a rider, too. I understand what is meant by that expression. I do not think it had any place in this bill. Of course I do not mean that it was wrong, because I am well aware of the practice and of the fact that it is permissible under our system of proceeding; but the Senate committee, instead of standing by that provision, proposes to reinsert it and add to it an appropriation of $2,286,100 in order that it may be carried into effect.

Mr. President, the Democratic Party has been criticized, and very justly, by Senators upon the other side for its disregard of its platform pledge as to economy. While I know that this criticism has come in most instances from Senators who have not themselves voted in accordance with their criticism; while I am quite aware of the fact that, except in a few individual cases, no effort has proceeded from that side to limit our expenditures; while I am quite aware of the fact that many of the so-called pork-barrel bills have been supported just as earnestly upon that side of the Chamber as upon this, I want to warn my Democratic brethren that we are going to be held responsible for our disregard of that duty and not the Republican Party. They can vote for these measures just as we do; and I understand that this amendment received practically unanimous support in the committee, there being but one dissenting voice in regard to it. Nevertheless, those upon the Republican side who vote with the supporters of this amendment will be quite as constant and quite as vociferous in their charges of violation of platform pledges here as though they had opposed it.

Mr. President, we know that we are approaching a deficiency. We are all painfully aware of the fact that the finances of the Government are not in good condition. I am not going to go into the causes of this condition. Men differ about it. A great deal of political capital has been sought to be made, and will be sought to be made, upon it. Democratic legislation will be charged with being responsible for it. It has been; but the fact remains, irrespective of causes, that there is a deficiency; and now the Democratic majority of the Senate of the United States proposes, in this good year, under those conditions, to spend over two and a quarter million dollars in order to take an agricultural census. Why, Mr. President, I do not care how important it may be; if it is not an emergency, if it is not one of those urgent conditions that we can not avoid, this appropriation ought not to be made at this time.

I do not profess to be the only Member of this body interested in a reduction of governmental expenditures. I am quite aware of the fact that we all entertain that view, but we always make an exception of those individual appropriations in which we are either directly concerned or indirectly concerned for some constituent; and of course the pressure of the people themselves upon the Congress of the United States for appropriations for all conceivable purposes has much to do with our extravagance. As I say, to the extent to which we yield to these importunate demands, no matter how great the pressure, we will be held responsible.

I am aware that I am talking to an impatient audience. I am not unmindful of the expressions around me that if we do not quit talking we will never pass the bill; but I record my protest, as one of the Members of this body, against the expenditure of this vast sum of money at this time for a purpose that is not absolutely necessary, and I shall vote against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not there are some other matters in the bill that could be disposed of at this time. I think we should have a larger attendance before a vote is taken on this matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the idea is to dispose of this and be done with it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I would rather dispose of it to-night if it is possible to do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we have a pretty large attendance.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill in any way, but I do feel that we should have a larger attendance on this important amendment. Will not the bill have to go over until to-morrow in any event?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope not. I do not know what discussion may be desired about the bill. I am very much disappointed that we can not pass it to-night.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have a motion to make.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am afraid, Mr. President, that the debate is just beginning.

Mr. KENYON. There are some amendments to be offered, I know; and if it is proposed to ask for a vote on this amendment to-night I shall be compelled to call for a quorum. It is about 6 o'clock, anyhow, and it seems to me we might as well take a recess now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I had expected to finish this bill early to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Why not hold a night session?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I would if I could get Senators to stay here, but it has been difficult to keep them here this long. They have been talking about leaving for an hour, and we can not get them to stay here. I should be very glad if we could get a vote on the bill. I do not think the discussion is going to change anybody's vote. Every Senator must know what he thinks about this amendment. I do not see what good talk does about it.

Mr. KENYON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If we can get a vote that is all I want, and we could finish the bill to-night. The Senate has a right to do as it pleases about the matter. It is no disappointment to me. Whatever the Senate wants will suit me. The Members of the Senate can vote it in or vote it out, just as they see fit, but I should like to get a vote now.

Mr. KENYON. I think we have made tremendous progress on this bill to-day. I should be glad to see it passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There has been real progress, but there have been very few disputed items in it.

Mr. KENYON. As far as I am concerned, I do not want to be a party to delaying the bill to-night, but I shall ask for the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply wish to inquire of the Senator from Virginia if it would not be possible to take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night? Then, by having a night session, we could surely dispose of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I should be glad to do that, but there are so many Senators protesting against it that I hardly feel justified in expecting them to attend a night session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I had an understanding that at 6 o'clock the Senate would take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. I have told a number of Senators that that would be done, and they have gone. I really think, in justice to that statement made by me, that the Senate ought to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

I will say to the Senator that I have not a word to say upon the question. I think we are ready to vote upon it, and if a recess is taken I do not think there will be any discussion upon it in the morning.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. All I am afraid of is that in the morning we will come back with a fresh start and we will have a dozen speeches and they will occupy the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I do not think so. I do not think there is any intention whatever of debating the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Can we get unanimous consent to vote on the amendment at 11.30 to-morrow?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suggest that the Senator try it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that we vote on this amendment not later than 11.30 to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will make no objection if the Senator will make it 12 o'clock.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator has just said he was through. Why does he want to carry it over for a longer time?

Mr. KENYON. No; I said to the Senator that I had an amendment to offer to the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But this is only on this amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, on this amendment. Yes, indeed; that is all right. I thought the Senator meant on the bill itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia requests unanimous consent to vote on this amendment not later than 11.30 o'clock to-morrow. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and that agreement is entered into.

RECESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 20, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, from whom are all things temporal and spiritual, increase our spiritual vision and our moral integrity, that we may meet all the duties and responsibilities of life with perfect faith and confidence in the overruling of Thy providence, assured that all things work together for good to them that love Thee and seek to do Thy will; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Journal states that the point of no quorum just before adjournment was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. The RECORD correctly shows that the point of order was made by Mr. MOORE. I ask to correct the Journal to conform to the fact.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected to conform to the fact.

The Journal as corrected was approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the pension appropriation bill which was passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the pension appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WORDS SPOKEN IN DEBATE.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last night the pending question was the motion for the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to strike from the RECORD certain words spoken in debate by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the demand for the previous question and yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, as I stated last night, I had no desire to reflect on the honor and integrity of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. I made clear the purpose of my remarks. I uttered the words "honorably and dishonorably." I have no desire to continue this debate; neither have I any desire nor feeling to add to or reiterate what I stated. I wish to eliminate the word "dishonorably"; but in order to do that and express my thought, the word "honorably" must also be eliminated, and I wish to add these words:

Deprived you, Mr. Speaker, of delegates when Democratic public sentiment was in your favor.

That will complete the sense of the paragraph, and I ask unanimous consent to amend the RECORD in that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] asks unanimous consent to amend the RECORD in the manner stated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion to strike out the words.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. NELSON, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. CRAWFORD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 2642. An act authorizing the President to reinstate Joseph Eliot Austin as an ensign in the United States Navy.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. Pending that motion, I would like to see if we can agree upon the time for general debate.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I have requests for about three hours. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] wishes to make a speech, which he characterizes as his "swan song," a sort of farewell address to the House, which will take one hour. I know we all wish to hear him, and I have requests from other gentlemen for about two hours more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me, I think the way is clear to get the appropriation bills out of the way now before the 4th of March, if we get down to business. But it seems to me that six hours' general debate on this appropriation bill at this time would be an unusual amount of time. I have no desire to interfere with gentlemen making speeches; but I think if that latitude of debate is allowed, we ought to have a gentleman's understanding that we are going to stay here to-night and pass this bill.

Mr. COOPER. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. MANN. Is there, so far as anyone knows, much debate asked for on the Military Academy bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see the chairman of that committee in the Hall at this moment.

Mr. MANN. I should think we ought to be able to pass the diplomatic bill and the Military Academy bill by to-morrow night, and that will leave us in very good shape.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The fortifications bill will probably bring a good deal of debate on the bill. The debate now proposed is not on the bill.

Mr. MANN. We have a week and a half after this week. The deficiency bill usually does not take very long.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I suggest that this debate be limited to four hours, and that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] control two hours and a half of it and that I control one hour and a half.

Mr. COOPER. Very well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this bill be limited to four hours, two hours and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and one hour and a half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill shall not exceed four hours, one hour and a half to be controlled by himself and two hours and a half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF SHIPS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, before we go into the debate on the Diplomatic and Consular bill I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table the shipping bill, which has come back from the Senate, and ask to agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America, and between the United States and the countries of Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take this bill from the Speaker's table and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the conferees later.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, H. R. 21201, with Mr. LINTHICUM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, in a discussion with the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], I made reference to the child-labor laws of the State of Georgia. At that time I read from a statement which had been prepared by the National Child Labor Committee and submitted by their agents at the hearings before the Committee on Labor on the child-labor bill. Those hearings were held in the spring of 1914, and the statement of the child-labor conditions and child-labor laws in the various States was of course of that date. Relying upon its accuracy, I discussed the Georgia child-labor law from the standpoint as disclosed in that statement.

I have had my attention called this morning to the fact that on August 14, 1914, the Georgia Legislature passed a bill which was approved and became a law, to go into effect January 1, 1915, and that that law provides a liberal, just, fair, and equitable regulation of the labor of children in that State. I did not know about it yesterday; I had not kept up with the laws of the States so closely as to follow these laws passed within a few months, and I relied entirely upon the statement of the National Child Labor Committee.

I am going to ask unanimous consent, in order to do justice to the State of Georgia, to insert in the RECORD this law recently passed in that State, and I congratulate the State of Georgia on having fallen into line with the progressive States of the Union in protecting little children against the exploitation of employers. It adds another reason for the passage of a Federal child-labor law, because the more States that adopt proper laws, the more reason for the few remaining States to be compelled to accept such laws.

The law I read last night was the Georgia statute passed in 1908, which was repealed by the act of August 14, 1914, to which my attention has just been called. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the law of August 14, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the law referred to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, merely for the purpose of obtaining information I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether his information, which now appears to have been inaccurate, was obtained from the National Child Labor Association?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; I made the statement that I read from the report of the agents of the National Child Labor Committee, and that that report was made at a meeting of the Committee on Labor last spring, before this Georgia statute was passed. The report then was accurate.

Mr. MOORE. I asked the question not to embarrass the gentleman but merely to show that sometimes we do get inaccurate information from those who agitate these matters.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; and we get inaccurate information from other sources.

Mr. ADAIR. But this was not inaccurate at the time it was made.

Mr. PALMER. No; but it has since been made obsolete.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. What was the date of the last statute enacted by the State of Georgia?

Mr. PALMER. August 14, 1914.

Mr. COOPER. I will say that I had the same pamphlet, and I did not know until this morning that Georgia had passed this statute.

Mr. PALMER. The statement I read was made before the Georgia act was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The statute is as follows:

CHILD LABOR, REGULATING EMPLOYMENT OF.

No. 426.

An act regulating the employment of children; to provide for the issuance of certificates with reference to age and educational qualifications of children; the revocation of such certificates by the commissioner of labor; designating prohibited hours of labor for such children; making it the duty of the commissioner of labor and authorized assistants to enforce this act; making it a misdemeanor to violate the provisions of this act; and to repeal the act approved August 1, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate the employment of children in factories and manufacturing establishments in this State, and to provide for the punishments of violations of the regulations prescribed, and for other purposes," and which said act repealed is codified in sections 3143, 3144, 3145, 3146, 3147, 3148, and 3149 of the Code of Georgia of 1910, and for other purposes.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Georgia, That no child under the age of 14 years shall be employed by, or permitted to work in or about any mill, factory, laundry, manufacturing establishment, or place of amusement; except that children over 12 years of age who have widowed mothers dependent upon them for support, or orphan children over 12 years of age dependent upon their own labor for support, may work in factories and manufactories; except that the foregoing provisions of this section shall not be applicable in instances specified and provided for in section 8 of this act.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no child under 14 years and 6 months shall be employed or be permitted to work in any of the establishments or occupations mentioned in section 1, unless the person, firm, or corporation employing such child has and keeps on file accessible to the officials charged with the enforcement of this act, a certificate from the superintendent of schools in the county or city in which such child resides, that such child is not less than 14 years of age, has attended school for not less than 12 weeks of the 12 months preceding the date of issuance of such certificate; except that the foregoing provisions of this section shall not be applicable in instances specified and provided for in section 8 of this act.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the certificate mentioned in the foregoing section shall state the full name, date and place of birth of the child, with the name and address of the parent, guardian, or person sustaining the parental relationship to such child, and that the child has appeared before the officer, and satisfactory evidence submitted that the child is of legal age. Blank forms of these certificates shall be furnished by the commissioner of labor to the superintendent of schools in the respective cities and counties. A duplicate copy of each certificate shall be filed with the commissioner of labor within four days from its issuance. The commissioner of labor may at any time revoke any certificate if, in his judgment, the certificate was improperly issued. He is authorized to investigate the true age of any child employed, hear evidence, and require the production of relevant books or documents. If the certificate is revoked, the then employer shall be notified, and said child shall not thereafter be employed or permitted to labor until a new certificate has been legally obtained; except that the foregoing provisions of this section shall not be applicable in instances specified and provided for in section 8 of this act.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no child under 14 years and 6 months of age shall be permitted to work in or about any of the establishments mentioned in section 1, or section 2, of this act, between the hours of 7 p. m. and 6 a. m., according to the standard time of the community in which such establishment is located.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall be the duty of the commissioner of labor and his authorized assistants to see that the provisions of this act are enforced.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That any person, agent, or representative of any firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this act; or any parent, guardian, or other person standing in parental relationship to any child, who shall hire or place for employment or labor, any child under the age limits in any of the establishments or occupations mentioned in section 1 of this act, or any superintendent of county or city schools who shall issue a certificate knowing that its issuance was illegal; or any person who shall knowingly furnish any untrue evidence with reference to the date or place of birth of said child, or the age of said child or its educational qualifications, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the act approved August 1, 1906, and entitled "An act to regulate the employment of children in factories and manufacturing establishments in this State and to provide for the punishment of violations of the regulations prescribed, and for other purposes," and codified in sections 3143 to 3149, inclusive, of the Code of Georgia of 1910, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall be lawful for a child 12 years of age or more to work in and for a mill, factory, laundry, manufacturing establishment or place of amusement if such child has dependent upon his labor a widowed mother or if such child is an orphan dependent upon his own labor. Whenever such child desires to work in any of such places as is specified above the fact that such child's labor is necessary to support a widowed mother or to support such orphan child must be found to be true after an investigation by a commission composed of the county school superintendent and the ordinary of the county where the work is to be done, and the head of the school in the school district where the said child lives. After an investigation by said commission, if it, or a majority of its members, find that the facts exist to authorize such child to work in or for any of the establishments mentioned in section 1 of this act, because of the existence of either of the conditions hereinbefore set out, such commission shall issue a certificate to that effect which shall be kept of file in the office of the establishment where said child is at work. Such commission shall make an investigation and issue a new certificate at least once each six months, and may prescribe as a condition precedent to issuance of such certificate school attendance for such length of time and at such time as in its discretion seems wise. No such certificate more than six months old shall authorize the employment of any child under 14½ years of age in or for any of the places specified in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and they are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the provisions of this act shall be in force on and after January 1, 1915.

Approved August 14, 1914.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill carries a total of $4,454,370.01. This is an increase over the present law of $144,513, and is $130,312 less than the estimate sent in by the executive department to Congress.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has labored earnestly to cut down appropriations in this bill to the least possible amount necessary to the proper conduct of our foreign service. I believe we have done it. We have decreased the following among other items:

Salaries of interpreters to embassies and legations, $6,000.

International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, $7,500.

Arbitration of pecuniary claims, $40,870.

Waterways Treaty International Joint Commission, $10,000.

I believe that all of these decreases are justified by evidence submitted to the Foreign Affairs Committee. Of course there are some items in the bill of last year that are not carried in this bill. Then we have increased certain items. We have increased the salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service $31,500. That was due to the law which recently went into effect, known as the reorganization of the Diplomatic and Consular Service. That law necessitated an increase of $31,500 for secretaries to embassies and legations.

Then there is an increase in contingent expenses and foreign missions, $10,500, due to the fact that Argentina and Chile have been raised from legations to embassies.

We have increased the allowance for clerk hire in the United States consulates $117,800. That increase was deemed wise. There are several reasons why this increase should be granted. One of the principal weaknesses of the Consular Service for several years has been the inadequate number of competent clerks employed. The work of the Consular Service has vastly increased, and to a great extent the increase has been of a character which requires a higher grade of clerical assistance than has heretofore been necessary. Moreover, an earnest attempt has been made to Americanize the subordinate force in the consulates, and to a considerable extent this has been done. It can not be carried on, however, unless a larger fund is placed at the disposal of the department for compensation, for it is obvious that a competent American clerk will not serve in the consulates abroad unless given compensation upon which he can live respectably. The amount now appropriated would provide only one clerk at $1,259 a year for each office. It must be apparent that many consulates must have a number of clerks and that competent men who serve as vice consuls in the larger offices, and particularly when living expenses are high, can not be obtained for so small a sum.

Another reason for a larger and more competent force of subordinates is afforded by the complicated and onerous duties which the present war has placed upon consulates. The care of the interests and subjects of belligerent nations, safeguarding and protection of the commerce and shipping of the United States, the protection of American citizens—all require a vast amount of additional work. A considerable amount is being allowed for increased clerical assistance out of the special war appropriation made by Congress, but more will be required after that appropriation shall have been exhausted.

The conditions growing out of the war make it of the highest importance that a larger number of American citizens be employed as clerks in the consulates. In many places the services of clerks of foreign nationality have had to be dispensed with because of objections upon the part of foreign Governments. In replacing these clerks with Americans larger compensation will have to be paid, rendering a larger appropriation necessary.

We also incorporate an item of $360,000 for the purchase of consular premises at Shanghai and $2,275 for a similar purpose at Yokohama. There are some entirely new items in the bill. One is for a hundred thousand dollars for an exposition at Panama, which is to be held during the coming spring and summer. Twenty-five thousand dollars of this money will be used for an exhibit at this exposition and $75,000 to erect a permanent building at Panama City. I will read Secretary Bryan's letter in reference to this item:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 20, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: I have made inquiries in regard to the Panama Exposition, about which you spoke to me a few days ago, and find that the exposition is to open on July 6, 1915. Its character is to be Latin American, and its purpose is to bring under one organization a series of permanent exhibits of products from Latin-American countries, so that travelers crossing the Isthmus may have an opportunity to inspect with a minimum of difficulty and expense the products of the various countries of Latin America.

The only exception to the purely Latin-American character of the exposition is the inclusion of Spain as an exhibitor. It is expected that Spain will spend some $80,000 for the erection of a permanent building which, after the close of the exposition, will be used to house the legation and will contain a permanent exhibition of Spanish products and be the center of Spanish trade publicity in the Caribbean region.

It is understood that Cuba and Venezuela will also erect permanent buildings at the exposition. Cuba intends to spend about $60,000 for a building, which will later on become the home of the Cuban Legation and contain a permanent exhibit of Cuban products. It is not known how much will be expended by Venezuela.

It is understood that Guatemala will spend perhaps $25,000 on her exhibit, and Nicaragua, and probably other Latin-American countries, will be represented by displays of merchandise and other articles of their production.

Panama itself has already expended about $650,000 on a permanent exhibit and upon buildings now under construction, which will be used in the future as Government offices.

The distinct Pan American character of the exposition makes it of the highest importance that the United States should take a conspicuous part in the exposition. It is obvious that a permanent exhibit of the United States on the Isthmus of Panama, which will be crossed by so many passengers interested in trade, in the near future, could not fail to stimulate interest in articles of American production, and the appropriation for American participation should be ample for the installation of a thoroughly comprehensive display of articles produced in the United States.

In view of the character of the exposition it would seem desirable that as much latitude as practicable be given to the expenditure of the money appropriated for the purpose, and I would suggest that if there should be no objection on the part of Congress the appropriation be made without limitation to any particular year, so that it may be expended during the entire period of the exposition, which conceivably may extend beyond the calendar year of 1915.

I am, my dear Mr. FLOOD,
Very sincerely, yours, W. J. BRYAN.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

There is an item of $50,000 for a conference of American financiers and an authorization of the President to invite the financial secretaries of the South and Central American countries and leading bankers of these countries, not exceeding three from each country, to meet here with our Secretary of the Treasury in a conference, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invite bankers of this country to meet with them. This is deemed very important by the executive department. I understand that the system of bills of exchange used by this country and those used by the South and Central American countries are different. This and other subjects will be discussed, so that proper commercial relations can be established between our country and the Republics to the south of us, and our commercial relations with those countries increased and strengthened. I desire to read Secretary McAdoo's letter on this subject:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 15, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: With the approval of the President, I submitted to the Secretary of State, on the 6th of November last, a suggestion that an invitation be extended to each of the Central and South American Governments to send to Washington its finance minister, or some duly accredited financier, for a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury, looking to an improvement in the financial relationship between the United States and the Central and South American countries, and that these Governments be invited, also, to send three representatives of the banking interests of each country to join in the conference. I also suggested that if the Central and South American Governments should be favorably disposed to the idea, the Secretary of the Treasury would invite representative American bankers to participate in the proposed conference. In my letter to the Secretary of State I expressed the conviction that improved financial relations between the Central and South American countries and the United States is of primary importance, and that the proposed conference would be productive of great good. The Secretary of State informs me that he has communicated with the various Governments concerned, and that the idea has been favorably received. I inclose a letter from the Secretary of State, bearing the approval of the President, suggesting the passage of a joint resolution authorizing the President to extend a formal invitation to the Central and South American Governments to participate in the proposed conference, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invite representative American bankers to attend. For the purpose of entertaining the foreign conferees an appropriation of $50,000 is requested.

The unusual conditions prevailing throughout the world to-day make the proposed step exceedingly timely, and it should result in greatly improving and strengthening our relations—financial, commercial, and social, with our neighboring Republics in Central and South America.

In my first letter to the President the suggested date of the conference was February 1, but in view of the unavoidable delays which have occurred in the meantime it will be necessary to fix a later date. The joint resolution, therefore, authorizes the President to call the conference at such a date as he may think advisable.

Permit me to suggest the desirability of prompt action in this matter, particularly in view of the fact that the various Governments with which the Secretary of State has already communicated have evinced a most cordial and friendly disposition in the matter.

Faithfully, yours,
W. G. MCADOO.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has considered all of these increases very carefully. The other items in the bill are the usual items carried in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. I believe that this bill should be passed without amendment and without having any of these items stricken out on a point of order, and I hope such will be the pleasure of the committee.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, permit me to remark at the outset that what I am going to say has no reference whatever to a situation in which our own country may be involved.

In discussing the affairs of the Nation on this floor we find our task on some occasions more weighty with responsibility than on others. This is true with me at this particular time, when I undertake to discuss from an American viewpoint the situation in this country resulting from the great European war. I do not know whether I am equal to the task, but, mindful of all real obligations of neutrality, I shall confine myself to such matters in which my judgment can claim at least a modest degree of competence. And as this will probably be the last time I shall have the honor to address the House I crave the attention of my colleagues.

The United States has a composite population. Not England alone, but all Europe is its mother, and contributions to the blood which now circulates through the Nation's veins have been made by practically all countries, the largest share next to Great Britain having been contributed by Germany or the States now constituting the German Empire. American statesmen recognized early in our history that ours was not a ready-made nation, but a "nation to be" whose character was to be shaped by the impress made upon it by the various elements constituting its growing population. It was also recognized that Saul could not at once turn into Paul, that the newcomer could not change his traits overnight. It is probably true that the Anglo-Saxon is less free from racial or national prejudices than the cosmopolitan German—a strange phenomenon, for they come from the same cradle—yet such was the tolerance of our older statesmen that they never regarded the love of the immigrant for the old country as in any wise irreconcilable with his allegiance to the new. And why? Because reverence for the mother never detracts from love for the bride, and, furthermore, because that reverence is a natural impulse which can no more be regulated or controlled than can the throbs of the human heart. We can educate an immigrant in our way of thinking, induce him to adopt our customs and make a good American citizen of him, but we can not change his heart to the extent of eradicating his regard for his native land. Along with freedom of thought and conscience we must grant him the liberty of placing his sympathies and affections where he pleases. It is a natural right which no law can limit and no government can deny him as long as our own country is not involved. American statesmanship had the choice of either closing the gates of the country or of taking its chances with the constant human influx. It chose the latter course, and history does not record a single instance to prove that policy to have been a mistake. While the people of the United States have been gathered from all nooks and corners of the globe, while many of them still differ in habits, customs, and language, and while on occasions the sympathies of the first, second, and even third generations still go out to the land of their ancestors, no serious problem has thereby been created. Our adopted citizens and their native descendants have stood the test of loyalty in every crisis in the country's history, and thus irrefutable proof has been adduced that memories of the fatherland conjured up by impulses of the heart do not and will not detract from the allegiance due to the adopted country. [Applause.]

I ask you to keep this essential point in mind when I proceed to define the attitude in the present crisis of one great element of our population, that of the American citizens of German blood. Owing to press denunciations they are entitled to a hearing, and therefore it is incumbent upon some one familiar with their sentiments and aspirations to interpret these sentiments for the information of this House and the country. I shall not discuss the war, either as to its causes or the merits of the contentions of either party, but confine myself strictly to American or home issues which now confront us in consequence of the stupendous struggle. Because of their sympathies with the fatherland, the Americans of German descent have been openly accused of divided allegiance and downright disloyalty. They know this wanton insult to emanate from English and French press agents, and consequently treat it with the contempt it deserves. But what they resent is that, in the face of our own history, the American press should have opened its columns to such calumnies. Germans have fought and bled on the battle fields of four American wars and furnished a larger proportion to the fighting strength of our country than any other of the so-called foreign elements. In the Revolutionary War, with Baron Steuben they espoused the cause of the Colonies, and the implicit confidence which the Father of our Country placed in their loyalty is a matter of history. In 1861, when many of the English, with instinctive aversion to American naturalization, took out British protection papers, the Germans—that is, nearly 200,000 of them—rallied around the flag of Abraham Lincoln to save the Union. They displayed the same valor in the War of 1812 and in the Spanish-American War, and their loyalty to the flag in times of war is equaled only by their loyalty to American ideals in times of peace. [Applause.] I should have much preferred if just at this time these historical truths had been uttered by other than a German-American tongue; but while our pro-English press is ignoring them, Americans of German blood should at least have expected immunity from libels and insults. Yet such insults are heaped upon that element by newspapers permitting agents of the allies to use their space for that purpose. We can best judge the future by the past, and the lessons of the past justify me in proclaiming it as an irrefutable fact that if unfortunately the United States should ever again be embroiled in war, which the Heavens forbid, the Germans of this country would again as loyally rally around the Stars and Stripes as they did against our enemies in every crisis of the past. [Applause.] Let me again assert in most positive terms what I said on the floor the other day, that the Germans are for America against England, for America against Germany, for America against the world! They will never waver for one second in their allegiance to the land of their choice and adoption. [Applause.]

These few words will suffice, I trust, to lay bare the charge above referred to in its whole naked infamy. But let me proceed with my argument. If sympathy for Germany is an evidence of disloyalty, as is claimed by our traducers, you will agree that sympathy for the allies is exactly the same thing; and if that be true, we would be confronted with the monstrous fact that the whole American press printed in English, with but few exceptions, is disloyal to the United States. It is absurd, of course, but I make this deduction merely to show that I am not a less patriotic American by sympathizing with the fatherland and its ally than I would be if my sympathies were for England and her allies; and certainly no true American will claim that to side with England and to oppose Germany is a prerequisite of loyal American citizenship, for that would mean both truckling to a former enemy and the betrayal of a traditional friend, a course absolutely unjustifiable by any standard of American loyalty.

There is no question, Mr. Chairman, but what at the present time the Germans of this country are stirred as they were never stirred before. Their state of mind manifests itself in great mass meetings and in hundreds of thousands of petitions addressed to Congress in favor of an embargo on arms. It would not be quite correct, however, to ascribe the prevailing excitement solely to sympathy for Germany. In reality it is as much, if not more, injured pride and an outraged sense of justice which have caused their indignation to rise because of the outrageous prevarications of truth and the cruel misrepresentations of Germany, her people, and institutions contained in the manufactured news from England and reprinted in the American newspapers. Proud of their American citizenship, they have in a political sense absolutely nothing in common with Germany or its government, but their more or less accurate knowledge of conditions in that country taught them that the alleged news we were getting was a brutal attempt at defamation to poison the American mind against Germany. The war was started with a monstrous lie, and in order to support it a thousand other lies had to be told. The Germans were denounced as Huns and barbarians, as ravishers and plunderers, and as perpetrators of the worst imaginable atrocities. The Emperor was described as an Attila, who on one day had had 110 Socialist deputies executed; the Crown Prince as a thief, and so forth. You might say that it is natural for enemies to revile each other, but I must answer that, so far as Germany is concerned, she herself, though obliged to fight the lie as one of the worst of her many enemies, has not yet stooped to a departure from the truth either in her own newspapers or in the messages she has sent out to the world. And permit me to add parenthetically that to the neutral world the present struggle has an enhanced significance in that it is also a warfare of falsehood against the truth. If the international lie should succeed, I believe the world would eventually suffocate in its slime.

The Germans of this country could understand why England to secure recruits should want to incite her own people by these falsehoods, but they could not understand nor will they forgive the American newspapers for reprinting them in our country. To do so was a most serious and an unpardonable reflection on the German element of this country. As an integral part of the American people, whose characteristics and virtues are reflected as much in the composite character of this Nation as are those of the citizens of English descent, they believed themselves to be entitled to some consideration at the hands of the press of their own country. Such consideration was denied them, however, and with utter disregard of their feelings they were rudely informed that their brothers on the other side of the ocean are barbarians, ghouls, and vandals, and that is not all. From the first day of the war up to the present whatever the allies did was all right, while every act of the Germans was all wrong, even if it was an exactly similar thing; for instance, the dropping of explosives from aeroplanes. The alleged violation of Belgian neutrality was harped upon with sickening persistence even after it had been ascertained that the neutrality treaty had expired in 1872, and that, if it had still been in force, the Belgian Government had itself thrown it overboard by its secret agreement with England regarding the landing of English troops on Belgian soil. On the other hand, not a word is said about the violation of Chinese neutrality by Japanese and English troops, although this matter is of infinitely greater consequence to American interests than the affairs of Belgium can possibly be. The present international status of China is due to the skill of American statesmanship, it being an achievement of John Hay, made possible by the support of Germany alone. The integrity of China, already violated by England and her ally, should be restored and maintained at all hazards, but we look in vain for any appeals in the press in favor of the conservation of American interests in that quarter. It might embarrass England, you know, if just now the press insisted on our own rights. As to Belgian atrocities, five American newspaper men of the highest standing affirmed under oath that there was no such thing, yet these alleged atrocities are presented to American readers in glaring headlines, while the authentic refutation of the stories is published in small type on the sixteenth or seventeenth page. We may be foolish, but we are not blind to such notorious evidences of partiality. The Americans of German blood are a unit in bitterly resenting not only these unneutral efforts to poison the fountainheads of American public opinion against Germany but also the palpably unneutral "most-favored-nation" treatment systematically accorded to Great Britain. Touching the last-named fact, it seems to them as if we were using kid gloves against England and the mailed fist against Germany, as if, indeed, everything was being avoided, even to the disregard of American interests, that might embarrass the former country in her effort to crush Germany.

The bill of complaints is too long to recite here in full, but let me merely ask: Have we protested against American citizens having been dragged from neutral steamers and thrown into English prisons simply because those men, Americans to the manner born, happened to bear German names? No. Have we protested against England's inhuman policy to starve to death the noncombatant population of Germany by stopping, in open violation of international law, all food supplies, even if carried from a neutral country and in neutral bottoms? No. Have we protested against England declaring the whole North Sea as a war zone? No; but when Germany did the same thing in practically the same language we immediately dispatched a stiff note to Berlin, while the milder one was directed to England, though it would seem that the latter country was the chief offender in allowing the use of false flags. However, whatever the administration does in foreign affairs, as Americans it will be our duty to uphold it.

After this explanation can you understand, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, why the German mind in this country is agitated, and can you blame that element if their feelings are ruffled? When, moreover, it dawned upon them that all our arms factories were running night and day to supply the allies with weapons for use against their brothers and kinsmen, nothing could convince them that the United States was not actually a silent partner of the allies. Then it was that they demanded, and they are still demanding an embargo on arms to enforce honest neutrality, the kind of neutrality which the President proclaimed when he said: "We should be neutral in fact as well as in name, and should put a curb on every transaction which might be construed as giving a preference to one party to the struggle above another." This shameful traffic in arms, they argue, gives the lie to our prayers for peace, because it tends to prolong the war, and its permission by international law, they believe, imposes no obligation on our citizens to carry it on, no more on us than on the other neutral countries which have all stopped it upon the demand of England herself. I should like to discuss this important question at length, if my time permitted, but let me say just one more word. Whether the President would use the authority or not, there ought to be a law on our statute books which confers such authority upon him in order that he might enforce his demands for a free and open sea and unrestricted commerce in noncontraband goods. In our present demands against England our only alternative is to either give in or declare war. The threat of an embargo on arms, however, would quickly bring the "Mistress of the Seas" to terms and without war. Hence the legislation demanded by what the pro-English press is pleased to call German mass meetings, will be a preventive of, rather than a provocation to, war with England, and thus falls to the ground another of the silly charges preferred by the press bureau of the allies against me and the several millions of American citizens who think as I do on this subject.

Continuing as an interpreter of the feelings of these millions, all good American citizens, permit me to say that the hostility of the Anglo-American press against Germany and the Germans has forced many to a conclusion which, if correct, would be the most painful disappointment of my life. They believe this attitude to be less pro-English than anti-German, and, indeed, regard it as the outgrowth of racial prejudice against the Germans even of this country, and as a revival of the old know-nothing spirit which aimed at a sort of guardianship by those of English descent over this country, to the exclusion of all other elements, the latter to be classed simply as "foreigners," and degraded to the rank of second-class citizens. How could such a conclusion be reached? Well, they ask whether the history of the American Germans has not been an honorable one. They fought for independence, opposed slavery, and loyally gave their bodies and lives that the Union might live; they were almost a unit for sound money, and are imbued with the true American spirit of freedom to such an extent that they love liberty better than whatever good might come from its restriction. As a rule, they modestly refrained from seeking political preferment, but filled America's life with music and song and innocent social pleasures. They are peaceful and law-abiding citizens, who by industry and thrift have made the best of the opportunities which the country of their choice generously offered them, and thus they have contributed their honest share to the growth, the development, and the grandeur of the Republic. [Applause.] If such a record of good citizenship is not sufficient, it is argued, to insure the German element immunity from libels and insults, what else can account for it but racial aversion, the innate prejudice of the Anglo-Saxon against everything foreign?

Another argument: Why, it is asked, with intense seriousness, do American newspapers repeat and accept at par all the pretexts which England hurriedly invented for waging war against Germany, such as "The small States must be protected," "German militarism must be crushed," and so forth? Should not an American, free, neutral, and independent, form his own judgment rather than blindly accept the logic of a belligerent? Does not the proverbial American sense of justice and fair play require us to impartially hear both sides before we render our verdict? Every schoolboy knows the kind of protection England has afforded to smaller States. It is the kind which the spider gives to the fly. And then German militarism! As pacifists we can condemn it along with Russian, French, and English militarism, but of these the German military system is the least objectionable, because, never having been used for a war of conquest, it has been nothing more than a bulwark of national defense, of which every young man of military age feels it a duty and an honor to be a part.

For hundreds of years German soil has been the battle ground of all great European wars, and the poor people of that country suffered as the Belgians, the Russian Jews, and others suffer to-day, only that nobody sympathized with them. Finally they united for self-defense and self-preservation, and out of the smoke and fire of the Franco-German War emerged, as a realization of their fervent hopes and earlier dreams, the United States of Germany. But for the more lasting enjoyment of the blessings of peace the new German Empire combined with Austria-Hungary and Italy, the three forming the Triple Alliance for mutual protection and defence. In spite of her much-decried militarism Germany has kept the peace for 45 years, and she would to-day enjoy the fruits of her peaceful development and consequent prosperity if it had not been for the combined lust of conquest, lust of revenge, and jealousy of the three powers which are now trying to crush her. This is the story of German militarism. But, say my friends, when we relate this story we are cried down and given to understand that our very knowledge of these details is treason, because it shows that we pay attention to other than American interests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we must admit that Germany is not getting a square deal from us, that she is to be condemned, right or wrong. The reasons are a psychological riddle, which has distressed me more than anything I ever experienced in my life, the more so because Germany has been our consistent and faithful friend from the beginning of our history. Carl Schurz, as long as 60 years ago, wrote to his friend Kinkel:

> It is my belief that the future interests of America and Germany are closely interwoven. However different the two nations may be in character, they will have the same opponents, and that will compel them to have a corresponding foreign policy. America's influence in Europe will be based on Germany, and Germany's world position will depend essentially on the success of America. Germany is the only power in Europe whose interests will not conflict with those of America, and America is the only power in the civilized world that would not be jealous of a strong united Germany. They can both grow without being rivals, and it will be to the interest of each to keep the adversaries of the other in check.

When this was written, in 1855, Japan was not yet a world power, England had not yet tried to help break up the Union, and Germany had not yet had the opportunity to befriend us as signally as she did during the Civil War. Hence, if this was true 60 years ago, it is even more so to-day. And in this connection let me again quote Carl Schurz. In 1903 Pomeroy Burton had asked him about the possibility of a war with Germany, and this was his answer:

> A war between the United States and Germany would be so awful, so incalculable a calamity, that only the most absolute and evident necessity could serve as an excuse for it. Not even the wildest jingo on either side will pretend that such a necessity exists or is in prospect. In fact, there is no real question of difference between the two countries important enough to disturb their ancient friendship. A war between them would, therefore, not only be criminal, but idiotic—an absurd atrocity, a murderous nonsense. Even to suggest the possibility of such a war under such circumstances and to agitate the public mind by such suggestions is a piece of mischievous recklessness.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, before I digressed I was discussing the opinions of those who are inclined to ascribe the cause of the anti-German feeling in our country to racial prejudice. The counter-feeling ran high, as we all know, but I concluded that, even if there were some truth in that supposition, it must not be countenanced. If others wished to act in an un-American spirit, let them do so; the Germans, at least, should remain squarely on American ground and totally ignore every display of narrowness which, detestable in itself, would create a schism in this country and, if allowed to grow, eventually rend it asunder. There should never be a division in the United States upon racial or national lines. Russia, by using Servia as a tool, has sown the seed of discord between the different races in Austria-Hungary, and we see what it has led to. Under the American sun, in their capacity as citizens, the Teuton and the Slav, the Irishman and the Englishman, the German and the Frenchman extend to each other the hand of brotherhood as equals, and the great flag covers them all. [Applause.] Ancient prejudices have melted away under the sun of freedom until, no longer English, Irish, German, Scandinavian, we are, one and all, heart and soul, Americans! [Applause.]

I believe this to be the true sentiment of all citizens of German blood; and in justice to them it should be said further that in the present crisis they would not have been heard from but for the provocation caused by the outspoken unneutral attitude of the pro-English press and the sales exclusively to Germany's enemies of arms and ammunition. It was easy to direct the movement started by them into loyal American channels, and that, Mr. Chairman, was the purpose of the conference recently held here in Washington. It was a most remarkable gathering. Although Americans of German blood largely predominated, it was not a pro-German, but decidedly a pro-American, meeting, as it was intended to be. Those present were distinguished representatives; in most cases the heads of the great church and civic organizations of all parts of the country; and probably for the first time in our history Republicans and Democrats, Jews and Gentiles, Catholics, Protestants, and Free Thinkers shook hands for a common purpose, and that purpose was to call for an enforcement, in accordance with the spirit of American patriotism, of every American right against all belligerents alike, and to insist on the observance of strict and genuine neutrality as defined by all American Presidents from George Washington to Woodrow Wilson. As plainly indicated by its complexion, the gathering was strictly nonpartisan; and that, too, will be the character of the national organization to be effected as a result of that historic conference. After many hours of earnest deliberation, during which all the speakers displayed a most admirable feeling of restraint, as well as of solemn responsibility, a "declaration of principles," formulated by the platform committee, was adopted by a unanimous vote, and I leave it to the House to say whether this declaration rings true or not. Here it is:

> Whereas the spirit of absolute neutrality toward foreign nations at war with one another is a basic tradition of the American people; and
> Whereas the course of recent events has made it evident that this cherished attitude has been endangered through a foreign control of our news service and of our communication by sea; and
> Whereas our commerce and our citizens have been compelled to endure violation of the principles of international law; and
> Whereas the ships of our country in common with those of other neutral nations, having on board the property of citizens of the United States, have been arrested on the high seas by a belligerent power, conveyed into its port and there subjected to a process of search involving delays and losses; and
> Whereas citizens of the United States and of nations friendly to us have forcibly been taken off our ships in defiance of the protection accorded them by the American flag and put into prison or detention camps; and
> Whereas articles hitherto considered absolutely free in international traffic have been arbitrarily made contraband; and
> Whereas the rules of international law governing neutral commerce have been altered or disregarded in the special interest of one set of belligerents to the manifest injury of the United States as an independent Nation with rights to be respected and with citizens to protect; and
> Whereas the shipment of arms, ammunition, and munitions of war under conditions now prevailing is unfair, unneutral, and in violation of America's ethical ideas, tends to prolong the war, and is irreconcilable with our prayers for peace; and

Whereas this condition of affairs is intolerable to all American citizens who believe in the principles of neutrality, fairness, and friendship applied to all nations alike, and in the noble mission of this country as a promoter of peace and a champion of justice and humanity: Therefore, in order to reestablish genuine American neutrality and to uphold it free from commercial, financial, and political subservience to foreign powers, be it

Resolved, That we, citizens of the United States, agree to effect a national organization the objects and purposes of which may be stated as follows:

1. In order to assure the possession of an independent news service, we favor an American cable controlled by the Government of the United States

2. We demand a free and open sea for the commerce of the United States and unrestricted traffic in noncontraband goods as defined by international law.

3. We favor as a strictly American policy the immediate enactment of legislation prohibiting the export of arms, ammunition, and munitions of war.

4. We favor the establishment of an American merchant marine.

5. We pledge ourselves individually and collectively to support only such candidates for public office, irrespective of party, who will place American interests above those of any other country, and who will aid in eliminating all undue foreign influences from American life.

Mr. Chairman, this declaration hardly needs an explanation at my hands. That it is a truly American platform, and one on which all good and loyal citizens can stand, will be admitted by all whose judgment is not blinded by prejudice and partiality. Yet the pro-English newspapers, especially those of New York, denounced it in unmeasured terms. With blind fury they rushed to the defense of British interests, against these so-called hyphenated Americans, foreigners, and traitors who have the temerity to assert American rights at such an inconvenient time. The climax was reached by one of the great metropolitan dailies deliberately reversing the position which the conference took with regard to American and foreign interests. I can not resist the temptation to nail this instructive evidence of jugglery to the masthead. As we have seen, the last plank of the platform reads:

We pledge ourselves * * * to support only such candidates for public office, irrespective of party, who will place American interests above those of any other country.

But the newspaper just mentioned puts it this way editorially:

When the representatives of German-American societies publicly pledge themselves in effect to oppose all candidates for office who will not sacrifice American interests to German interests they are straining American patience to the breaking point.

This is the kind of journalism, Mr. Chairman, that we protest against from the standpoint of simple honesty. It is but a sample of the newspaper war which is being waged against Germany, too. Most of the comments might just as well have been written in London. The injustice of it all is solely responsible for whatever bitterness and indignation there may exist among those who believe in a square deal for Germany. American citizens of German blood simply refuse to accept the judgment of the English censor on the country of their fathers, because they know better; and when that judgment is presented to them by the newspapers of their own country, they protest because it does violence to the truth; and he would be a poor American, indeed, who would not stand up for right and truth rather than falsehood and wrong. As between the two he can not afford to be neutral. In order to guard against misrepresentations of our country, if ever we should be at outs with the country that now controls the news service of the world, an independent American cable, to be owned and controlled by the Government, is demanded as the first plank of the platform referred to. The other planks speak for themselves.

In conclusion let me reiterate the steadfast devotion of all citizens of German blood to American ideals and the flag. Impatient of injustice though they be, their hearts are true to the core. They feel themselves as one with every other citizen of the Republic, and, right or wrong, they will share the fate of their adopted country and of their children's fatherland. Whatever their secondary sympathies may be, they are with all other true Americans for America first, last, and all the time. [Applause.] They are for a united Nation, and shall ever uphold the ideal of national unity and dignity with that loyalty which has characterized their whole history on American soil.

I thank you for your patience and attention. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman from Missouri consume?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] for half a minute.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by Mr. Charles S. Hamlin, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, before the Chicago real estate board on February 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the speech referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I expect to talk about war conditions for a few minutes, but it is certainly not my purpose to refer to that extraordinary, unparalleled horror in Europe. I believe that in His generosity the Lord has provided soil enough and conditions good enough for all of the people in the world to find a place in the sun, and, so far as my feeble abilities enable me to contribute to the bringing of that about, I propose to do so. I mean to speak a word about purely American matters. I shall refer to conditions in that part of the world which more directly concerns us. I do not believe that the Lord has commissioned us to administer the affairs of the Spanish-American countries about which I shall speak, but He has made them our neighbors, and what they do and how they do it does concern us. There exists to-day a most unfortunate state of affairs in the neighboring Republic of Mexico. For four years or more a carnival of crime has gone on in that country. It has become a huge international scandal. It is a political sore which, if not healed, may infect both the South and North American Continents.

In that country, where patriotic movements are always violent, there are large numbers who protest their love of the constitution, a document to which their devotion is shown in some very peculiar ways. One band of—well, I will say one army after another, in order to speak in diplomatic language—has gone about the great area embraced in that Republic and done deeds which the conscience of no good man can approve. It has made a condition on the frontier which is dangerous, a condition which I am afraid may precipitate us into war at any time. I am submitting a plan which I believe will clear that situation up.

The President declared in his Indianapolis speech, and I perfectly agree with him in the statement, that it is none of our business how they—the Mexicans—go about their business or how long they take in determining it. That is true within limitations, and provided they do not trespass upon our rights and make conditions which will render war between us and them inevitable, and which I certainly hope will be avoided. The President also said it is none of our business how they go about their business. That raises another question, and I regret to say I can not agree with the President of the United States in that respect.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is a perfectly simple and easy matter to avoid any conflict at arms with Mexico or with any other part of the Spanish-American peoples. I believe that if we make concessions of a reasonable sort, that if we meet them in the right spirit, if we freely recognize the absolute equality of sovereignty, the sovereignty of the big and the sovereignty of the little States, we may bring about conditions which will not only restore quiet to Mexico, but which will prevent a recurrence of such trouble, and it will certainly keep us out of any possibility of trouble with any people in that part of the world hereafter. And to that end, Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD an article which I prepared and which was published in the current issue of the American Journal of International Law. It suggests a Pan-American agreement which is as practical as it is pacific. Mr. Chairman, before I take my seat I want to say one word and pay one small tribute to the character of the people who were referred to so truthfully and so eloquently by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], who has just taken his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Can the gentleman from Virginia yield me another minute?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman asked for three minutes and I yielded him five.

Mr. COOPER. I will yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say just a word: I have the honor, and I am proud to be able to say it, of representing a large constituency commonly referred to as German-Americans. There is no more robustly American or patriotic people in this country than the constituency which I represent, and everything the gentleman from Missouri has said as to their thrift, their integrity, their enterprise, and their usefulness as citizens,

I cordially indorse. In those counties in my district which are referred to as German counties there are no delinquent taxpayers. The criminal court has no business to do when it meets. They are law-abiding, industrious, useful, and patriotic citizens, and I am glad to have the opportunity to say so in these days of excited and foolish talk. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the article referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

THE A B C MEDIATION.

[By JAMES L. SLAYDEN.]

"How to regulate social, political, and commercial intercourse between the people and Government of the United States and the peoples and Governments of the other Republics on the American Continent so as to establish and maintain perfect cordiality and mutual confidence and respect, is a problem which has never been satisfactorily solved.

"In considering this question, which is often to the front and sometimes discussed with acerbity, certain disagreeable facts must be faced. In the process of understanding it American vanity will be hurt, but that is no reason for avoiding the effort to do so. There is abundant reason for believing that Americans are not popular in Mexico and other Latin-American countries. It is not the purpose of the writer in this brief essay to undertake to show why this is so. Suffice it to say that the people of the United States are viewed with suspicion, and this doubt of them and their purposes has militated against the development of American trade in the southern Republics, and is a cause of irritation which ought to be cured. Diplomatic friendship has existed and does exist, but that is a relationship which can always be counted on until an open breach is imminent. Less than 30 days before the outbreak of the greatest war in all history there was an assumed—a diplomatic—cordiality between the monarchs of Russia, England, Germany, and Austria. There is no danger of a cataclysm in America such as is deluging Europe with blood; but that unparalleled disaster shows that something more than formal friendships, something far more than diplomatic amenities, is desirable in the intercourse of nations.

"The right relations are based in justice, in respect for the rights and views of other countries, and in forbearance. These are elemental international virtues that must be cultivated if cordial relations are to be maintained. They are the antidotes for the poison of doubt and suspicion.

"For four years Mexico has been cursed by one revolution after another, and conditions in that unhappy country have gone from bad to worse. There has been a vociferous demand for intervention by the United States. This demand has come from citizens of the United States residing or doing business in Mexico and from other sources. It has been assumed by these citizens and by some Governments that it is the duty and the right of the United States to interfere in Mexico to command the peace.

"Against great pressure two Presidents of the United States have declined to intervene, although Americans and Europeans, supposedly under the protection of our Government, have been plundered and murdered. The civilized world has looked to this country for relief from Mexican anarchy. The fact that no intervention has occurred—except in one instance and for the specific purpose of resenting an insult to the American flag—should convince the people of Spanish America that neither the people nor Government of the United States desire to meddle in the domestic affairs of other countries.

"Of course, there are circumstances under which intervention may become necessary. When treaty rights are not respected, or when the property of aliens is destroyed and their lives taken, their Governments may interpose even with armed forces. Under such conditions intervention would be justified in the custom of nations and approved by all civilized powers.

"Although apt to lead to it, intervention is sometimes undertaken to prevent war, and is justified as a restraint of wrongdoing and illegal or immoral acts.

"While these provocations have all no doubt existed, the United States, the big brother of the family of the American Republics, has so far refused to undertake the task of restoring order in Mexico.

"But is there not a better, a less expensive, and more effective way of extending protection to aliens in Mexico than armed intervention by a single power? The writer believes that there is, and two recent precedents may be cited. In one of these instances, the intervention in China in 1900, the plan was completely successful, and in the other it was partially so. In the Chinese intervention, made jointly by the United States and sundry European Governments, the issue was a happy one for everybody, even for China herself.

"But it is to the situation in Mexico and the effort at mediation proposed by the ambassadors from Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, that specific reference is now made with the hope of indicating its value as a means for the preservation of peace.

"And here it may be well to say that the Mexican situation presents a purely American question, and must be settled by the Governments of the American continent.

"Everyone would like to see Mexico herself quickly and completely settle her internal troubles and avoid all interference from any other country or association of countries. But what if she will not, or can not? Shall intervention be by the United States alone, which will mean war and a new crop of suspicion and hatred of the Anglo-Saxon, or shall it be in association with the orderly Spanish-American countries? In the latter case the futility of resistance will be apparent, and quick and peaceful solution will certainly follow.

"Unfortunately all the details of the work done at Niagara are not known to the general public, and a correct estimate of its importance is difficult. But enough is known to suggest that the precedent is likely to become of transcendent importance in the political future of the American continent.

"The 'A. B. C.' mediation has taken its place in history, and in the opinion of the writer will be fully justified in the future. Certainly it was not a failure, and the more it is studied the stronger becomes the impression that it begins a diplomatic epoch in the history of the Americas.

"In their communication to the Secretary of State of the United States tendering good offices, the three ambassadors said that they did so 'for the purpose of serving the interest of peace and civilization on our continent, and with the earnest desire to prevent any further bloodshed to the prejudice of the cordiality and union which have always surrounded the relations of the Governments and the peoples of America.'

"It was a noble purpose, opportunely undertaken, and while never dramatic was in an important way successful. A war between the United States and Mexico then seemed imminent, and none occurred. A condition which was fast bringing ruin to Mexico, as it had brought shame, was distinctly and promptly bettered, and for some time thereafter there was no 'further bloodshed' in that unhappy country.

"To many students of the Niagara mediation it appears to have two distinct features of value. It helped, though possibly in a minor way, to bring the belligerents in Mexico into communication with one another, and it certainly made them realize that other countries were not indifferent to conditions in that Republic. It made them understand that chaos and bloodshed would not be permitted to go on forever. It compelled the Mexicans to realize that if they are to keep their sovereignty they must behave as a sovereign should, and not maintain an international nuisance. It forced them to think, and there was no more important fighting between the insurgents and the Huerta administration after the mediators met. Occasional minor conflicts between the followers of irresponsible guerilla chiefs and the military are not chargeable to Huerta or Carranza, and they may still be expected, for banditry of long standing is never ended in a day. Indians who have tasted the free, wild life of the camp, the companionship of a horse and a rifle, and an opportunity for loot and vengeance do not willingly or immediately go back to herding sheep or digging in mines.

"The second and by far the greatest value of the Niagara conference is the precedent it made. It points the way to the settlement of similar troubles in the future. It may, I think, be regarded as the beginning of a Pan American policy for the quieting of internal troubles and international disputes between the Republics on this continent.

"The proof it gave to the suspicious and doubtful citizens of the 20 Spanish and Portuguese speaking Republics that the people and Government of the United States contemplate no assault on their sovereignty and territory sufficed in itself to lift the mediation out of the class of failures. It did not accomplish all that some people believed it would or all that some of us hoped it might; but, in spite of the jeers of unsympathetic newspaper wits and the scorn of militarists, it did enough to establish a policy. Hereafter when any American country gives itself over to anarchy, those governments that prefer order to disorder, following the precedent of the 'A. B. C.' mediation, can jointly intervene to command the peace. If necessary to enforce this command, the military arm of all or a majority of the peaceable countries of America may be employed for that purpose. Under these joint operations no great financial burden will be put on any one peacemaker, and, better still, there can be no suspicion of motives, no apprehension of a loss of territory.

"That the people of Mexico, Central, and South America have entertained feelings of hostility toward this country, and a suspicion of its political purposes, is well known to observant travelers in those countries. The Mexican War of 1846, the exercise of overlordship in Santo Domingo and Haiti, 'dollar diplomacy' in Nicaragua and elsewhere, are all pointed to as reasons for this suspicion. The talk of some Americans of 'manifest destiny,' with its echo in the press, and the suggestion that the United States must, because of its ownership of the Panama Canal, control all territory down to the Isthmus, have not tended to remove that suspicion. South and Central Americans quite naturally say that the same reasoning applies to the territory south of the canal, and is equally valid.

"Such talk and the suspicion it has created have unquestionably interfered with the development of American trade in all Spanish America. It is human nature not to be inclined to favor, in trade or otherwise, people whose purposes are thought to be unfriendly. This feeling was perceptibly allayed by the proceedings at Niagara, and that, with the valuable precedent established, are distinct gains from the 'A. B. C.' mediation. Overlordship, so offensive to these Central and South Americans, was inferentially disclaimed, and the President and the Secretary of State made it perfectly clear that all this Government wants of its continental neighbors is friendship and mutual trade opportunities.

"The great and epoch-making speech of Mr. Wilson at Mobile cleared the atmosphere and made the mediation possible. That was a great and statesmanlike speech; but alone it was not sufficient to remove hurtful doubt and suspicion. It needed the persistent and sincere efforts of the Secretary of State, whose work for peace has given him an eminent and enviable place in history, and the prompt and hearty agreement to the mediation proposal to accomplish that.

"The way is now open for the future settlement of these revolutionary disturbances, the frequency and character of which have been a disgrace to the republican system of government. Why shall we not make the work begun at Niagara a permanent Pan American policy? Something like it worked very well in China at the time of the Boxer movement. There was no seizure of territory after the joint movement to Pekin. But who can doubt that if the task of rescuing the legations had been left to any one of the great powers of Europe or to Japan China would have paid for it with a big slice of her territory?

"In the opinion of many earnest advocates of peace who feel a profound interest in all the American Governments this plan, if mutually agreed upon and carried into effect, would go far to remove this continent from the theater of possible war and would be a long step toward universal peace. It would put an end to the persistent clamor for armed intervention in Mexico by the United States. It would take the sting out of intervention and more quickly and effectively accomplish all that could be expected from the most successful interference with arms by any one country. It would give a sense of relief and territorial security to the smaller Latin-American countries, and, as all the larger and more powerful Governments declare themselves supporters of the policy of peace and justice, it is hard to see how they could object to it.

"It is in line with the peace plan of Mr. Secretary Bryan and keeps step with the doctrine of The Hague—the doctrine of arbitration, which in theory all good men indorse. A Pan American policy of mediation and arbitration whenever disturbances shall unfortunately occur ought to convert what has been until recently one of the most turbulent sections of the earth into a region of peace and prosperity.

"There is one distinct and mutual benefit to be shared by all the Governments of the American continent sure to follow the establishment of sincerely cordial relations between them. It will strengthen them for resistance in the event of an assault on the sovereignty or territory of any of them by any or all the powers waved off by President Monroe in 1823. That will amount to an understanding for mutual defense among 175,000,000 people on one continent flanked on all sides by the world's greatest oceans."

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Virginia occupy some more time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman from Wisconsin can consume some time now.

Mr. COOPER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY].

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have so recently returned from the Far East, traveling extensively in Japan, Korea, Manchuria, and China, traversing the extent of Russia from one extreme of Siberia to the other, crossing on the great Trans-Siberian Railroad, the longest railroad in the world, that in view of the utterances which have been made upon the floor of this House so recently with regard to the peoples of the Far East I am constrained to make some observations at this time, not in a controversial way, but for the purpose of broadening the perspective of our vision with respect to oriental affairs. These are momentous times. After the cataclysm and seismic convulsions of the warring world shall cease this country of ours is likely to be called upon to take an important part in the rehabilitation and rearrangement of world affairs. We shall need a clear vision, a firm hand, a sympathetic heart, and a temperate tone in order that we may meet that responsibility; and I deprecate any utterance or act which in these sensitive days shall add to the burdens of the President or tighten the tension of our international relations. We should consider the countries of the Far East, their relation to each other and to us, with a calm mind and freed from the prejudices which careless newspaper headlines and unwarranted newspaper utterances are calculated to create, swaying the judgment and stirring the emotions of our people. I feel that at this most critical time in the world's history, when feelings are keyed to highest pitch, when every international relation or activity is incased in tinder ready for the match, that the people and this high legislative body should stand with the President and with the Secretary of State, supporting them in their efforts to keep us off the reefs of war as they are forced to meet the delicate international situations which crowd thick and fast upon them.

I am constrained to believe that every Representative in Congress should carefully avoid any act or utterance calculated to disturb the equipoise of neutrality which we seek to maintain or which is likely to interfere with the solution of the grave problems which face the President and his Cabinet. I am surprised that anyone should carry the firebrand of war in these inflammable days. After this war in Europe, what? It would be a bold man who would now attempt to grasp the future to give an answer. We may assume, however, that the peoples of Europe will be depleted in men and money and that there is likely to be a change of influence, a change of emphasis, when Europe is weakened by war and her progress retarded by at least 50 years.

It may be that the weight of influence shall slip away from Europe, passing beyond the Ural Mountains and find lodgment among the peoples of Asia. Out of this war Russia, with her great resources, is likely to emerge the least harmed of any European power actively engaged in it. Russia territorially is largely Asiatic; ethnologically, she is allied in large measure with the Orient. Russia, slow-moving, ponderous Russia, that has been notching up in all these centuries until she now occupies one-sixth of the land area of the world with 8,417,000 square miles of territory; Russia, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Arctic almost to the Indian Ocean; Russia, with a population of 185,000,000 people; Russia, with a railroad extending 6,000 miles across the Continents of Asia and of Europe; Russia, that can put under arms from twenty-two to thirty millions of men; Russia is a factor in the future development of the world. Russia will pour her commercial activities into the Pacific.

It were interesting to recall that it was Kiaochow, and not Port Arthur, which was Russia's first love. It was almost within her grasp. Under the secret convention known as the Cassini convention, China had leased Kiaochow to Russia; with it went the concession to build the Trans-Siberian Railroad through Manchuria; accompanying it there was an undoubted purpose to build the Kalgan Railroad from Lake Baikal to Peking. A straight line would take this railroad to Kiaochow, thus giving Russia her long-desired open port to the Pacific.

It was about this time that Li Hung Chang made his celebrated trip around the world; he came to Berlin, and Germany became aware of Russia's purpose. The murder of two Lutheran missionaries on the Shantung Peninsula furnished the pretext. Germany seized Kiaochow, and Russia swallowed her chagrin and took Port Arthur as a consolation. This crowded her against Japan. The result is well known. To-day Russia and Japan find themselves in accord, and where Kiaochow may ultimately land is beyond the ken of any who are content to deal with facts. Certain it is there are evidences of renewed activity in railroad construction in the vicinity of Kalgan.

I must not take the time of this committee to speak more particularly of the marvelous transformation and growth of Russia since the Japanese War, of her great commercial activity, of her railroad development. The Trans-Siberian Railroad, double tracked nearly its entire distance, is now equipped with all modern improvements. Russia now is unified, enthusiastic, and prepared.

Nor may I take the time to suggest her purpose of reaching the Indian Ocean, from which she is separated by a few hundred miles, of immeasurably more advantage to her than is usually considered. A railroad through Persia would be easily constructed.

We speak of Japan in the diminutive. We speak of her as "little Japan," and yet by the way of comparison let me call your attention to the fact that in area and population Japan is larger than the islands of Great Britain and Ireland, larger than France, almost equaling Germany. She has a population of 50,000,000 people, almost that of our own Nation shortly prior to the Civil War. Japan little? Why, when the northern portions of Europe were peopled with barbaric hordes and when Assyria was a world power, shortly after the 10 tribes of Israel were carried away into captivity, Japan put upon herself the habiliments of a mighty nation. Her present monarch can boast an unbroken line of royal ancestry longer than that of any other monarch in all the world. Japan with her splendid universities; Japan that has made marvelous strides in scientific attainment, whose bacteriological research lags behind no nation; Japan spoken of as "little Japan!"

We are confronted by the words "yellow peril." Sometimes I think the American people like generalizations. They are the creators of phrases. Within the term "yellow peril" we have bound up a great deal of misconception. Sometimes I think it has approached almost to the element of hatred, and out of this misconception two things arise—first, a belief that there is irresistibly to come a conflict between the yellow and the white races. That conception, it seems to me, had its ignoble birth in the day when monarchs were entirely supreme and when democracy had little part and power. It was when great monarchs yearned for other countries to conquer and had preempted all the earth for the white people, leaving neither hope, part, or place in this great world for any other.

The Japanese and Chinese are here. They exist. Japan has already entered into the society of nations. China will soon follow. Napoleon's expression, with which every schoolboy is familiar, "China is a sleeping giant; let her sleep," is no longer true. The world is dealing with an awakened giant. The question therefore comes to us, What shall be our attitude toward these Asiatic peoples? Shall we irritate them or shall we, as is worthy of a great Nation, give them the consideration which our high position permits and demands?

I am forced to say that for some years there has existed—the source of which I am not at liberty to reveal—a continued effort to create and foster ill will and misunderstanding between the United States and Japan. The newspapers of both countries publish many misleading dispatches. It was only recently that in one of the Tokyo papers there was published a dispatch, purporting to emanate from an American source, in which one of our admirals was quoted as stating that America was about to send a fleet across the seas to make an attack on Japan. What bosh, you say, and yet you are reading in some of your own papers statements of Japan's purposes equally unwarranted and unreliable. When the distinguished minority leader on this side of the House not very many weeks ago made some general utterances not at all antagonistic to the Asiatic people they were telegraphed to Japan, not in the language of his speech, but in language calculated to arouse resentment. There are marvelous misstatements sought to be placed before both peoples. And I rebel against them, because I have had the opportunity of visiting Japan and I believe I know their attitude as I know our own.

Will you let me tell you just one personal incident? It is illustrative of the Japanese. It does not belong in the realm of debate, but it is characteristic. I was invited to address the members of the Imperial Parliament of Japan a few months ago. On my visit to the Parliament House I was ushered into the hall of their representatives and seated in the gallery facing the speaker. The assembly was in a hall nearly as large as this. I listened to the tumult of their debate over the hotly contested naval budget. In the midst of the debate an old gentleman arose and took the rostrum and was escorted to the chair in order that he might speak. He was exceedingly lame, an old man 76 years of age, and as he came before that turbulent audience he raised his hand and stilled it. Then a smile came over the old man's face and he spoke a few words and it brought a ripple of laughter over here and a few more words and a ripple of laughter over here, and a few more words and there was laughter all over the hall. Then I saw that he had captured his audience of legislators. The smile faded away and in the place of the smile the tense lines came, and, with the most impassioned utterance that it seemed to me I have ever listened to—although I could not understand the words; I felt them—he urged, from what I afterwards learned to be the fact, the development of his country along the lines that seemed to be necessary to him. And he swayed that audience. That was my introduction to the grand old man of Japan, Count Okuma, a quotation from whom was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD yesterday by a gentleman of this House, and I shall refer to it in a moment.

I thought of him and his history. I thought of him as a little Samurai boy, with two swords, one carried on one side and one on the other, one to preserve his country's honor in case it was attacked and the other to take his own life, according to the Japanese standard in case his own honor was invaded. Such a boy was he when Perry knocked at the door of Japan, and I thought of him as the progressive man of Japan who had toiled for the intellectual and commercial development of his country until it has become a marvelous people and a marvelous nation, imbuing it with the idealism of a great purpose. Then I thought of a few years ago how a would-be assassin had thrown a bomb at him and despoiled him of a limb and nearly caused Japan the loss of his splendid services. I thought of his wonderful sense of humor and the grim pathos of his life, and, do you know, my mind insisted upon jumping across the Pacific to my own home land, and I thought of one who likewise had that saving grace of humor, a man who sought his country's welfare, a man loved by the people of this country, and whose name will ever be revered as long as American life shall continue to exist, a man whom the assassin's bullet despoiled us of, and I could not help turning to the Japanese gentleman next to me and saying, "Do you know that your Count Okuma at the present time reminds me in some respects of our own Abraham Lincoln?" And the next day the Japanese newspapers from one end of the land to the other carried that utterance. Why? Because they were pleased that the name of one of their great statesmen should be coupled in compliment with the name of one whom they revere above almost every other man in American history. [Applause.]

I would like to put in the RECORD now the utterance of Count Okuma, made just a few years ago and at a time when there was considerable agitation in our country and in Japan concerning the California situation. I shall not speak at all in a controversial way concerning that situation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. AINEY. Can the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] indulge me with a little more time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman five minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. AINEY. I thank the gentleman. Count Okuma gathered together some of the great legislators, some of the great statesmen, some of the people in Japan interested in the world's affairs, and what was his utterance and advice to them? That of belligerency? That of war. That of a desire to invade this country in any way or involve us in any difficulty? Not at all. This was Count Okuma's utterance:

> We can not solve this question by diplomacy. We can not solve it by arbitration. We can not solve it by war. We can not solve it by talk of war; that is the worst of all. We must appeal to the great Christian Nation to put in practice the principles for which it stands—the brotherhood of man; and out of this, in the process of time, if we will but content ourselves, the American people will, I am sure, find a solution. [Applause.]

That was Count Okuma's utterance. But there are many people who seek to get away from such pacific statements made by responsible men of Japan and accept the irresponsible ones of jingoes who exist on either side of the Pacific. They say, "Oh, Japan wants to send her surplus population over here."

Will you permit me to call your attention to the fact that there is the great island of Formosa, the settlement and solution of which can only be made by Japan sending her surplus population to promote them. She is now in Korea, and if you had traveled in Korea as I have recently you would see how much depends on Japan sending her surplus population there. And then if you would go to Manchuria and the neighboring provinces you would see the demand there for Japan's surplus population, and if you go to the northern islands you will see the opportunity there for Japan's surplus population; Japan has a program.

But let me say before I close that Japan's future program is not so much with respect to America as it is with respect to the great country of China, with her 400,000,000 of people, differing materially in thought and purpose from Japan. I shall not seek to differentiate or take sides, except to call your attention to this, that outside of America I believe there is no more patriotic people in the world than the people of Japan, and in China they have not emphasized that national unity of thought and purpose. If you traveled in China now you would find along the zones of the railroads, which represent foreign concessions, a line of English soldiers, a line of German soldiers, a line of Belgian soldiers, a line of French soldiers, and a line of Russian soldiers, each of them having control of portions of China. If we were confronted in Mexico with a population of 400,000,000 of people, would America think that we had a problem down there? And yet Japan, with the great nation of China just across the narrow sea, is confronted with that problem, and she has got to meet and solve that problem. If we will place ourselves in Japan's position and seek to analyze her point of view for a moment, we will get away from an insularity which hampers our vision. Personally I believe that our entanglements with the Far East are not likely to do us any good. I am not inclined to involve ourselves too far with them, but leave them to solution of the peoples most concerned.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. AINEY. I can not yield. I have only a few moments left. I do not want to get into a controversial colloquy with the gentleman in regard to my attitude or views. I have only a few minutes. I asked for half an hour in the beginning, but I could not get it, so that I shall not be able to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. AINEY. A problem likewise confronts China out of this war in Europe; what think you of the likelihood of these concessions, railroad and otherwise, now existing in China with respect to the zones of influence of European powers being likely to continue there? It is a matter of self-preservation for Japan to see that some line of activity is taken with respect to the future of China, and that nation which has apparently little cohesive power shall be tied together by the influence of that nation most capable of aiding. I am not prepared to say that Japan may not aid more than any European power. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BURNETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17122. An act for the relief of John Burrows.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. VAUGHAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. VAUGHAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. VAUGHAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not know that I shall occupy the entire time given to me, but I wish to answer some of the remarks made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. Chairman, in this war now going on in Europe the welfare of our country demands that we should be absolutely neutral. [Applause.] On that proposition all are agreed. If we love our country, we should do all in our power to preserve neutrality. On this proposition all should agree.

It is not for the American Congress to discuss who is to blame for bringing about this war. If we wish to preserve our neutrality, we should refrain from discussions that are calculated to disturb our neutrality.

But we are told that we are not giving Germany a square deal; that we are not observing neutrality toward Germany because some of our citizens are selling arms and munitions of war to the allies; that our Government should lay an embargo upon the exportation of such to all belligerents since Germany can not buy from us on account of British control of the seas. Now, if an observance of neutrality on our part requires that we lay this embargo we should do so, because we profess to be and we ought to be absolutely neutral.

But let us see whether or not an observance of strict neutrality on the part of the Government of the United States requires that we should lay this embargo. Let us examine international law upon the subject and see whether or not the policy of the administration is right. The newspapers carried the information on yesterday that the President had announced that the laying of such an embargo would be an unneutral act. I undertake to say that any gentleman who will examine the authorities on the subject will come to the conclusion that the President is right, and that he is sustained by all of our Secretaries of State from Jefferson down to the present time.

In the first place I wish to say that our policy on this subject is based upon sound reason. This is not a military country. Our military system is the militia system; and if our country to-day were to become involved in war with any other country, one of the first things we would have to do would be to buy arms and ammunition abroad. In the War with Spain it was one of the first things we had to do, and we bought munitions of war from Germans, although Germany's sympathies were with Spain, and it was not considered unneutral for Germany to permit Germans to sell arms and munitions of war to the United States Government in that War with Spain. The policy of allowing our people to sell arms and munitions of war to belligerents is supported by the sound reason that a country like ours which does not maintain a large standing Army nor immense stores of arms and munitions of war will find it necessary whenever it becomes involved in war to buy arms and ammunition abroad.

If all the nations of the earth were agreed, and if international law were to the effect that the duty devolved upon every neutral Government to prohibit its citizens from selling munitions of war to belligerents, every Government in the world that does not maintain immense stores of munitions of war would find itself at the mercy of those nations that do maintain standing armies and stores of munitions of war.

It does not necessarily follow that it is because of British control of the seas that Germany does not buy arms and munitions of war from our people. The best information is that she does not need to buy abroad, that she is well supplied with immense stores of munitions of war and the means of making them, and would not find it necessary to purchase in the United States, even if Great Britain did not control the sea. In fact, her friends boast of her preparedness and of the impossibility of the allies overcoming her or successfully defending themselves against her.

When this war broke out in Europe the Governments engaging in it had the right to expect that the United States would be neutral, that we would adhere to the policy established in the beginning by Washington which in his Farewell Address he so earnestly advised us to adhere to. These Governments had the right to expect that if we professed neutrality we would practice neutrality as interpreted by the established policy of our Government in regard thereto. [Applause.]

But I said, and I repeat, that if the observance of strict neutrality requires that we lay this embargo, it ought to be done. The question is, Does neutrality require it? Of course, I mean neutrality as interpreted by the established policy of our Government, for no belligerent could expect us to vary from our established understanding of what neutrality requires.

I read from the letter of Mr. Jefferson, Secretary of State, to the British minister, May 15, 1793, volume 7, page 955, of Moore's International Law;

> Our citizens have been always free to make, vend, and export arms. It is the constant occupation and livelihood of some of them. To suppress their callings, the only means, perhaps, of their subsistence, because a war exists in foreign and distant countries in which we have no concern would scarcely be expected. It would be hard in principle and impossible in practice. The law of nations, therefore, respecting the rights of those at peace does not require from them such an internal disarrangement in their occupations. It is satisfied with the external penalty pronounced in the President's proclamation, that of confiscation of such portion of these arms as shall fall into the hands of any of the belligerent powers on their way to the ports of their enemies. To this penalty our citizens are warned that they will be abandoned, and that even private contraventions may work no inequality between the parties at war the benefit of them will be left free and open to all.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAUGHAN. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If any other policy should obtain throughout the nations of the world, would it not result logically that every country would find it necessary to be constantly employed in arming and panoplying itself in anticipation of wars yet to be declared in times of peace, knowing that it would be impossible to import arms from other countries after war was declared?

Mr. VAUGHAN. I agree with the gentleman entirely. I think I advanced that idea a moment ago. It would make it necessary that the Military Establishment of the United States should cost annually many hundreds of millions more than the immense sum it now costs to be prepared for defense.

Though Jefferson and Hamilton disagreed on many things, on this question they were agreed. I read from Hamilton's Treasury Circular of August 4, 1793 (1 American State Papers on Foreign Relations, 140, vol. 7, p. 955, Moore's International Law):

The purchasing within and exporting from the United States, by way of merchandise, articles commonly called contraband, being generally warlike instruments and military stores, is free to all the parties at war and is not to be interfered with.

In 1796 France contended that the observance of neutrality on our part required that we should restrain our citizens from selling and exporting articles contraband of war to her belligerent enemies. We refused to yield to her demand, though she was our friend and ally in our struggle for independence. Now France wants to buy from us. We refused to restrain our people from selling to her enemies when she was engaged in a struggle for her existence against all Europe. We refused upon the ground that neutrality forbade. Shall we now, when she is engaged in another war, refuse to permit our citizens to sell to her?

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I could go on making quotations from the declarations of Secretaries of State from Jefferson to Bryan, but I content myself with saying that it is not only international law but it is the American policy, declared by every Secretary of State from Jefferson to Bryan, and it is based upon the fact that we are not a military power, and that we depend for our defense upon the militia system, that our citizens shall be permitted to sell to belligerents in time of war, and that belligerents are remitted in their protection in the matter to capture on the high seas. And if belligerents, in this war now going on, in which we are neutral, and should remain neutral, find themselves at a disadvantage, it is their misfortune and not the fault of the United States. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. KEY of Ohio having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17982. An act to make Nyando, N. Y., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement; and

H. R. 18172. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 3897. An act to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to revise the location of its right of way, and for other purposes; and

S. 3362. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars, and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto, in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 17, 1915:

S. 1060. An act fixing the date of reenlistment of Gustav Hartfelder, first-class fireman, United States Navy;

S. 3525. An act for the relief of Pay Inspector F. T. Arms, United States Navy;

S. 543. An act to correct the military record of John T. Haines;

S. 145. An act for the relief of Charles Richter;

S. 1044. An act for the relief of Byron W. Canfield;

S. 1377. An act for the relief of Alfred S. Lewis;

S. 1703. An act for the relief of George P. Chandler;

S. 2304. An act for the relief of Chris Kuppler;

S. 2882. An act for the relief of Charles M. Clark;

S. 5695. An act for the relief of the Southern Transportation Co.; and

S. 5970. An act for the relief of Isaac Bethurum.

On February 18, 1915:

S. 1304. An act authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Capt. F. H. Uberroth, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, and Gunner Carl Johannson, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, watches tendered to them by the Canadian Government.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin consume some of his time now?

Mr. COOPER. I have used considerably more time than the gentleman from Virginia, but I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, owing to circumstances it was not possible for me to engage in the discussion on the floor of the House when the ship-purchase bill was under consideration, but I have in my possession some very important facts that, I think, were not brought out in that debate that seem to me to demonstrate conclusively that there is no danger of any permanent lack of American ships to carry American goods in this present crisis.

In the RECORD of Wednesday, February 17, my colleague [Mr. CURRY] has printed a list of 58 vessels heretofore engaged in the coastwise trade that recently have been transferred to the foreign trade to meet the present crisis. The list is probably far from complete, as I myself know of one coastwise steamer not in the list that has been thus transferred—the Edson Light, transferred from the the Great Lakes to salt water.

I am also advised by the highest authority that there are now 30 coastwise ships on the Pacific coast tied up to the dock, with no business to do, that can be transferred to the Atlantic, and doubtless will be so transferred, if it is certain that foreign business can be secured for them that will be profitable.

It is also a fact that three of the steamers of the Great Lakes fleet were last fall taken through the Welland Canal, Lake Ontario, and the St. Lawrence River to salt water and are now carrying cargoes of cotton to Germany. I hold in my hand a printed weekly report of the trade conditions between Germany and this country showing this to be a fact. These three steamers are:

The Robert M. Thompson, built by the Great Lakes Engineering Works, of Detroit, Mich.

The Edson Light, built by the same company at Ashtabula, Ohio.

The Kenawha, built by the Jenks Shipbuilding Co., of Port Huron, Mich.

By this weekly report it appears that the Robert M. Thompson sailed from Rotterdam on her return to the United States on January 20, the Kenawha on January 30 from Rotterdam, while the date of sailing of the Edson Light from Goteborg via Rotterdam was indefinite. It is certain that these three ships are either on the way to Europe or already landed there with another cargo.

There are thousands of steamers on the Great Lakes flying the American flag. Many of these remained all last summer tied to the docks at lower lake ports because there was nothing for them to do. The indications now are that the coming season will be no better than the last for business on the Lakes. Under these circumstances it is perfectly certain that many of these steamers, as soon as the ice is out of the Welland Canal and the St. Lawrence River, will be taken to the Atlantic and put into the trade, provided there is prospect of business for them for any considerable period of time at profitable rates. While some of the lake steamers are too large to go through the Welland Canal, there are hundreds of them that can.

There are nearly 15,000 ships of all kinds flying the American flag engaged in the coastwise trade. Even a small percentage of this number diverted to the ocean carrying traffic would provide for every possible want in the way of ocean freight facilities for our commerce.

These facts must be known by at least some of the active proponents of this ship-purchase bill as well as they are known to me. If so, it is plain that there must be some ulterior or hidden purpose behind this remarkable, revolutionary, socialistic proposition to put the Government into the foreign shipping business other than that which is publicly stated to be the reason for its enactment. There is nothing more certain than that there are plenty of ships under the American flag that may be used to carry any amount of foreign commerce that can possibly be secured by our people without giving our support to this proposition—one of many urged upon this Congress—to put the Federal Government into business hitherto reserved to private enterprise.

In order that I may put these facts before the House, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, it was a great day in Lincoln, Nebr. The city's favorite son had torn himself from his confining duties as Secretary of State and was to deliver before the Lincoln Commercial Club one of his soulful addresses. It must not for a moment be supposed that the surprise and pleasure of the town were due to the rarity of his public addresses. Far from it. But it was rumored that this address was to be delivered free of charge. Hence the rejoicing in Lincoln. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The fateful day of which I speak was January 6, 1914, and the equally fateful address is fortunately preserved to posterity in the March number of the Commoner. Much of Mr. Bryan's speech on that occasion may be passed over without comment; it is sufficient to say that, like most of the keynote speeches delivered by men prominent in the present administration, it deals in predictions and promises; the future tense is overworked to a lamentable degree.

For example, passages such as this are common:

> Our Nation has awakened and walks face foremost toward the light. Sometimes the student, looking back through history, bewails the lateness of his birth and says that if he had only been born in some golden age of the past he would have been happy. There is no golden age like this; in all the years there has been no time like ours, no period in all the annals of man when one human being could render such service to the world as he can render to-day. It is the era of hope, the day of confidence, the time of rejoicing.

[Applause.]

So sang sweetly the Secretary of State. It may be that the hundreds of thousands of men and women out of employment, facing daily want and even starvation, forced to stand in the bread line, did not find the year 1914 quite so pregnant with hope, with confidence, with rejoicing, as did the Secretary of State. But that is at the moment neither here nor there.

Even in the mind of the Secretary of State such sentiments as I have quoted were but by-products of his address. The real meat of the discourse is elsewhere. Again I quote from the speech as reported, apparently verbatim, in the March Commoner, page 13:

> You will find it in the Commoner. For authentic news of the progress of the new era, subscribe at once.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I expected incredulity when I stated my opinion that the Secretary of State spoke before the Lincoln Commercial Club without receiving therefor compensation—or, as he doubtless prefers to designate it, "an honorarium." But the mystery is only on the surface; the speech merely provides a suitable stage setting for a deliberate and carefully planned attempt to boom the circulation of the Commoner, of which that same Secretary of State is "editor and proprietor." Shades of Thomas Jefferson, of John Quincy Adams, of Daniel Webster, of Richard Olney, and of John Hay!

This is the man who is the head of our great Department of State; this is the man charged with a thousand intricate and delicate details of adjusting our relations with every other power on the globe; this is the man upon whose judgment and foresight may perhaps hang the question of whether the United States will know peace or war the coming year. I do not charge, of course, that any moral opprobrium attached to the utterance which I have just quoted; I have the highest respect for the private character of the Secretary of State. But I do declare that a man so utterly devoid of even the slightest appreciation of the fitness of things is not and can not be anything but a hopeless misfit as the premier of the United States.

Mr. Bryan talks well—and frequently. He is very free with unctuous deliverances on the subject of our foreign policy; his heart yearns for the whole world, and especially, it would seem, does it yearn toward Latin America. For example, in a signed interview which appeared last March in America E Industrias Americanas—the price per word is not stated—Mr. Bryan spoke as follows:

> It may take some time to convince all of the people of Latin America of this Nation's disinterested friendship. They have sometimes been made the victims of commercial greed; they have sometimes suffered from exploitation by concessionaires without conscience, and are therefore naturally suspicious, but these suspicions can be overcome and will be overcome. * * * They will find in this Nation an increasing regard for their welfare.

Nothing could be more delightful, more uplifting, more soul satisfying, than the sentiment so beautifully expressed. But have theory and practice agreed? I doubt if a single Member of this House would say yes.

The fund of material and information bearing upon this interesting point is abundant to an unhappy degree. A year ago, in a somewhat extended speech, I attempted to show the nature of the substitutions in our ministers to Latin America which had been wrought by Mr. Bryan. I think no one, Republican or Democrat, would regard with pleasure or equanimity the wholesale decapitation in practically every Latin-American post of trained nonpartisan diplomats in favor of crude and wholly untrained Bryanized relics of the free-silver campaign of 1896.

I can take up to-day only one very minute phase of a very great question. I desire to refer at this time to the island of Santo Domingo, or Haiti, one of the Latin-American sisters to whom the Secretary of State so movingly extended the right hand of fellowship.

Santo Domingo is one of those regions of the world which seems likely to have greatness thrust upon it. Surprising as it may seem, few regions of the earth are so little known to-day as this lovely island, lying between Cuba and Porto Rico, in spite of the fact that it is beyond question the finest of the Antilles, and that neither Cuba, Porto Rico, nor Jamaica can compare with it in mineral wealth or in fertility of soil.

But by one of those curious shifts in the current of trade, such as that which brings an obscure way station onto the trunk line of a railroad, the opening of the Panama Canal places the island in the midstream of world traffic. The two main channels by which the shipping of Europe and of America may enter the Caribbean Sea and thence the Pacific Ocean pass on either side of it. On the west is the Windward Passage, between the Haitian end of the island itself and Cuba; on the east is the Mona Passage, between the Santo Domingo end of the island and Porto Rico. On the Windward Passage end of Cuba we have Guantanamo Bay, and at the other extreme we have, of course, the whole island of Porto Rico. We have no military or naval foothold on the island itself. On the western end of the Haitian portion of the island, opposite Guantanamo Bay, is the harbor of Mole St. Nicholas, which is notoriously coveted by Germany; and on the eastern end of the Dominican portion, opposite Porto Rico, is the Bay of Samana, which would have been ours 45 years ago if the Senate, by a tie vote, had not rejected the treaty of cession negotiated by President Grant. As recently stated in the Independent, from which the foregoing facts are largely taken:

> The island thus occupies a position of unique importance in both naval and commercial strategy. It is already apparent that whether the Panama Canal will attract enough traffic to repay us for the $400,000,000 we have sunk in it depends more on fuel facilities—that is, on the coal and oil stations of the route—than on the rate of tolls.

Perhaps a few words relative to the history of the island will not be out of place as an introduction to the discussion of the present situation. The island of Santo Domingo, usually known in the old geographies as Haiti or Hayti, is the second largest of the Great Antilles. The eastern two-thirds of the island, with which I am primarily concerned just now, is given over to the little State known indifferently as the Dominican Republic or as the Republic of Santo Domingo. The Dominican Republic covers about 18,000 square miles of territory, an area substantially equal to the combined areas of New Hampshire and Vermont. The Republic of Haiti, as we have seen, occupies the western third of the island and is the oldest colored Republic. The country is almost exclusively agricultural and has an exceedingly fertile soil. The principal product is coffee, which is still cultivated in an exceedingly primitive way. Some sugar is also grown to meet the domestic demand. In neither Republic, on account of the frequent revolutions and the unprogressive character of the people, is the agricultural capacity of the country at all developed. Although the island is about 400 miles long and as much as 165 miles in width, the total mileage in railroads is only 315.

The modern history of the Dominican Republic may be said to begin with the accession to the presidency of the negro Heureaux in 1882. For 17 years this savage despot—whose administration may, in a limited way, perhaps, be compared with that of President Diaz in Mexico—ruled the Dominican Republic with an iron hand, keeping the peace by mingling bribery and terrorism. Those whom he considered useful he kept quiet by graft and plunder; those whom he considered troublesome he killed—about 2,000 out of a total population of some 300,000. In the words of Prof. Jacob H. Hollander, of Johns Hopkins, the reorganizer of Dominican finance under the recent régime:

> The country was at peace; but it was the hush of a merciless terrorism, not the quiet of civil government. The seeming well-being which prevailed was attained by a bartering of resources of the country in prodigal concessions, and by discounting the future in reckless debt accumulations.

In the year 1899 Heureaux was assassinated, and, as Dr. Hollander well says, "With Heureaux's assassination came the deluge; the next six years constituted a climax, even in the history of Latin-American politics." There succeeded a reign of terror in the Republic which is comparable only to that which has prevailed in Mexico since the abdication of President Diaz. Chieftain after chieftain attempted to secure and to hold the presidency, and the country groaned under the hopeless and lawless conditions which resulted.

In the words of T. Lothrop Stoddard, writing in the American Review of Reviews last June, from whom I have gleaned some of the foregoing facts:

> Debasing as it had been to the Dominicans themselves, the 17 years' tyranny of Heureaux had given the outer world a vital interest in the country's future. Attracted by the political quiet imposed by Heureaux's rule, vast amounts of foreign capital had begun the development of the Republic's marvelous resources, while the dictator's lavish foreign loans had imposed heavy interest responsibilities. Accordingly, the carnival of riot and destruction following Heureaux's death had not long continued before the great powers were besieged with appeals from fugitive foreign planters, ruined concessionaires, and defrauded bondholders. And by the year 1904 it became perfectly clear that whatever the United States might fail to do to protect its injured citizens, the European powers were determined to see that their subjects obtained redress. * * * The American Government was plainly told that at least two great European powers were determined on intervention in Santo Domingo if something were not speedily done.

Neither the temper of the United States nor of President Roosevelt would perhaps willingly have brooked intervention by any foreign power. Accordingly in January, 1905, the protocol of an agreement was drawn up between the United States and the Dominican Governments providing that the United States should adjust the Dominican debt and administer the customs for the benefit of creditors. This protocol failing of ratification by the Senate, President Roosevelt made an interim agreement with the then President of Santo Domingo, Morales, providing for the collection of the Dominican customs by persons designated by him, 55 per cent of the proceeds to be deposited in the United States for the benefit of creditors. The various factions in the island were given plainly to understand that they would not be permitted to loot the customhouses in their former manner. This announcement cut the backbone out of the revolution. The nearest customhouse was always the goal of every insurgent "general," and with this possibility removed the lust of conflict quickly cooled.

After two years' operation the success of the Roosevelt-Morales interim agreement became so clear that the Senate consented to ratify a convention for American administration of Dominican customs if the original idea of an American adjustment of the Dominican debt were abandoned. Accordingly, the American receivership of the Republic's customs was formally ratified and assured legal permanence by the American-Dominican convention of 1907, a copy of which I shall append as part of my remarks.

Prior to 1914 but nine years had passed since the Roosevelt-Morales agreement ushered in the new régime; yet those nine years had brought an increase in prosperity and civilization almost unbelievable to those unaware of the marvelous natural wealth of Santo Domingo. Plantations had sprung up on all sides. Railroad extension continually brought new areas under development. Foreign capital poured in freely and the mass of the population enjoyed a prosperity and security never before known. The total customs collections for the fiscal year 1912–13 exceeded $4,000,000, and the terms of the debt service were met with ease. The total foreign trade had grown from less than $10,000,000 in 1905 to over $20,000,000 in 1912, and about the same in 1913. Imports had increased from $3,000,000 to $9,000,000 during this period, and exports from $7,000,000 to $12,000,000. The share of the United States in the exports of Santo Domingo actually exceeded 70 per cent in one year and averaged close to 60 per cent; of the imports of Santo Domingo the United States was in recent years furnishing well over 60 per cent. The country thus was flourishing, and on the commercial side its friendship was proving financially profitable as well as internationally highly desirable.

I can not take the time to discuss at length the bearing which the foregoing recital has upon a true appreciation of the Monroe doctrine. Prof. Hiram Bingham, in his work upon the Monroe doctrine, says:

> Another one of the "fruits" which has not escaped the attention of our neighbors in South America is our intervention in Santo Domingo. * * * There has been an occasional revolution since we took control of the customhouses, but the financial condition of the island is certainly better than it was. Thus we may seem to have been justified in our course, but the fact remains that, although our intervention may have been an excellent thing for the people of Santo Domingo, it has undoubtedly interfered with their right to do as they please with their own money, and has acted as a sinister warning to other Latin-American States as to what they may expect of us if they fail to pay their debts.

It may be admitted that the "international policeman" idea of Prof. Bingham may have disquieting possibilities in the future; at the same time it will be generally recognized that at the end of the Taft administration material conditions in the island had vastly improved. Mr. Stoddard, whom I have already quoted, for example, says:

> No page of our foreign policy is brighter than the story of our recent relations with that little State.

Of course, the character of the people had not been wholly changed, and there were during the nine years prior to 1914 ominous warnings that the old spirit of anarchy was still smoldering. In 1911 President Caceres, who had succeeded Morales, was assassinated, and a political upheaval was narrowly averted. In the summer of 1912 open revolution broke out and the insurgents ventured to seize the customhouses in the territory under their control. But President Taft soon showed that he would tolerate no return to the old dispensation, and 750 marines quickly ousted the revolutionists and restored American control.

I have detailed at this length the conditions prior to the advent of the Wilson administration to show the extreme delicacy and importance of the situation presented. Whatever one may think of the application of the Monroe doctrine to the state of facts, we have seen that tremendous prosperity to the people of the island and large increased foreign trade for ourselves had resulted from the step. We were apparently committed to continue in the island, and equally apparently the most careful and adroit management on the part of the United States was necessary to guide into peaceful channels the restless spirits of the people of the Republic.

Realizing the extremely delicate state of affairs, President Taft had in 1911 sent as minister to the Dominican Republic Mr. William W. Russell. Mr. Russell was born in Washington, D. C., in 1859. He was educated at the United States Naval Academy; was civil engineer and served on several surveys in South America, Mexico, and the United States; was lieutenant on the cruiser America when that vessel was delivered to the Brazilian authorities; was appointed secretary of the legation at Caracas November 15, 1895—his first purely diplomatic post thus having been the gift of a Democratic President; was appointed secretary of the legation at Panama City February 5, 1904; was appointed minister to Colombia in 1904, and minister to Venezuela in 1905; served as commissioner to the international exposition in Quito, Ecuador, in 1908–9; was appointed minister resident and consul general to the Dominican Republic in 1910, and was made minister, as I have previously stated, in 1911.

In other words, Mr. Russell was a thoroughly trained diplomat who had spent upward of 20 years in various capacities in Latin America. It is doubtful, perhaps, if he had any strong partisan affiliations, but presumably, from the fact that he was originally appointed by President Cleveland, he was a Democrat. He had served some three years in Santo Domingo with marked distinction and was from every point of view abundantly equipped to guide our diplomatic course through a very ticklish channel.

Yet he was displaced just as soon as Secretary Bryan got around to it. And by whom? By a trained diplomat? Hardly, with Mr. Bryan the appointing officer. The selection was James M. Sullivan, a criminal lawyer of New York. The fact that he was the defender of "Bald Jack" Rose seems hardly a sufficient reason for his selection, even from the Bryan point of view; therefore the fact that he was an indefatigable organizer of Democratic clubs in the campaign of 1912 must, beyond peradventure, have been the persuasive circumstance in the appointment. Mr. Sullivan was confirmed by the Senate August 12, 1913, and shortly thereafter went to his post. There were ugly rumors almost at the outset as to the reasons underlying his appointment and as to certain connections of his which were likely to make his presence in the island Republic highly undesirable.

For example, writing in the North American Review for February, 1914, that eminent Democrat, Col. George Harvey, refers to the appointment in these terms:

> His cousin is a contractor interested in railroad concessions in Santo Domingo.

I have previously pointed out how crushed to earth Santo Domingo had been for years prior to 1905 by domestic and foreign graft, by outrageous concessions, and by profligate and illegitimate contracts. Even if we could not, perhaps, have expected from Mr. Bryan a minister with any affirmative qualifications for the post, it did not seem unreasonable to expect, especially in view of the great delicacy of conditions there prevailing, that he would not appoint a man so manifestly unfit from every point of view to represent the United States Government.

A brief digression is here necessary. The office of general receiver of Dominican customs is a presidential appointment. William E. Pulliam, a Democrat, was receiver general in the early part of the Wilson administration. On June 16, 1913, Walker W. Vick, of Rutherford, N. J., was appointed to succeed Mr. Pulliam. Who's Who for 1914–15 tells us that Mr. Vick was "manager general headquarters Woodrow Wilson, at New York, preconvention campaign, 1912; assistant secretary of the Democratic National Committee, 1912, and organized New York Leadquarters; secretary Wilson inaugural committee; Democrat; member Democratic Club at Rutherford, N. J., and of Bergen County Democratic Club of Hackensack, N. J." At all events, there seems no doubt of Mr. Vick's democracy or Woodrow Wilsonism; subsequent events have proved that he also had a backbone.

Shortly after Minister Sullivan's arrival at Santo Domingo, the internal conditions in the island became greatly disturbed and continued to become more and more chaotic as the months passed.

In December, 1913, when the Dominican elections occurred, the Wilson administration took the extraordinary step of sending over a horde of Americans to "supervise" the elections. Current Opinion for January, 1914, says:

The dispatch to Santo Domingo last month, in spite of the protest of that Government, of three officials connected with our State Department, and about 300 other Americans employed in the public service of Porto Rico, to observe and report on the elections, was an application of this new policy regarding constitutional governments (i. e., not to deal with or to countenance anything else). It was explained by Secretary Bryan, in a letter to Minister Sullivan, as follows:

"Please say to President Bordas that the President has planned to send a number of Americans to visit the principal polling places on election day, not as a 'commission' for which this Government asks any official recognition, but only as individuals, to lend moral support by their presence to the efforts which President Bordas has so fully pledged himself to make that the elections shall be free and uninfluenced in every respect, and in order that, if any questions should arise as to good faith of anyone concerned, undeniably impartial witnesses may be available to bear testimony as to exactly what happened."

I wonder if the intolerable smugness of this letter deceived even the most ignorant Dominican? We had no protectorate over the island or the Republic; we had no possible concern with its elections. This letter recognizes these circumstances and yet these Americans "visit" the polling places merely as "individuals to lend moral support by their presence" and to furnish "undeniably impartial" testimony in case of need. The phrasing of Mr. Bryan's letter would make it equally proper to send men to "supervise" British, French, or Italian elections. Perhaps the action was wise in this case, in spite of the strongly voiced opposition of the Republic itself; in spite of the clear departure from the Monroe doctrine as usually understood. But let us at least be candid in what we do and not hopelessly hypocritical.

Mr. Sullivan, as we have seen, had a troubled year in Santo Domingo. On June 9. 1914, Mr. Vick, after nearly a year of strife with Minister Sullivan, tendered his resignation, and immediately returned to the United States to bring to the attention of the Wilson administration just what manner of man our representative was.

A Washington dispatch, dated July 7, 1914, stated:

James M. Sullivan, United States Minister to Santo Domingo, is returning to Washington from his post, whence he sailed for New York on July 2. Mr. Sullivan has been in Santo Domingo nearly a year, during which time conditions in that Republic have been in constant turmoil, and at the present time a state of war prevails in the north, requiring the presence of American warships. Mr. Sullivan has been severely criticized because of his conduct of the affairs of his office, and doubt was expressed by many here that he will return to his post after he reaches this country.

It was only a few days ago that Walker Vick resigned the directorship of customs in Santo Domingo. It is understood here that friction between Vick and Sullivan was the real cause of Mr. Vick's resignation.

As illustrating the condition in the island about the same time and as showing conclusively how within a year a comparatively peaceful and orderly community had gone back to the dark age of anarchy and revolution, it may be worth while to append at this point a brief dispatch from Washington, dated July 15, 1914:

TO TAKE HAND IN DOMINICAN AFFAIRS—TRANSPORT "HANCOCK," CARRYING MARINES AND BLUEJACKETS, AND GUNBOAT SENT TO GUANTANAMO.

WASHINGTON, July 14, 1914.

With the transport Hancock speeding through the Gulf of Mexico, carrying marines and bluejackets from Vera Cruz toward Guantanamo, Cuba, as the first move in a demonstration to warn Haiti and San Domingo that they must put their Governments in order, it was intimated in official circles to-day that if actual intervention became necessary the United States might establish a financial trusteeship in Haiti and insist upon enlarging the authority it now exercises in the collection of Dominican customs.

Any radical change, it was said, in the administration policy toward the island Governments would be aimed to establish a fair system of internal and external taxation, with guarantees for the proper expenditures of collections. American administrators of the Dominican customs have complained that their present powers are too limited.

Several European powers have made representations to the American State Department concerning large financial interests that have suffered from continuance of revolutionary chaos in the little Republics. Financial affairs of both Governments, it is known, are in a state very unsatisfactory to foreign creditors. San Domingo's customs revenues have been so curtailed that it is said to be doubtful whether they will suffice to meet regular charges on account of the consolidated foreign debt, for which they are pledged. Conditions in Haiti are not much better.

Last fall, in response to the determined campaign by Mr. Vick for an investigation of Minister Sullivan's career, the State Department made a somewhat abortive investigation of Dominican affairs, with especial reference to the participation therein of Mr. Sullivan. This did not satisfy Mr. Vick, and he finally succeeded last December in having former Mayor Phelan, of San Francisco, Democratic Senator elect from California and a man of high distinction and ability, designated to conduct a real inquiry into the career in Santo Domingo of Minister Sullivan. The newspapers have stated that this action was taken by President Wilson "over Secretary Bryan's head." The dispatches, dated December 10 last, stated:

President Wilson has ordered an investigation into charges that James M. Sullivan, of New York, now minister to the Dominican Republic, had been guilty of misconduct in office, mainly through alleged use of influence to obtain contracts from the Dominican Government for a relative and friends and by having Dominican revenue collections transferred to a bank in Santo Domingo city which New York financial interests friendly to Mr. Sullivan were said to control.

The investigation was conducted for some two weeks in New York during January last, then for a few days here in Washington, and it is understood that Mr. Phelan has within a few days sailed for Santo Domingo for a thorough search into the history of Mr. Sullivan's régime there. Mr. Phelan will doubtless ultimately make a full report to the President, though whether or not this report will be made available to the public is not yet known. President Wilson is certainly to be commended for his vigorous, though somewhat tardy, action along this line and for the designation of a man of the parts of Mr. Phelan.

While I have nothing but the highest respect and regard for Senator Phelan, both as a man and as a public servant, it must not be forgotten that he is a staunch Democrat and that in his recent successful campaign for his seat in the Senate he relied mightily upon the written indorsements of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. I am sure he will intend to be absolutely fair, but after all his predisposition must necessarily be to stand by and to uphold the administration and its appointees. Under these circumstances the investigation can hardly be deemed an impartial one. Indeed, it can hardly be called, in any true sense, an investigation at all.

How fundamentally different is this inquiry from one conducted by a bipartisan congressional select committee. Take, for example, the investigation conducted in 1910 by a Republican Congress of a Republican Cabinet officer. The special committee consisted of 12 Members, 6 from the Senate and 6 from the House. Four from each branch were Republicans and two were Democrats. The minority was allowed to designate its own representatives on that committee.

The investigation of such a committee, whatever the majority might report, was absolutely certain to bring to light every material fact upon which the public might base an intelligent opinion. How different is the present situation. The "commission" of inquiry consists of one member; that member is a staunch Democrat; he has no power to subpœna witnesses and he has the power—even though not the inclination, perhaps—to bring out what testimony he wishes and to suppress what he deems best. His finding obviously can not under the circumstances carry with it the weight which it should.

Much of the testimony, as reported in the newspapers, has dealt with the alleged corrupt negotiations of Mr. Sullivan with the various interests who were seeking to exploit the poor little Republic for their own welfare. A great deal of the testimony is exceedingly unsavory and certainly indicates a condition, of which Mr. Sullivan had knowledge, to be deplored by every right-thinking American. The testimony upon this head, however, is so extensive and so complex that it seems preferable not to attempt to abstract it at this time for fear that, unwittingly, some injustice might be done Mr. Sullivan or his associates. There are certain aspects of the testimony, however, to which reference may properly and perhaps profitably be made at this time.

KNOWLEDGE THE STATE DEPARTMENT HAD AS TO WHAT WAS GOING ON.

It should be remembered, as before stated, that both Mr. Vick and Mr. Pulliam, whom I shall quote principally, are Democrats and prima facie friendly to the administration and its policies. Mr. Vick was the personal selection of Secretary of War Garrison for the post at the island. In an interview with Mr. Garrison which appeared in the course of the hearings in New York last month, the New York World of Saturday, January 16, 1915, reports him as follows:

I am responsible for the appointment of collector of customs. I appointed Mr. Vick, and I accept the responsibility for his appointment. I know nothing about the other appointments, and I will not discuss the case any further.

Mr. Vick repeatedly tendered his resignation after the administration at Washington refused to act on the information sent by him to the War Department regarding certain doubtful episodes in Santo Domingo. Finally, as Mr. Vick refused to be longer responsible for conditions there, his resignation was accepted by President Wilson in terms flattering to Mr. Vick's integrity and ability. This is what the returned official had to say of the unsavory conditions in the island:

Before resigning my office I exhausted every resource at my command, both as an official and as an individual, first to induce, later to compel, a competent and impartial investigation of the appointment of Minister Sullivan and his official acts. I felt then and I believe now that the honor of the American Government and of the Democratic administration is involved. I was advised repeatedly to keep my own skirts clean and to ignore the conditions surrounding me—a situation that I could not close my eyes to and maintain my self-respect. Such an attitude is not my ideal of citizenship nor of public service. I know, too, that it is not the ideal of President Wilson, and I have never faltered in my faith that if ever the truth about Santo Domingo could be placed directly in his hands there would be prompt and righteous action.

It should be remembered that Mr. Vick resigned his office about the first of June last and that Mr. Sullivan is still minister to Santo Domingo.

As stated in the Boston Advertiser of December 9 last:

The air of sanctity which hangs around the office of the Secretary of State at Washington has been disturbed by certain meddlesome persons who will not be hushed up and who seem to grow more insistent the longer Mr. Bryan tries to ignore them.

The charge has been made to Secretary Bryan repeatedly (and with the offer of proofs to be examined by him whenever he is willing to make the investigation) that interests which have never appeared publicly in the matter have been at work to use the influence of the United States to get for themselves a number of concessions in Santo Domingo. We do not know how much of truth there may be in these charges. There have been some pretty strong accusations made, and the investigation made by Congress this winter may serve to show how much of all this case can be proven by incontestable evidence. But at least the charges are made by Democrats against Democrats, so that it can hardly be claimed that the affair has any partisan tinge.

The whole history of affairs in Santo Domingo since the present American minister, James M. Sullivan, took charge there, presents evidence of more or less influence by Tammany men upon the business affairs of the Republic. Just how far the events were subject to the influence of Minister Sullivan will be one of the things which Congress must be expected to determine. Mr. Sullivan, as the former attorney for the notorious "Jack" Rose, in the Rosenthal affair, was probably pretty well acquainted with the type of Americans who followed him to Santo Domingo City, and who showed such activity in attempting to influence the course of financial decisions, after American influence became predominant there.

A few weeks ago word came from Washington that the State Department had asked some prominent Americans to conduct a rigid inquiry into the conduct of Minister Sullivan and his general policies in Santo Domingo, and that the verdict of these men had fully exonerated the American minister. This was accepted by the American public as satisfactory, and we had supposed that the whole case had been dropped. The surprising feature now develops that the men who were publicly named as investigators emphatically deny that they served in any such capacity. They declare that Secretary Bryan must have been misled by somebody, and they insist that they are as ignorant of the alleged "investigation" as anybody else could be. They declare that they made no report on the case for the very good reason that they were never asked to do so, and never took any part in the reported "inquiry."

It is to be noted that since the attempt of Secretary Bryan to use the whitewash pail and brush in this case, rumors have been flying thick and fast at Washington, to the effect that Mr. Bryan is soon to leave the Cabinet. Whether the two developments have been wholly independent, or whether there may be some connection between them, we do not profess to know. But it is at least certain that Mr. Vick's emphatic statements have caused a decided flutter at Washington. The fact that Mr. Vick stands so close to W. F. McCombs, President Wilson's most influential adviser, lends further weight to the gravity of the proposed investigation. Altogether, the general impression that the Santo Domingo charges may carry a large amount of concealed political dynamite may be easily understood under such circumstances.

Former Receiver Pulliam testified that after his removal he had warned Assistant Secretary of State Osborne and Gen. McIntyre, head of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department. "That is what incenses me so much," said Mr. Pulliam; "to know that the administration would lend its exclusive ears to one particular faction only in Santo Domingo politics." Pulliam further testified that he had specifically warned Mr. Osborne in July, 1913: "Under no circumstances have anything to do with the Banco Nacional crowd," and had explained the character of the institution to him and that it was seeking to exploit Dominican finances.

I was surprised and incensed [said Mr. Pulliam] that such a coterie got to Bryan's ears. I was sorry to see the receivership of customs made the subject of political exploitation. I recalled the instructions which Secretary ROOT gave me when he said that those funds should be administered as a sacred trust. For eight years the receivership had been operated without any trouble and the difficulties that later arose were unquestionably caused by Sullivan's transferring the funds to the Banco Nacional. That was what they wanted. They had no funds. They wanted to establish credit for themselves. Why, nobody would accept their notes of issue except as handbills on the street. The bank was a joke.

James L. Bryne, of Boston, a construction engineer, testified to a conversation which he had had with the Secretary of State; that he had told Mr. Bryan that the minister's cousin, Timothy J. Sullivan, had stated to him that the minister had arranged that the Banco Nacional should get Government contracts, and that he—Timothy J. Sullivan—was down in Santo Domingo to manage the construction work and to see that Minister Sullivan got his "bit." Continuing, he said:

The American people, the President of the United States, and the Democratic Party have been discredited and dishonored in Santo Domingo by the conduct of Minister Sullivan. I did everything I could to get Mr. Bryan to take the matter up.

MR. SULLIVAN'S DIPLOMATIC METHODS.

Mr. Vick in the course of the examination was asked if he knew of an official call paid by the Italian minister and by the British chargé d'affaires upon Mr. Sullivan. He replied:

I know from a gentleman who was present and whose name I can not reveal publicly that these officials called upon Mr. Sullivan and that when he received them he wore only trousers and an undershirt open at the throat, with his suspenders dangling behind him. I am told he greeted the diplomats as "old sports" and that they were so indignant that they left and refused to call upon him again.

Mr. Vick further testified that the affair became the subject of much unfavorable comment in official and business circles.

Charles A. Butlin, former director general of telegraph and wireless service in Santo Domingo, testified that Mr. Sullivan—

Would not even take off his hat when the members of the Dominican cabinet called upon him, and it was common report that on one occasion he received the Italian Minister, Massignia, and another diplomat, in his undershirt, with his suspenders hanging down.

It is stated elsewhere in the testimony that the diplomatic call above referred to was made during the hours customary for such diplomatic formalities, and Sullivan could not justly plead that he was taken unawares. The story was told to Mr. Vick by an eyewitness.

Mr. Butlin also told of Sullivan generally affronting the sensibilities of the Dominicans, who are an extremely ceremonious and ceremonial people, by his boorish manners.

An interesting side light to indicate the point of view of an American citizen upon Mr. Sullivan's methods was furnished by Commissioner Phelan.

"When I was mayor of San Francisco," said Mr. Phelan, "I paid an official call upon the Lord Mayor of London. It seems there was moving or house cleaning going on, and his lordship came downstairs and greeted me in his shirt sleeves. I had supposed that the lord mayoralty consisted mostly of clothes. Later the lord mayor invited me to a dinner, which I declined to attend because I considered his reception of me as an official caller in his shirt sleeves was an insult."

HOW WAS MR. SULLIVAN REGARDED IN SANTO DOMINGO?

Perhaps this question answers itself. Mr. Vick was asked by Commissioner Phelan:

Q. Is Mr. Sullivan popular in Santo Domingo?
A. Hardly; I should say not.
Q. Was he ever fired at?
A. With bricks, not bullets. He has been hissed and hooted when driving, and on one occasion the lamps of his carriage were smashed by a mob. There is ample testimony that he frequently went driving with a guard of Government troops.

John L. Mann, former American director of public works in Santo Domingo, testified that he had informed the State Department that Mr. Sullivan had greatly offended the Dominicans and that he made it impossible for any American to walk the streets without being subject to insults. Mr. Mann also testified that Sullivan's personal habits were offensive to any Spanish-American who regards observance of the forms of etiquette as important.

Mr. Semple testified that last year he went to Mr. Bryan and begged him not to return Sullivan to his post. He read to Secretary Bryan a telegram from Paul Fuller—whom President Wilson sent to Mexico as his trusted agent—to the same effect. Testifying further, he said:

It is the consensus in Santo Domingo among Americans, Dominicans, Germans, and other foreign merchants that Minister Sullivan is a detriment to American business; that his connection with the Bordas government—whatever it may have been—and his relations with the Banco Nacional and his open association with its president make it impossible for him to serve American interests.

Mr. Vick on another occasion testified that Sullivan was generally credited with being responsible for the Dominican revolution of 1914 because he upheld the Bordas government against the Legalistas.

I do not wish it to be thought that I regard it as a serious indictment of Mr. Sullivan that he was careless in his dress, manners, or speech; we all know many men of the highest character and standing in the community who are not overscrupulous in these ways. But, as one of the witnesses testified, the Dominicans are a "polite" people; like most Latin-Americans they think a great deal of the forms of life and are oftentimes greatly influenced in their estimate of a man by his personal methods of speech and dress. If Mr. Sullivan had been in the island as an individual, it would not have been of great consequence how he comported himself. But he was in the island as the official representative of the people of the United States. It was incumbent upon him, if he could honorably do so, to demean himself so as to merit and obtain the approval of the people among whom he was to live. Conduct of this kind was what they had been, doubtless, accustomed to from experience with Minister Russell and his predecessors and it was what they felt they had a right to expect of Mr. Sullivan. They were bitterly disappointed in him and showed their resentment in reprehensible but characteristic ways. Mr. Sullivan's usefulness as a diplomat was gone from the moment when the people began to hate him. He could no longer serve his country efficiently. We all know the importance of the personal side of our diplomatic service; we all know that Mr. Herrick and Mr. Gerard and Mr. Page have been of supremest usefulness in the anxious six months just passed because they were respected, admired, and beloved by the people to whom they were accredited. We all know perfectly well, too, that after hostility succeeds friendship, usefulness disappears. And usefulness in this connection means not merely an establishment and maintenance of friendship, but an increase in volume of trade which can be measured in dollars and cents. Mr. Sullivan was tried in the balance and found wanting in this exceedingly material way, and it is no necessary imputation upon his character or intentions that such is the case.

Nor do I mean to be captious in criticizing the State Department for the way the Sullivan ministry turned out. The best of men go wrong sometimes and the State Department can not be an insurer of the tact and skillfulness of a given representative in a difficult mission. My criticism of the State Department is, first, in sending to this delicate post a man whose training and experience had been such as manifestly to make it impossible, or at all events exceedingly unlikely, that he would wisely or successfully fit into the general scheme of things in the island; and second, in closing its ears to the repeated and sinister reports which we have seen were continually being brought to the attention of Mr. Bryan and his subordinates. I do not then blame the department because Mr. Sullivan turned out badly, because his régime in Santo Domingo has set back the United States there more than can well be measured; I blame it because at the outset it was manifest to any fair-minded man that Mr. Sullivan was not a judicious choice, and because, as the months passed, in spite of repeated warnings from authentic and dependable sources of information, no attempt was made to bring to an end his wretched official career.

Now we come naturally to the famous letter written by Secretary of State Bryan to Mr. Vick at Santo Domingo, dated August 20, 1913. Our memories are still charged with the events of that month of August, 1913. The Mexican situation was highly critical at that moment and the President was even then preparing his message to Congress, which he read on the 27th of August. The exigency was indeed such as to strain the resources of the State Department and of the Secretary of State. Yet just at this time, when one would have supposed him to be immersed in the grave questions arising out of the Mexican trouble, we find Mr. Bryan writing the following letter to Mr. Vick:

WALKER W. VICK,
Receiver of Customs, Santo Domingo City.

MY DEAR MR. VICK: Now that you have arrived and are acquainting yourself with the situation, can you let me know what positions you have to reward deserving Democrats? Whenever you desire suggestions from me in regard to a man for any place down there, call on me.

You have had enough experience in politics to know how valuable workers are when the campaign is on and how difficult it is to find suitable rewards for the deserving. I do not know to what extent a knowledge of the Spanish language is necessary for employees. Let me know what is requisite, together with the salary and when appointments are likely to be made.

Sullivan will be down before long, and you and he together ought to be able to bring about such reforms as may be necessary there, and you will find Sullivan a strong, courageous, and reliable fellow. The more I have seen of him the better satisfied I am that he will fit into the place there and do what is necessary to be done.

Very truly, yours,

W. J. BRYAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 20, 1913.

Note the language—

Positions to reward deserving Democrats; find suitable rewards for all the deserving.

Not a thought or a suggestion of experience or ability or character or Americanism—just a brazen attempt to find any kind of a job for the Bryan hangers-on. Interpreted in the light of Mr. Bryan's point of view, it is easy to understand the meaning of his suggestion in the letter that he is satisfied that Minister Sullivan will "do what is necessary to be done." This phrasing makes still clearer—if, indeed, any evidence were needed—the motives behind Mr. Bryan's selection of Sullivan and the entire absence of any belief on his part that capacity and character were necessary elements in a minister to a foreign nation. It must be remembered that Mr. Bryan, in penning this letter, was writing to a staunch Democratic campaigner, to a man who he believed shared his own more or less high ideals of what constitutes true public service.

Contrast this letter, with its revealing frankness, with the high-sounding and sonorous interview which, as we have seen, Mr. Bryan caused to be circulated through Latin America:

It may take some time to convince all of the people of Latin America of this Nation's disinterested friendship.

Indeed it may.

They have sometimes been made the victims of commercial greed; they sometimes have suffered by exploitation by concessionaires without compensation, and are therefore naturally suspicious, but these suspicions can be overcome and will be overcome.

Can Mr. Bryan think in his heart, or even have the effrontery to say, that he, in the Santo Domingo incident, was practicing what he preaches? Can any instance be found in our recent history of more complete and thorough hypocrisy? Let us call the whole story "Pecksniff Up to Date."

Let us see what these jobs were which Mr. Bryan sought for "deserving Democrats." Here is the list as furnished him by Mr. Vick:

	Yearly salary.
Deputy receiver general of customs	$6,000
Secretary to the receivership; minimum, $1,800; maximum	2,400
Chief statistician	2,200
Assistant auditor; minimum, $1,800; maximum	2,200
Record clerk; minimum, $1,600; maximum	1,920
Superintendent of Revenue-Cutter Service	2,200
Executive clerk	1,500
Spanish stenographer and translator	1,800
Five special inspectors; total salaries, minimum, $9,000; maximum	12,000
Customs collector	2,200
Total	34,420

Mr. Vick testified that Secretary Bryan, on the recommendation of Boaz Long, until lately chief of the Division of Latin-American Affairs in the Department of State, had appointed Charles M. Johnston, of Indianapolis, financial expert for the Republic.

Bryan told me that Johnston would get $8,000 a year and expenses—

Said Mr. Vick.

Johnston was a flour salesman in Mexico, and as far as I know has never had any experience that will qualify him for the job. He's been down there six months and hasn't done a thing yet. Johnston is supposed to be a sort of a comptroller, a new office picked out of the skies.

When Secretary Bryan was told that a copy of his Vick letter was made public he made this statement:

I am glad to have the public know that I appreciate the services of those who work in politics and feel an interest in seeing them rewarded. I think these are the only charges that can be based on that letter, and as Mr. Vick received his appointment as a reward for political work, I thought he was a good man to address in expressing my opinion on the subject.

The New York World reporter states that when the above statement was read to Mr. Bryan for verification, he appeared to be greatly pleased with it.

He gave the impression that he believed some of his jobless followers of former years might understand that he was still looking for places where he could put them on a regular pay roll.

Another account states:

The Secretary of State seemed to regard the entire matter as a huge joke. The suggestion that the State Department had been made, since his entrance into office, a sort of employment bureau for the faithful machine politicians from various quarters of the United States, did not interest the Secretary in the least. He listened to the further suggestion that the offices parceled out in Santo Domingo were in no sense political plums, in view of the fact that the salaries were paid, not out of the United States Treasury, but from the Dominican treasury, without comment.

It is apparent that a sense of the fitness of things can not be injected into the Secretary of State by any methods now known to civilization.

Contrast this attitude with that of the previous history of the receivership. Mr. Pulliam, who had held the office of receiver of customs for six years prior to the incumbency of Mr. Vick, testified that he never had a demand or even a suggestion offered by the Department of State during the Republican régime that he should find places for "deserving Republicans." He said that politics had never entered into the receiver's office until the advent of the Bryan-Sullivan régime. "I always remembered the instructions given me by ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of State, when I was appointed, that the funds of the receivership were a sacred Government trust and should be guarded and administered with a knowledge of that fact." As I have previously stated, it is said in the newspaper accounts of the hearings that Mr. Pulliam is himself a Democrat.

In view of the extremely uneasy temper of the inhabitants of Santo Domingo; in view of the fact that our relationship to that island was that of a fiduciary and a guardian; in view of the fact that Latin America was watching closely our conduct there; in view of the fact that United States partisan politics had always been rigidly excluded from the island; in view of repeated and enlightened utterances upon disinterested friendship for Latin America made by the "Apostle of (gold) Peace," it would seem as if the United States had a right and a duty to ask the writer of the Vick letter to indite another epistle—a letter of resignation as Secretary of State. [Applause.]

It is a comfort to know that the newspapers and magazines of the country have given the incident the treatment which it deserves. At the end of these remarks, I shall append some additional comments, mostly from newspapers inclined to be friendly to the present administration. The Literary Digest for January 30, last, sums up the situation thus:

The impression made upon the independent press may be gathered from the Springfield Republican's declaration that Mr. Bryan's utterances "deeply alarm as well as affront the best citizenship of the land," the New York Evening Post's characterization of his letter as "probably the most disgraceful thing ever written by any American Secretary of State," and the New York Globe's sweeping assertion that "in our whole history there has not been such an exhibition of indecency by a man in high office." Several independent papers hint that Mr. Bryan should now pen another letter containing his resignation. Mr. Bryan is revealed to the country, according to the New York Tribune (Rep.), as "a Secretary of State without sensitiveness and without shame." But the Democratic New York World is hardly less severe. Mr. Bryan, it says, "is a good man, an amiable man, and a well-meaning man, but he has no common sense and no appreciation of the dignity of his office." "Even Charles F. Murphy," declares the World, "would have hesitated to send that kind of a letter to a subordinate Tammany official. He would have regarded it as too raw," and the World is convinced that, "by his folly and foolishness, Mr. Bryan has given the Republicans legitimate issue that the country will not hear the last of for many a day." Similarly, the Charleston News and Courier (Dem.) admits that "the letter to Vick will be used for all its worth, and that it will alienate thousands who have been looking to the Democracy as the party of progress."

The National Civil Service Reform League, at its annual midwinter meeting held in New York on the 7th of this month, after thoroughly discussing the Bryan-Vick letter, adopted the following resolution:

The National Civil Service Reform League profoundly regrets that the Secretary of State appears to have suggested and advocated and later publicly justified the use of the customs service of Santo Domingo, constituting a national trust for the benefit of another American Republic and its creditors, to reward partisan services in our domestic politics.

The National Civil Service Reform League, by its governing body, declares this course plainly inconsistent, not only with fidelity to the principles of the merit system and with the purpose avowed in the Democratic national platform of 1912, to make "merit and ability the standard of appointment and promotion rather than service to a political party," but with ordinary good faith toward the Dominican Republic and its creditors. It hereby publicly expresses its earnest hope that the President will promptly take such effective action as may prevent the practical application of a policy so generally and justly condemned.

Seriously, why does Mr. Bryan continue on as Secretary of State? It must be inconvenient for him to adjust his occasional visits to the State Department so as not to interfere with his speaking engagements elsewhere; and, furthermore, the necessity which he is under in Washington of occasionally speaking without compensation must, in accordance with familiar economic laws, somewhat reduce the numbers of those who will later pay to hear him lecture. A newspaper account, dated November 30, 1914, analyzed the amount of time which the Secretary has been able to devote to the foreign affairs of the Government during the previous six weeks—six weeks that were pregnant with sinister possibilities that the United States might be involved in the European war. Perhaps the article is worth reproducing in full:

BRYAN ON THE JOB 10 DAYS OUT OF 46.

WASHINGTON, November 30, 1914.

Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan devoted just 10 days of his time to the foreign affairs of the Government, over which his department has control, from October 14 to November 28, inclusive.

Mr. Bryan passed Friday in Washington, on his way from his estate in Florida to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he addressed the students of the University of Michigan Saturday evening.

From October 14 to November 10 Bryan was making political speeches in various parts of the country.

From November 10 until November 17 he was at the State Department.

Proceeding to his Florida estate on the latter date, he remained there until November 24.

Returning to Washington on November 24, he put in two days (Thanksgiving being a holiday and therefore not counting) at the State Department. On Friday night he closed his desk and entrained for Ann Arbor. He is scheduled to return on Tuesday next for a short stay.

TIME TO UNEARTH A JOB.

The Secretary of State's last act before leaving Washington for his recent sojourn in Florida was to unearth a $5,000 job—that as counsel for the Canadian Boundary Commission—and to confer it upon Manton M. Wyvel, his private secretary. The duties of this office, which is catalogued in the "lame duck" class, are purely nominal; the wage is good.

Until Mr. Bryan's departure for Florida a considerable portion of his time each day has been given to the reception of political friends and to tireless efforts to land them in jobs.

On the day before he turned over the affairs of the State Department to Assistants Lansing and Adee an American engaged in business in South America was compelled to wait for more than two hours while Mr. Bryan discussed patronage with political retainers. The business man's description illuminates a scene that has been typical in the State Department since Mr. Bryan became the head of it. It was:

"It was really amusing to me, because I had come from New York on a matter of diplomatic purport. As I sat waiting for the Secretary I procured a view of how business is not done in the State Department. Five men of the Bryan type held the attention of the head of the Foreign Department. I was by force of proximity compelled to hear fragments of the conversation. From what I heard I gleaned that the callers had been 'friends' since '96. Each of the callers was looking for a job.

GLAD TO SEE THEM.

"The Secretary of State was manifestly glad to see them. He blushed like a school girl at the words of praise showered upon him. He beamed appreciatively upon hearing assurances of future indulgence of such political ambitions as he may desire to exploit. All of the callers departed with manifest satisfaction over their prospects for being stacked up against the national pay roll."

As a New York headline facetiously phrased it the other day—just before Thanksgiving, in fact—"Secretary Bryan returns to Washington for the holidays."

The most recent development in the Santo Domingo situation of which I have knowledge is recited in a press dispatch from Santo Domingo, dated January 22, 1915, and reads as follows:

SANTO DOMINGO, January 22.

A sensation has been caused here by the discovery of defalcations in the funds of the department of public works, amounting to many thousand dollars. The public works of the Dominican Republic are expended under supervision of the United States Government in its capacity as trustee for the Dominican Republic.

American officials are said to be involved in the misappropriations, but no detailed information is obtainable.

I am informed from official sources that sufficient evidence has been obtained to begin prosecutions, but that the American minister, James M. Sullivan, has caused further action in the matter to be postponed.

Mr. Sullivan is said to have acted upon instructions from Secretary of State Bryan, but it can not be learned why Washington desired the matter to be kept quiet at this time.

It is, indeed, to be hoped that Senator Phelan, during his stay in Santo Domingo, will succeed in getting to the bottom of this new scandal, as well as of those which have preceded it.

There are many other phases of the recent activity of the State Department which I should like to discuss, supplementary to my speech of April 2, 1914, on the diplomatic service; I should like to pay my tribute to the thoughtful invitation tendered to the navy of Switzerland to participate in the opening of the Panama Canal; I should like to refer to the strange case of Mr. George Fred Williams, minister to Greece, a lawyer who almost made himself king; I should like to deal with the case of Mr. Madison R. Smith, who was the first white man who ever served as minister to the Haitian end of the island of Santo Domingo, who has eulogized the Secretary of State and Assistant Secretary Osborne as "the greatest diplomats of all time," to assist whom the State Department was obliged to rush down a special secretary to untangle the routine work of his office and who was recently permitted to return permanently to the classic shades of Farmington, Mo.; I should like to take up the case of Robert E. Jeffery, of Newport, Ark., recently appointed minister to Uruguay—a job which, it is said, the Secretary of State turned over bag and baggage to the Arkansas Senators to parcel out to some unusually deserving Democrat from their State; I should like to speculate why young Mr. Hornibrook, of Albany, Oreg., unknown even by name to any of the three Oregon Members of Congress, was appointed minister to Siam—unless, indeed, it is the fact that he is connected with a little weekly newspaper, the Albany Democrat; I should like to scrutinize the ethics of the appointment as vice consul of John L. Cutright, of Lincoln, Nebr., who is the son of an erstwhile political enemy of Mr. Bryan, now reconciled by this appointment, and who wrote so indiscreetly pro-German statements that it was necessary summarily to recall him from his English post. All these are fruitful fields of inquiry, but time is now lacking for any adequate treatment. I may take occasion at some later date to refer to some of them more in detail.

As I said at the outset, my desire has not been to state the entire case against Secretary Bryan, but simply by discussing at some length the history of his relations with a small and relatively obscure sister republic to show the point of view which dominates his public service. The man whom he sent to Santo Domingo is said by so competent and dependable an observer as Mr. Vick to be directly responsible for the revolution that is now raging there. And yet Mr. Sullivan was probably not the worst of the Bryan brood of "diplomats" that went out a year and a half ago to Latin America. We should take warning before even worse results have befallen us. The years 1914 and 1915 will perhaps be reckoned in history as the most momentous of all time. Mighty transitions occur almost daily and pass almost unnoticed. The place of the United States in the world remains to be established. Peace or war may hang upon the word of our representatives at home or abroad. Our prosperity and indeed our very existence may depend upon the nod of the President and his chosen assistants. Is it not, then, the right and obligation of every thinking American to demand that the United States be given a Secretary of State who, by ability, unswerving attention to duty, experience, and disinterestedness, may in these most critical of all days be worthy of being compared with the great men in that office upon whom the country has so often depended and of whom it has always been proud?

Some of the newspaper editorials to which I have referred are as follows:

[New York Tribune, Jan. 16, 1915.]

A SECRETARY OF STATE WITHOUT SENSITIVENESS AND WITHOUT SHAME.

No one acquainted with Mr. Bryan's true character could have expected him to wince at the publication of the shameful Vick letter. Since he became Secretary of State he has betrayed a strange lack of sensitiveness to his surroundings. It was a nonappreciation of the delicacies of conduct and traditions of dignity respected by other Secretaries of State which led him into his grotesque exploits on the Chautauqua circuit. His announcement that he felt obliged to supplement his $12,000 salary with the gate receipts of barnstorming lectures was only the outcropping of a deep streak of coarseness in his makeup.

That coarseness has cropped out again and again in his attitude toward appointments to the diplomatic corps. He has tried to treat all the officers he could lay his hands on as party patronage. He is the only Secretary of State in our time who ever set out openly to loot the foreign service. When Mr. Gresham was Secretary in Mr. Cleveland's second term he allowed Josiah Quincy to loot the consular offices. But never before in any excess of partisan covetousness has the head of the department dreamed of sending to a diplomatic agent executing in a foreign country a trust for that country a shameless demand for patronage odds and ends such as Mr. Bryan served on Mr. Walker W. Vick in San Domingo.

"Now that you have arrived and are acquainting yourself with the situation, can you let me know what positions you have at your disposal with which to reward deserving Democrats," wrote the brazen spoilsman who is now filling the place held by Root, Hay, Olney, Blaine, Bayard, Fish, and Seward. Secretaries of State in the old days may have incidentally looked out for party friends in making appointments; but they gave nine-tenths to ninety-nine one-hundredths of their time and thought to the weighty affairs of diplomacy. It is Mr. Bryan's unpardonable offense that in these days of far higher standards of fitness and merit in public appointments he has given nine-tenths to ninety-nine one-hundredths of his time and thought (when not lecturing for private profit) to using the foreign service as an agency to diminish unemployment among former Democratic campaign workers.

Mr. Bryan is not abashed by the publication of the Vick letter. On the contrary, he glories in his spoilsmanship. And why should he not? He simply applied in San Domingo (although the status of the financial commission there is somewhat exceptional) the same policy which filled most of the South American and Central American missions with Bryan protégés entirely innocent of diplomatic experience. In order to pay political debts hanging over from the campaign of 1908 he turned out of office American ministers who had risen from the secretarial grades and had established their capacity as diplomats. It was the same policy which forced the retirement of Ambassador William W. Rockhill, an expert who had spent most of his active life in diplomatic work. Making a place at Petrograd for Pindell, of Peoria, on the terms enlarged on in the celebrated letters attributed to Senator "JIM HAM" LEWIS differed in no essential from the attempted loading down of the Dominican Commission with "deserving Democrats" of small-fry caliber.

Mr. Bryan's incumbency in the State Department has been a failure and a scandal because he has never realized the dignity and importance of his office. He has made American diplomacy a Chautauqua circuit joke. But the fault is not exclusively his. Mr. Wilson has been obliged to tolerate him to a certain extent. Yet that tolerance has been too often flavored with sympathy.

Mr. Bryan's crude spoilsmanship has been permitted to go unrebuked, and even the Vick letter, which the Secretary now glories in, can hardly put a greater strain on the President's capacity for covering over his subordinate's vagaries than have a dozen previous incidents equally illuminative of Mr. Bryan's unfitness for his post. The Pindell letters were repudiated, yet they showed just as clearly as does the Vick document that American diplomacy will be without honor either here or abroad so long as its conduct remains in Mr. Bryan's hands. Mr. Wilson, however, can not escape responsibility for the continuance of the Bryan régime.

[New York World, Jan. 16, 1915.]

MR. BRYAN'S LETTER.

President Wilson's exultation over his success through the agency of postmasters in getting jobs for 30,000 idle workingmen was cold and formal in comparison with Secretary Bryan's delight at the prospect that he was going to find official places in Santo Domingo for some of his worthy friends. "You have had enough experience in politics," he wrote to Mr. Vick, American receiver of Dominican customs, "to know how valuable workers are when the campaign is on, and how difficult it is to find suitable rewards for all the deserving."

Mr. Vick's experience, of course, must be brief and uneventful in comparison with Mr. Bryan's, and so anything that the latter may have to say as to the difficulty of rewarding deserving Democrats must be accepted as the well-matured views of a veteran. In truth, while much fault has been found with the Secretary's conduct of the State Department, no one can say that he has ever permitted diplomacy or chautauquas to interfere with the pleasant task of getting offices for such meritorious Democrats as have adhered loyally to his political fortunes.

Let us all admit at once that no other distinguished American has ever shown more industry and gratitude in his humane desire to reduce unemployment among free-silver Democrats; but why did he have to write a letter on the subject?

[New York Herald, Jan. 16, 1915.]

In his letter to Mr. Vick Mr. Bryan reveals himself a spoilsman of the same stripe as Mr. Charles F. Murphy and Mr. Roger C. Sullivan. The only persons who will be at all surprised by the revelation are those who have been taking him at his own estimate of himself shining through smug professions of political righteousness while chautauquacking.

The fact is that Mr. Bryan's main business as Secretary of State has been job hunting for his henchmen, always with preference for those who were true to the "sacred ratio" in 1896.

The revelation of the Vick letter will not injure Mr. Bryan in the eyes of office-hunting Democrats. They, as he, are firmly wedded to the Jacksonian doctrine that to the victors belong the spoils.

But, as President Wilson made clear at Indianapolis, the independent voter holds the balance of power in American politics these days, and the independent voter expects service—not job hunting or mere office holding—from officials of his Government.

[From the Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen, Jan. 18, 1915.]

BRYAN TO VICK.

The placid and unctuous Mr. Bryan must be a bit disturbed at the howl that is going up at the discovery of his letter to W. W. Vick, late a receiver of customs in San Domingo, in the course of which he asked that official to look around and see if there were not some more fat jobs to bestow on deserving Democrats from the United States. The text of the letter was something like this:

"Now that you have arrived and are acquainting yourself with the situation, can you not let me know what positions you have at your disposal with which to reward deserving Democrats? Whenever you desire a suggestion from me in regard to a man for any place there call on me.

"You have had enough experience in politics to know how valuable workers are when the campaign is on and how difficult it is to find suitable rewards for all the deserving. I do not know to what extent a knowledge of Spanish is necessary for employees. Let me know what is required, together with the salary, and when appointments are likely to be made."

Mr. Bryan is at least frank about it, nor does he now make any attempt to disavow his letter. It is his doctrine that, in the administration of a sacred trust conferred by politics, even in other countries than our own, the great and first commandment is to bestow the offices on the deserving party workers. If, in the process, the choice falls upon a man of ability as well, it is a happy accident and the public service does not in that case suffer. If in other cases it does suffer—as it did in some of the instances in San Domingo—never mind; the deserving Democrats have at least been paid off, and that's what we're here for!

The chorus of protest against this candid confession of a super-Jacksonian doctrine of spoilsmanship comes from the leading journals of both great parties. Mr. Bryan is frankly informed, for example, by the Springfield Republican that he has inflicted an "irreparable injury" on the whole Wilson administration, and the demand for his immediate resignation comes from about every quarter. The chances are, however, that Mr. Bryan will not resign, and that Mr. Wilson will not ask him to. Mr. Wilson is about as fatuously pachydermatous in such matters as Mr. Bryan himself and will probably go right along, not only tolerating Mr. Bryan but blandly approving all his works, including the letter to Mr. Vick on the primal necessity of putting none but faithful Democrats on guard, no matter what becomes of the good of the service. Of course, there is serious danger of splitting the party by breaking with Mr. Bryan, but there is a danger no less serious in keeping in with him. The administration is in a position not unlike that of the soldier who remarked: "I'll be hanged if I don't, and I'll be shot if I do." Mr. Wilson can not afford to retain Mr. Bryan, whose presence is increasingly a millstone hung about the administrative neck; and yet he can not afford to come to an open breach with him. It is this which makes the Springfield Republican—a strong friend of the President and of his general type—to remark gloomily that the Vick letter from Mr. Bryan's hand has done "irreparable injury" to the whole Wilson régime. If it hasn't, it should.

The trouble with the ancient ideal of partisan spoilsmanship professed so candidly by Mr. Bryan is that so many pesky independents in these days don't accept it, and their approval is highly desirable to secure. Inasmuch as it is they who commonly dictate the result of elections, by voting this way or that according to their belief, it ill becomes the party benefited by their momentary favor to take it as an ample warrant for a saturnalia of spoils mongering, whether that party be the Republican or the Democratic. Mr. Wilson in particular, being a "minority President," has small ground for assuming that a charter was conferred upon him in 1912 by the popular will to use the Government patronage to reward Bryanistic Democrats. In a word, Mr. Bryan's retrospective gratitude is outrageously bad politics, as well as discreditable statesmanship. It can do nothing but ruin his chief, for the sake of paying off a lot of Mr. Bryan's own political debts.

[Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen, Jan. 19, 1915, from the Springfield Republican.]

MR. BRYAN, ARCH SPOILSMAN.

The very grave damage Secretary Bryan has done the Wilson administration by his staggering letter on jobs for "deserving Democrats," written to Mr. Vick, formerly United States receiver of customs in San Domingo, is irreparable. Nothing Mr. Bryan has ever said or done crystallizes his repulsively Jacksonian spoils principles like this letter.

It is nothing new that he is still living in the political atmosphere of Van Buren, Marcy, and Thurlow Weed in matters relating to the civil service. With all of his zeal for "reform," Mr. Bryan has frankly remained a spoilsman curiously filled with absurd notions to the effect that "life tenure" even in minor offices was undemocratic and that party workers should be rewarded at the expense of administrative efficiency in public office.

But the Vick letter is more of a shock than it could have been when Mr. Bryan first ran for President, nearly 20 years ago, upon a platform that gave precious little encouragement to civil service reformers. When he was the third time a candidate, in 1908, he seemed to have become more civilized in this particular, for the Denver platform drafted by himself declared: "The laws pertaining to the civil service should be honestly and rigidly enforced to the end that merit and ability shall be the standard of appointment and promotion rather than services rendered to a political party."

Finally in office, although not in the position of chief, Mr. Bryan has used all his influence in the administration to reward "deserving Democrats" solely because of "services rendered to a political party." That he has been an unblushing job hunter for party friends, even at the expense of San Domingo, is proved so conclusively by the Vick letter that he defiantly acknowledges its authenticity. "I am glad to have the public know," he said yesterday, "that I appreciate the services of those who work in politics and feel an interest in seeing them rewarded, and, as Mr. Vick received his appointment for political work, I thought he was a good man to address and express my opinion on the subject."

Mr. Bryan's pachydermous and benighted attitude, it is needless to point out, outrages that powerful sentiment in the country which sustains the merit as against the political principle in filling administrative offices, a sentiment which is the product of a generation of laborious agitation and which will not suffer the civil service of the United States to be cast back into the muck heap of spoilsmongering without a bitter protest and struggle. Mr. Bryan's offense is magnified many times because of his high position in the administration, for he has an influence second only to that of the President himself, and such unblushing utterances from him must deeply alarm as well as affront the best citizenship of the land.

If Mr. Bryan "made" the Wilson administration, it is very possible that he will also destroy its chances of indorsement by the people in the next presidential election. His political support of the President has thus far been of incalculable value in maintaining a strong administration party in Congress, and it is virtually impossible for Mr. Wilson to continue in a party leadership that admits of no challenge without Mr. Bryan's sincere and cordial aid. That is why the damage done by the Vick letter is irreparable. The President can not force the retirement of Mr. Bryan without dividing his party and wrecking his administration.

[From the Boston Advertiser, Jan. 19, 1915.]

BRYAN MUST GO.

We have been disposed, while the present war in Europe was going on, to make every possible allowance of charity and forbearance for the blunders of the present administration. But in the name of national decency and national honor it must be plain to every self-respecting American to-day that William Jennings Bryan should not be retained in his present post, at the head of the Department of State, a moment longer than it will take President Wilson to demand formally and in some public fashion Mr. Bryan's resignation.

It is useless to try to mince matters. Bryan has shown himself unfit for the position. His ideals of filling the diplomatic and consular service with his impossible creatures of the Sullivan stripe; his determined attempts to slather the whitewash brush over the worst scandals that have protruded themselves and that now smell to high heaven; these things make it impossible for President Wilson to retain him any longer without losing his own self-respect, as well as the respect of the people of this country.

Not only must Secretary Bryan resign; he must resign at once, in such prompt and sudden fashion as will leave no room for doubt that he goes at the demand of the President and of the American people alike.

The Santo Dominican scandal is the worst exposure of the State Department's blundering, but it is not the only one. Mr. Bryan's appointees have been making trouble in Europe, too—how much we can learn probably only at the close of the war. Bumptious, ignorant, open to suspicion on other grounds, the antics of some of these men have failed to attract much public notice, only because graver issues are at stake over there. The way in which the State Department tried to force Ambassador Herrick from his post at the time when his services were vitally necessary is an old story.

But the Santo Dominican exposures present the most enlightenment because this is the only case in which all the facts have been brought out plainly. We have, at the outset, a deal of Tammany men who wanted to exploit Santo Domingo to fill their own pockets. We have these unscrupulous men picking their tools and telling Bryan whom to put there. We have some of these men swaggering around among the punctilious people of the little island with the manners of barroom toughs and the morals of gold-brick operators. We see the honest Americans who still remain in office in the islands protesting—not to Bryan alone, but to the President, too, it should be remembered—with the result that the honest men had to resign to retain their self-respect. And when men came to Bryan with the proofs, we have seen the chilly reception which they had to endure.

But in public, while all this was going on, we saw Mr. Bryan—saintly as a Pecksniff or a Chadband—preaching "our obligations to the people of the Latin-Americas," expatiating on our obligations to treat them with scrupulous honesty and the highest ideals of Christian statesmanship. The unctuous hypocrisy shown in the contrast between public profession and private performance have been made patent to the people of Latin America much longer than to the people of North America. At this time of all times, when the American people have begun to desire the closest possible relations of friendship and honorable amity with the States of Latin America, it is self-evident that Bryan must not be kept in office a day longer than is necessary to complete the plans for his ignominious exit. The good faith and the honor of the American Nation demand his hasty and undignified expulsion from the State Department.

This can not be a partisan question. Neither the President nor the Democratic Party can afford for an instant to stand by or to defend Bryan. The facts in the case, the clear, convincing testimony of all the principals in the Santo Domingo investigation, bear incontestable testimony to Mr. Bryan's frantic use of the whitewash brush to conceal the facts from the American people. There was even given out from the State Department what purported to be a summary of an "impartial investigation" conducted by some disinterested men clearing Minister Sullivan; and on the basis of that investigation the State Department attempted to close the case. It now appears that the alleged investigation was a downright fake. Not one of the men mentioned had consented to touch the affair, and certainly not one gave Mr. Bryan the right to use his name in that connection.

The frantic appeals of Mr. Bryan to American agents in Santo Domingo to let him know at once of any opportunity to fill the service with his spoilsmen, his evident willingness to crowd political derelicts into the public service, these are among the other bad features of his rule in the State Department. An out-and-out spoilsman of the Bourbon type, packing public offices with the political wrecks who were "down and out," his influence upon our public service will not soon be cleansed away unless his appointees are sent packing, too, when he goes. In any case, however, he must go; and he can not go any too soon.

[Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen, Jan. 20, 1915, from the Providence Journal.]

"A VERY NASTY MESS."

A witness before the commissioner appointed by the President to investigate the behavior of the American minister to Santo Domingo, "considers this a very nasty mess."

It is one of the nastiest that cheap politics has ever produced.

The nastiness is magnified because the cheap politics have their source in the highest quarters, the State Department. And the offense to public sentiment is aggravated by the fact that the consequences are not alone of domestic concern, but involve our foreign relations.

The national good faith has been discredited by the cheap politician in whom the President has chosen to confide it—Bryan. An intelligent administration of the State Department has not been looked for from the beginning. The neglect and blundering of Bryan have simply justified general expectation. But the American people might have supposed that the administration would be clean-handed.

Santo Domingo is as remote from the mind of the average American as Tibet. A nasty mess down there might have escaped public attention had it not become too nasty for one of the administration's own representatives to endure. Much of the testimony so far furnished is ex parte. But, at least—considering that it is out of the mouths of Democrats, testifying before a Democratic investigator and relating entirely to Democratic officials—it will not be impugned on the ground of partisan prejudice.

That accidental exhibit of documentary evidence—the Bryan letter to Vick, receiver of customs for Santo Domingo, imploring assistance to find jobs for "deserving Democrats" on the Dominican Government pay roll—is an unanswerable indictment. The disclosure amounts to a contemptible abuse of public trust. Minister Sullivan's case becomes of secondary importance. The President should call for Bryan's resignation from the Cabinet. It is no longer a question of fitness, but of decency.

Washington's tutelage of Santo Domingo was undertaken some 10 years ago. The arrangement is that an American representative has charge of the Dominican customs; and he turns over to the Dominican Government 45 per cent, withholding 55 per cent for the liquidation of the foreign debt. There is no meddling with domestic affairs, no restraint on the habit of getting up revolutions—but revolutionists must let the customhouses alone. Santo Domingo's credit is being restored, and the menace of foreign intervention for the collection of debts is removed.

This prosperity seems to have invited a descent on Santo Domingo by contractors of the Tammany stripe. The charges against Minister Sullivan indicate that the scheme was to organize a monopoly of public works down there. Santo Domingo was to be exploited. The treasury, which the Government at Washington has heretofore tried to conserve, was to be looted.

Not a "service to mankind," but "a very nasty mess."

BRYANIZED DOLLAR DIPLOMACY.

The State Department under the dollar-diplomacy ideas of Secretary Knox may have been an agency for the easy use of financial freebooters in tropical America or elsewhere. But the State Department under William J. Bryan is giving instances of equal subserviency.

Whatever else may develop in the investigation of James M. Sullivan's appointment as minister to Santo Domingo, its absurd unfitness has already been amply proved, as well as its intimate relations with scheming contractors and exploiters. What Sullivan at the worst may be in this unsavory mess remains to be determined. But what Sullivan at the best has been shown to be is the tool of those contract workers of the Tammany political school who secured his appointment.

Sullivan's qualifications for a diplomatic post were so notoriously lacking that he himself apparently never dreamed of seeking such a position until he was put up to it by the Jarvis-Banco Nacional interests in the island. Secretary Bryan could not have been fooled in the first instance if he had been alive to his duties. But his later whitewashing of Sullivan and suppression of evidence of unfitness forced upon his attention show that from first to last his chief object had been to take care of "deserving Democrats."

The scandal has reached a stage where it must command the anxious attention of the President.

[From the Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen, Jan. 23, 1915.]

SLAMMING MR. BRYAN.

There have been lots of cutting things said about William Jennings Bryan, first and last, by his political opponents, all the way from 1896 to 1915; but it remains for a valiant supporter of the Democratic administration to hand him the most staggering blow yet delivered since he was revealed by his own correspondence to Mr. Vick as "the prince of job hunters." Let us quote a few paragraphs from the editorial recently printed by the New York Nation (and Evening Post) in which the matter was considered, merely adding that this differs only in bitterness of criticism from similar comments printed in other journals quite as friendly to President Wilson and his party:

"This letter is probably the most disgraceful thing ever written by any American Secretary of State. The trail of the spoilsman is over it all. Note the date, August 20, 1913. At that time many critical matters were pressing upon the attention of the State Department. The Mexican volcano was rumbling toward explosion. Yet the Secretary of State, his anterooms and corridors stuffed as they were for weeks with political dependents of his clamoring for jobs, was giving his thought to offices, and began looking around in helpless Santo Domingo to find 'suitable rewards' for those who had done party work for him. Such a letter on official State Department paper! Rummage the archives from the beginning, and you will find nothing so unworthy, so humiliating, so near an approach to the infinitely mean.

"What makes the affair peculiarly contemptible is the fact that Mr. Bryan was trying to get jobs for his friends in a service which the United States had undertaken as a solemn trust. On that subject no one had made finer flourishes than Mr. Bryan himself. We were to prove the 'disinterested' friendship of this Nation. We were to remove suspicion by setting our face like a flint against anything that looked like exploitation or self-seeking. And after all these noble words, this indecent request: 'Let me know what positions you have at your disposal!' The former receiver of Dominican customs has put in evidence what were his instructions from a former Secretary of State.

Mr. ROOT enjoined the receiver that his work was essentially that of a trustee. He was to consider himself as an administrator of trust funds. As a matter of fact, until the advent of Mr. Bryan in the State Department, there was no hint that politics had been allowed to sway the Dominican service discharged by us. Certainly there were no such scandals as have ever since been crawling to the surface. But why talk of scandals among subordinates when the chief scandal of all has been brought directly home to the Secretary of State?"

It was known long ago that no comparison existed between such a Secretary of State as Mr. Bryan and such a Secretary of State as ELIHU ROOT. The latter is probably the most accomplished statesman we have living among us to-day, and Mr. Bryan about as dunderheaded a public official as ever got into prominence. Yet Mr. ROOT was a rich and wicked corporation lawyer, and Mr. Bryan is a poor and pious lover of his fellow men! What a pity to have the latter shown up as so disregardful of a sacred governmental trust, in contradistinction to the former! But the Nation goes on to say:

"Admit that Mr. Bryan wrote the letter without one twinge. What does that prove? What but that the Secretary of State is so dense where he ought to be delicate, so callous where he ought to be sensitive, that he does things to shock the general sense of propriety and of morals without the glimmer of an idea that he is giving offense? Than this no severer condemnation could be passed upon a public man. We saw a revelation of such dull apprehension on Mr. Bryan's part when he went off Chautauqua-circuiting for money and fell into a rage when he found that the mass of the people either made fun of him or denounced him for making rags of the dignity of his office. That was bad enough, but his spoils-grabbing letter is worse. It is worse in itself, and it is worse as revealing the kind of appalling unconsciousness with which Mr. Bryan does discreditable things."

That's just it, exactly. Mr. Bryan hadn't the remotest idea he was not doing right. He even "laughed" when admitting that he wrote the letter, apparently never dreaming that he was bringing down the house upon his own devoted head by his effrontery. He must, in view of the way the entire country has jumped on him since, be a very perplexed and troubled man—for nothing bothers one who is sincerely anxious to do right so much as the overwhelming verdict that he has done a thing so grossly and obviously wrong as to invite universal condemnation. Mr. Bryan must be both puzzled and distressed, but it is highly improbable that even now he sees anything wrong in what he wrote or did. Such is the obtuseness of the man. He ought to resign, of course, and Mr. Wilson should not rest until he has compelled him to; but that either man will do either thing is too good to believe.

[From the Boston Advertiser, Feb. 3, 1915.]

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

When the astounding revelations were first made, as to the policies under which the State Department was conducted, we hoped that President Wilson would act in the only possible effectual way to end that scandal. But he is showing himself as narrow a partisan as Bryan himself. Whatever Bryan stands for—and we sincerely regret that it is so—President Wilson stands for.

When it was first known that Bryan had made the State Department an employment bureau for "deserving Democrats"; when his plaint was first made public "how valuable workers are when the campaign is on, and how difficult it is to find suitable rewards for the deserving," the public looked to see the President in righteous protest against peddling the places in our diplomatic service as the reward of political jobbery. Beers, Vick, Pulliam, and all the others say, however, that all the facts were laid before the President long before the general public knew of the scandal. And it appears that these men were told either to keep their mouths shut or to get out of office.

When Sullivan astounded Latin Americans by holding his official levees in a condition of semideshabille the protests went to the White House. When the grave charges of political influence in the Dominican finances were formulated, they went to the White House. Now that a deficit of something like $15,000,000 is reported, and a new scandal is certain to be unearthed, we are told that the White House was warned last year of the dangers of mixing politics and business. But the President has stood resolutely by Bryan, because of his sympathy with Bryan's Bourbonism. And he stood by Sullivan, because the former associate of "Bald Jack" Rose was a Bryan politician.

In the notable speech made by W. M. Fullerton this week at Ford Hall the speaker declared that it was of absolutely vital importance to the United States at once to reach a definite diplomatic agreement, a settled understanding, with the nations of South and Central America. With a reticence in itself significant as to the basis for that warning, Mr. Fullerton, from his thorough knowledge of secret diplomacy in Europe, said that there could be "nothing more important" to the future safety of the United States.

Yet to-day we find all Latin America bitter over the revelations made as to the way in which Bryan has been peddling his offices in those countries as prizes among the "down and out" political fraternity of the Royal Bryan Rooters. When it is vitally necessary that our commercial relations should be closest, when all this hemisphere should be acting as one, we find the Bryan men in Latin America utterly without influence, utterly without initiative, absolutely a drag on every vital undertaking. What has been done that counts has been in spite of the bitter feeling which the blunderings of Bryan's loot of the offices have caused. Every business man in this country knows it. Every business man has been astounded by the indifference of the President to one of the worst scandals in national politics to-day.

And the pity of it is that good men in no less than 22 Latin American posts were displaced to make room for Bryan's "heelers."

Is the explanation of the President's astonishing attitude to be found in his recent Indianapolis speech?

A year ago all of us believed that Woodrow Wilson was the last man in public life to tolerate political rascality, to allow the public offices to be traded for political support. But the Woodrow Wilson of a year ago is not the man who spoke at Indianapolis, who threatened with "political extinction" every Democrat who dared to protest against the growing scandals of this administration. Reluctant as most of us have been to reach that conclusion, is there much room for doubt that the President, in order to make sure of a renomination, has determined to stand by the disgraceful Bryan policy through thick and thin; to keep him in office in spite of every new exposure; to sacrifice every consideration of high ideals in our foreign service for the sake of Bryan's support in the next Democratic national convention?

In taking that stand, the President shoulders the odium of the whole business. He has chosen deliberately. And with that choice must end his former promise of patriotic statesmanship.

[From the New York Sun, Feb. 18, 1915.]

THE NEW ERA IN WASHINGTON AND CARNEGIE HALL.

Owing to the exigencies of newspaper mechanics the Sun was prevented on Tuesday evening from assembling in juxtaposition two interesting announcements whose mutually illuminative significance obviously requires that they should be read together. We now bestow upon them that contiguity they so richly merit. The first of this twain was in a news dispatch:

"WORK TOO MUCH FOR BRYAN—SECRETARY ENLISTS AID OF FORMER TAFT OFFICIAL.

"WASHINGTON, February 16.

"Because of the rapidly multiplying problems confronting the State Department in connection with the European war Secretary Bryan has been forced to enlist the aid of Chandler P. Anderson, counselor to the department in the Taft administration, to act as an additional adviser.

"Announcement to this effect was made by Mr. Bryan this afternoon."

The second member of the pair was in the space devoted to advertising the amusements offered by far-sighted and enterprising entrepreneurs for the entertainment of this town:

"CARNEGIE HALL, WED. EVE., FEB. 24—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY BRYAN ON 'THE NEW ERA'—SEATS, $1.50 TO 25C. AT BOX OFFICE."

The proud consciousness of having done our duty is the sole reward we crave for the unsought and unpaid repetition of this notice, and we sincerely trust that the presence of Mr. Anderson in the Department of State will render it unnecessary for the Secretary of State to cancel his lecture engagement, no matter what the international situation may be on February 24.

In addition to the excerpts which appear in the above-quoted editorial of the Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen, dated January 23, 1915, The Nation says further:

The shocking letter by Secretary Bryan put in evidence in the Santo Domingo inquiry, was really a by-product of that investigation. What is being looked into, at the President's direction, is the doings of Minister Sullivan. He has been charged with grave improprieties and derelictions. When he was appointed there was much lifting of eyebrows at the choice of a man with such a record for such a post. The position was one of the few reserved by long custom for colored men, but the Department of State explained that it wanted a man of special competence to deal with the delicate and complex questions arising in the Dominican Republic. This was felt at the time to be a pretense. Sullivan's selection and his career in Santo Domingo make it a plain sham and fraud. And the unblushing way in which Mr. Bryan at once appealed to Mr. Vick, the new American receiver of Dominican customs, to let him know how many "deserving Democrats," at what salaries, could be foisted upon the Dominican service, shows what was the chief thing in his mind.

We know of no defense of Mr. Bryan in this matter which will not heighten his offense. It may be said that he was not aware that he was doing anything to be ashamed of. He never did take any interest in civil-service reform. The whole-hog principle always seemed about right to him. It was good Nebraska fashion to peddle out all available offices to one's friends. Nobody had so many needy friends as Mr. Bryan when he went to Washington. They were fairly encamped about him. Their pleading eyes looked up to him to be fed. How could he resist the appeal of his old campaigners who sat "three" in a chair in front of his door? And if jobs were to be had in Santo Domingo, why not go straight after them?

Those who, in their admirable simplicity, do God's will and know it not, are the subject of high praise by the poet. But what is to be said of those who do the will of the wicked and know it not? This at least may be said, that they will be regarded by intelligent Americans as having committed the unforgivable political sin, and to be unfit to represent them in high office. It is a calm judgment that Mr. Bryan has exhausted his usefulness to the administration, and is now a burden upon it. President Wilson must be wishing that the Secretary would write another letter—one containing his resignation.

Whereas during disturbed political conditions in the Dominican Republic debts and claims have been created, some by regular and some by revolutionary governments, many of doubtful validity in whole or in part, and amounting in all to over $30,000,000, nominal or face value;

And whereas the same conditions have prevented the peaceable and continuous collection and application of national revenues for payment of interest or principal of such debts or for liquidation and settlement of such claims; and the said debts and claims continually increase by accretion of interest and are a grievous burden upon the people of the Dominican Republic and a barrier to their improvement and prosperity;

And whereas the Dominican Government has now effected a conditional adjustment and settlement of said debts and claims under which all its foreign creditors have agreed to accept about $12,407,000 for debts and claims amounting to about $21,184,000 of nominal or face value, and the holders of internal debts or claims of about $2,028,258 nominal or face value have agreed to accept about $645,827 therefor, and the remaining holders of internal debts or claims on the same basis as the assents already given will receive about $2,400,000 therefor, which sum the Dominican Government has fixed and determined as the amount which it will pay to such remaining internal debt holders; making the total payments under such adjustment and settlement, including interest as adjusted and claims not yet liquidated, amount to not more than about $17,000,000;

And whereas a part of such plan of settlement is the issue and sale of bonds of the Dominican Republic to the amount of $20,000,000, bearing 5 per cent interest payable in 50 years and redeemable after 10 years at 102½ and requiring payment of at least 1 per cent per annum for amortization, the proceeds of said bonds, together with such funds as are now deposited for the benefit of creditors from customs revenues of the Dominican Republic heretofore received, after payment of the expenses of such adjustment, to be applied first to the payment of said debts and claims as adjusted, and second out of the balance remaining to the retirement and extinction of certain concessions and harbor monopolies which are a burden and hindrance to the commerce of the country, and third, the entire balance still remaining to the construction of certain railroads and bridges and other public improvements necessary to the industrial development of the country;

And whereas the whole of said plan is conditioned and dependent upon the assistance of the United States in the collection of customs revenues of the Dominican Republic and the application thereof so far as necessary to the interest upon and the amortization and redemption of said bonds, and the Dominican Republic has requested the United States to give and the United States is willing to give such assistance;

The Dominican Government, represented by its minister of state for foreign relations, Emiliano Tejera, and its minister of state for finance and commerce, Federico Velasquez H., and the United States Government, represented by Thomas C. Dawson, minister resident and consul general of the United States to the Dominican Republic, have agreed;

I. That the President of the United States shall appoint a general receiver of Dominican customs, who, with such assistant receivers and other employees of the receivership as shall be appointed by the President of the United States in his discretion, shall collect all the customs duties accruing at the several customs houses of the Dominican Republic until the payment or retirement of any and all bonds issued by the Dominican Government in accordance with the plan and under the limitations as to terms and amounts hereinbefore recited; and said general receiver shall apply the sums so collected as follows:

First, to paying the expenses of the receivership; second, to the payment of interest upon said bonds; third, to the payment of the annual sums provided for amortization of said bonds, including interest upon all bonds held in sinking fund; fourth, to the purchase and cancellation or the retirement and cancellation pursuant to the terms thereof of any of said bonds as may be directed by the Dominican Government; fifth, the remainder to be paid to the Dominican Government.

The method of distributing the current collections of revenue in order to accomplish the application thereof as hereinbefore provided shall be as follows:

The expenses of the receivership shall be paid by the receiver as they arise. The allowance to the general receiver and his assistants for the expenses of collecting the revenues shall not exceed 5 per cent unless by agreement between the two Governments.

On the first day of each calendar month the sum of $100,000 shall be paid over by the receiver to the fiscal agent of the loan, and the remaining collection of the last preceding month shall be paid over to the Dominican Government or applied to the sinking fund for the purchase or redemption of bonds, as the Dominican Government shall direct: Provided, That in case the customs revenues collected by the general receiver shall in any year exceed the sum of $3,000,000, one-half of the surplus above such sum of $3,000,000 shall be applied to the sinking fund for the redemption of bonds.

II. The Dominican Government will provide by law for the payment of all customs duties to the general receiver and his assistants, and will give to them all needful aid and assistance and full protection to the extent of its powers. The Government of the United States will give to the general receiver and his assistants such protection as it may find to be requisite for the performance of their duties.

III. Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States. A like agreement shall be necessary to modify the import duties, it being an indispensable condition for the modification of such duties that the Dominican Executive demonstrate and that the President of the United States recognize that, on the basis of exportations and importations to the like amount and the like character during the two years preceding that in which it is desired to make such modification, the total net customs receipts would at such altered rates of duties have been for each of such two years in excess of the sum of $2,000,000 United States gold.

IV. The accounts of the general receiver shall be rendered monthly to the Contaduria General of the Dominican Republic and to the State Department of the United States, and shall be subject to examination and verification by the appropriate officers of the Dominican and the United States Governments.

V. This agreement shall take effect after its approval by the Senate of the United States and the Congress of the Dominican Republic.

Done in four originals, two being in the English language and two in the Spanish, and the representatives of the high contracting parties signing them in the city of Santo Domingo this 8th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1907.

THOMAS C. DAWSON.
EMILIANO TEJERA.
FEDERICO VELASQUEZ H.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when I came into the House this morning I did not have the slightest idea of injecting myself into any discussion on the topics which form the subject of to-day's business. I listened to the arraignment of Mr. Sullivan by my friend from Massachusetts, and I have arisen to shed some light upon the subject, not because I am interested in the slightest way in the matter, but simply because I happen to know something about it.

For one of the standing of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], his attack on Mr. Sullivan on this floor was, to say the least, most amazing. I believe that ordinarily when one talks about a subject in a way that would involve the character of another man, he should at least in the interest of justice inform himself of the facts in the case.

I make two objections to the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]. First of all, the matter is now under investigation by a committee which has not yet finished taking the testimony; and, second, that the testimony at hand is mostly one-sided and against the minister to Santo Domingo, and that the gentleman did not submit even all of that, although he might without much effort had laid his hands upon it.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; with pleasure; because we want to have this thing correct.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman realizes that in these days the public must depend for enlightenment largely upon newspaper accounts of current events, and the gentleman knows to what extent newspapers are quoted and used on the floor. I have undertaken to read everything bearing on the case of Mr. Sullivan. I have undertaken to make no statement based merely upon my own inference or opinion. I shall be glad to furnish references to every statement I have made, and the sources thereof. In 30 or 40 minutes, of course, I could not quote verbatim the enormous mass of testimony. I tried to give a fair résumé of the testimony without even discussing the alleged contract frauds, the exact facts in connection with which seem to be in dispute.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HAMILL. I will.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Inasmuch as the reports are newspaper talk and fragmentary, is not that a greater reason why the gentleman should refrain from giving it until the official testimony is in?

Mr. ROGERS. All the testimony has been taken except the defense of Mr. Sullivan himself at Santo Domingo.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Then the gentleman is prejudging his case.

Mr. ROGERS. I am not; I have given the uncontroverted testimony of Democrats—of Mr. Vick, a favorite son of the Democratic administration and the personal representative of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAMILL. The gentleman says he has read all the available newspaper accounts. Let me say that he could not have done so. He speaks of Mr. Sullivan's connection as counsel with the case of "Bald Jack" Rose. Does he find anything in that which would reflect upon him? Consider that Mr. ROOT, who committed this sacred trust of Santo Domingo to somebody or other to carry out, was, so I understand, one of the counsel who defended William Tweed when he was tried and convicted of certain criminal charges. Again, if the gentleman had read one of the New York papers—I think the New York Sun—he would have found that Mr. Whitman, then New York district attorney, but now governor of New York, wrote a letter of indorsement for Mr. Sullivan, declaring that he aided the State and that his conduct in that case was very commendable.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not criticize the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Not just now, not until I finish the statement. Furthermore, when "Bald Jack" Rose took the stand—I have not the honor of the acquaintance of that distinguished personage, who, I believe, is now engaged on the lecture platform, and I am merely concerned with what he said—when he took the stand, he said, in effect, that he had a grudge against Sullivan, either then or after the trial, and when asked why, he said it was because Sullivan insisted that he tell the whole truth, and he did not want to tell the whole truth. Is there anything dishonorable about that? Let us be fair, since we are talking about men's characters.

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, the gentleman wants to be fair——

Mr. HAMILL. Absolutely, and if I am not it is unintentional, just as I feel that if the gentleman is not fair it is unintentional on his part.

Mr. ROGERS. The only mention I made of "Bald Jack" Rose was to refer to the fact that Sullivan had been his defender in the trial, and to say that that circumstance could not have been the reason for his selection as minister to the Dominican Republic; I think the gentleman will agree with me that my statement was correct.

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; but the remark was injected into the discussion not as an explanatory statement as to who Sullivan was, but in order to give an impression of the character of Sullivan by the character of his client.

Mr. ROGERS. I wanted to give a little local color, and that was absolutely the only reason for the reference.

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; but it is a rule of law that in quoting a statement you should quote the whole statement, and in describing Mr. Sullivan from the character of his client you ought to state all you know about him in connection with that client.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; but I want to say to the gentleman that I was accorded only 10 minutes, and if he will get me sufficient time to finish I will yield the whole day to him.

Mr. BRITTEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that "Bald Jack" Rose was now lecturing with the Secretary of State? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILL. I, of course, do not know; but, considering the fluency bordering on flippancy of the gentleman, I think he himself would make a splendid colecturer with Jack Rose. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. This whole controversy hinges on the statement of Walter Vick?

Mr. HAMILL. Absolutely.

Mr. MURDOCK. I read somewhere in the course of this controversy that somebody said that Vick was a "sorehead." What has the gentleman to say on that subject?

Mr. HAMILL. I think if the gentleman will read the newspapers he will find two or three statements to that effect, but I am not characterizing Mr. Vick or anybody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to yield me some more time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HAMILL. Ten minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have not the time to yield the gentleman all of that. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, just one other matter in connection with this case. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] narrated Commissioner Phelan's remarks to the effect that he thought the lord mayoralty consisted mostly in clothes, and that he did not take dinner with that official on that account; but if you had read further in the testimony—and I do not know whether this was in the newspapers and therefore can not object to my friend for not using it—you would have noticed that Mr. Phelan said that the man was so unconscious of the fact that he had committed an offense that on the next evening, I think it was, he took dinner with him, on which occasion he was surrounded with all the pomp and circumstance of his office. I have only this to say. I have no interest in this question one way or the other. I happen to know something about it, and I want to give what little I do know to the gentlemen of the House. This topic is under discussion. I say wait until all of the facts are before us and do not prejudge anybody. I am sure that on second thought my friend, who wants to be just, would not in any way intentionally do a man an injury. I say wait until this committee reports. My friend says that he understands there is nothing more to be taken except the defense of Mr. Sullivan. I understand there is a great deal of testimony to be taken on the very points he raised, namely, as to the acceptability of the minister to the people of the Dominican Republic.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to remind the gentleman that my speech was not an attack or intended as an attack on Mr. Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan was minister there as a result of the decision of the Secretary of State. My charge and my grievance are against the Secretary of State for his conduct of the Diplomatic Service. I wish the gentleman, before he sits down, would give a little attention to that aspect of the case.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is my province to defend a department which is so well able to take care of itself. Whether the Department of State acted wisely or unwisely will depend on the very thing that the gentleman assumes, as to whether or not these charges that he opens are true. But here is my opinion, if you want it, regarding the "deserving Democrat" letter. Of course, I know that the Republicans are so unquestionably altruistic and so possessed and obsessed with the frantic endeavor to serve the people and the people alone that they would not reward the deserving Republicans. Oh, no! But, outside of that, is it not proper for any department to select for certain positions where the occupant will have it within his power to either injure or assist the administration—is it not good statesmanship, as well as good politics, to select men who are in sympathy with them, and not men who are out of sympathy with them? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The qualifying adjective "deserving" does not necessarily mean anything wrong or sinister. A deserving public man is one who, of course, has rendered party service, but it means deserving in point of ability and attainments as well as in point of political service. You construe the Secretary's letter in a way that suits your own purpose, but it is equally susceptible of a construction such as I have indicated, which would be in favor of and to the credit of the Secretary of State, who wrote the letter. But I am not going to take up the time of the House longer.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I thank you for giving me this opportunity. I merely want to close with one sentence, and say, gentlemen, wait. In the name of American fairness, to which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] has appealed, let us wait until the entire question is investigated and the facts are before us, and then in the American way let us pronounce a just decision. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], and I would like to inquire how much time I have consumed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARRISON). The gentleman has 44 minutes remaining.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, whoever has traveled abroad and observed the manner in which this Government provides and maintains its diplomatic and consular offices as contrasted with the provision made by other nations must indeed feel ashamed of our neglect. The United States is a competitor for the world's trade, and if we are to secure that trade we must put forth efforts not only equal to those of our competitors, but we must surpass them. If we are to do this, we must establish our country in the confidence and estimation of the people whose trade we seek. We must impart to them some knowledge of the strength and character of the country which seeks their business. In my opinion, nothing will do more to this end than the maintenance of our diplomatic and consular representatives in those lands in a manner and dignity in harmony with this idea. Sound reasoning dictates that this should be our policy, and I welcome every step to this end.

It is for these reasons that I am especially interested in seeing favorable action by the House on those paragraphs on page 23 of this bill making provision for the acquisition of suitable premises or for the purchase of land and the erection thereon of a suitable building or buildings in which to house the consulate general, the United States court, the jail, the post office, and other offices of the United States at Shanghai, China, and for the purchase of a building located upon the land now leased to the consulate general of the United States at Yokohama, Japan, carrying in all appropriations of $362,275. I favor the appropriation in these two cases because I am aware of their merits. On broader grounds, and for similar reasons, I believe in the policy of Government-owned diplomatic and consular buildings.

COMMERCIAL IMPORTANCE OF SHANGHAI.

Shanghai is a city of nearly a million inhabitants, located on the Whangpoo River, a short distance from the coast. This river and its connecting waters is to China what the Amazon is to South America and the Mississippi is to the United States. Shanghai is at the same time the New York and New Orleans of China—the great financial and commercial center at the mouth of the principal watercourse, over which trade can be carried to one-third of the entire Empire, and the chief city of the great Yangtse Valley. The principal foreign banking houses, steamship offices, business houses, and foreign consulates of China are in Shanghai. Politically Shanghai is second only to Peking in importance; commercially it is by far the most important port of China and the Far East.

Nearly 42 per cent of the total trade of China goes through Shanghai. Her imports for 1913 amounted to over $178,000,000 and her exports to over $129,000,000. The volume of combined business passing through that port was therefore something over $307,000,000.

REASONS FOR A GOVERNMENT-OWNED CONSULATE.

The prestige that comes from external appearances is more marked in China than perhaps in any country in the world, and has a direct bearing on commercial success. The territory set aside for foreign habitation is quite limited. The number of available foreign buildings suitable for consular purposes is small, and Chinese buildings are in no way suitable. It is not easy, therefore, to obtain quarters large and convenient to commercial and shipping houses. All the principal foreign nations, especially the rivals of the United States for the trade of China, own dignified and often pretentious consular buildings. The United States is the only great Nation which does not own its consular and court buildings in Shanghai, the greatest port in China, notwithstanding that it has adopted the policy of acquiring Government-owned consulates.

The impression of power and size, so necessary to be created on the oriental mind, is of primal importance, for he often judges the strength, worth, and dignity of a nation by the residence of its representative. This fact is what Germany knows and appreciates, and it was with this view that she has built so extensively and grandly in the Orient. In view of the nation to which they belong and of our own increasing trade interests in this land of wonderful possibilities now opening to foreign trade exploitation, all true Americans would be ashamed to see our Nation go back to the undignified, inconvenient, and inadequate consular quarters formerly furnished by the American Government at Shanghai, while the representatives of other powers are so well provided for.

VALUE OF CHINA'S TRADE.

If you pause for a moment to consider that the Republic of China contains something over 400,000,000 of people; that in 1913 she imported nearly $428,000,000 worth of goods, and exported something over $306,000,000 worth; if you bear in mind that the relations existing between the Chinese Government and the Chinese people, and the Government of the United States and the people of the United States, are exceedingly friendly and cordial; that our Republic is regarded as the sincere and traditional friend of China, you will appreciate that with greater energy and initiative upon our part, with a more studious effort applied to capturing the Chinese trade, we could have increased our imports to that country greatly beyond the figure they reached.

Now, if we are to canvass the Orient in quest of our share of its lucrative commerce we must expect to proceed along those lines which have been determined the correct lines to travel. We can not expect to do business contrary to what others have found to be the best business policy and succeed. We certainly can not hope to build up respect for our Government and confidence in our commercial houses unless we appear before these people, who do not know us, in a way to win their respect and confidence. You know, and I know, that with many people appearances go a long way. It should not excite wonder that in the absence of a definite knowledge of you people should judge you by your appearance. It is therefore not surprising that in the absence of more adequate information the people of China and other foreign countries should judge us by the only evidence of our character they have daily before their eyes.

CHARACTER OF OUR REPRESENTATION.

And what evidence have they? Merchant ships flying our flag rarely enter a foreign port. Indeed, the Stars and Stripes are a curiosity in the Orient, unless they be seen on a man-of-war or some other Government-owned vessel stationed in Asiatic waters. And if these people fail to behold any evidence of our Republic manifested in the form of flags on vessels in their harbors, what other tokens have they by which to judge as to the kind and character of nation we are?

Other nations possess the buildings which their diplomatic and consular representatives occupy, maintain them in good condition, and thus create an impression of dignity, stability, and affluence. But the American diplomatic representative and consular officer must hold forth in some rented and temporarily converted private dwelling whose appearance and location make but a poor comparison beside the headquarters of those nations who are our trade competitors.

Is it any wonder, I ask, in the face of such evidence, the Chinaman, or resident of whatever country he may be, should misjudge our character? Surely, if other Governments find it a paying investment to provide befitting headquarters for their diplomatic and consular officers, we should find it equally as profitable to do likewise.

MARYLAND'S INTEREST.

I wish to make plain, Mr. Chairman, that Maryland is deeply interested in this subject. Representing, as I do, a State which has been one of the great commercial States of the Union, a State which embraces the most magnificent bay of the Nation, a bay which is ever alive with ships of commerce, it is but natural that those things which influence or affect our commerce should be of paramount importance to us.

I do not believe that interest in the merits of this subject is confined to those Representatives from our seaboard States; but I can readily understand why Representatives from our seaboard States should be more deeply interested than those hailing from the interior of our country. My people understand, as those of other nations have already learned, that those things which contribute to the increase of commerce are worthy of careful study and consideration. We know full well if other nations have found it to their financial interest to maintain their own buildings in foreign countries in which to house their diplomatic and consular representatives they have come to that conclusion after careful study of the subject, and if they have reached that conclusion, we believe that equal consideration upon our part would show that it would be a profitable thing for us to follow their example.

The people of Maryland have, to a large extent, always been especially interested in our country's commerce. Since the establishment of our Government Maryland has been a shipbuilding and ship-sailing State. Maryland sailors and seamen have always been a part of the crews of our men-of-war, and there is hardly a naval battle written in our country's history but what Marylanders took a prominent part.

For these reasons our interest is a natural one. We believe in helping those merchants who carry American goods to foreign shores. We realize that a merchant marine is indispensable, and we appreciate that in the contest for this foreign trade our merchants should have all the assistance and prestige that can be rendered them by our diplomatic and consular officers so situated in foreign lands as to make them influential with the people among whom they are domiciled. We realize that our consular and diplomatic officers can not attain the sphere of influence and usefulness they ought to occupy unless they enjoy a creditable standing among the people of those lands to which they are assigned. We believe that such a standing would be a material aid to us commercially, and for these reasons Maryland is keenly interested in the measure now before the House.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

That you may have some adequate conception of the extent of our interest, I wish to point out that in 1914 more than 732 vessels engaged in foreign commerce entered the port of Baltimore, in addition to 1,483 engaged in coastwise commerce. During this same period 826 vessels cleared from the port of Baltimore engaged in foreign commerce, and 1,833 vessels engaged in coastwise traffic.

Our exports in 1914 amounted to $106,852,045 and our imports were $29,687,729. Our total foreign trade was estimated at something in the neighborhood of $136,330,774. It is not remarkable, as you will observe, in view of this vast volume of foreign commerce, that this subject should be one which appeals directly and personally to my district.

We have always been large exporters to foreign countries, as well as importers from those countries. We have always been close to the elbow of competition, and being this close, we have learned what every man learns who engages in a formidable struggle with a competitor who is alive to his opportunities.

We have been taught that when men invest money along certain lines, even though those lines may appear unimportant and without value, it will generally be found upon closer examination that they are productive of good, and if they were not they would not be followed. We have learned that it pays to keep abreast of your competitor. Surpass him if you can, but if you can not surpass him, do not let him surpass you; do not fall behind and get in the vanguard. Now, our consular officers are our trade representatives. If we fail to give them the proper respectability through housing them under appropriate conditions, the people in foreign lands will not only look down upon them but they will look down upon us.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE.

The opening of the Panama Canal and the development of our merchant marine will naturally bring us in closer trade relations with many of the countries and people of South America. Our South American friends, with whom we will be endeavoring to do a greater business in the future, are an impressionable race. There can be no denying the fact that our failure to maintain in many of these countries consulates of a class and character favorably comparing with those of other foreign Governments has resulted in a comparison decidedly to our disadvantage and has exerted its influence upon our trade with those countries.

I am firmly of the opinion that, with the inauguration of a policy whereby our consular representatives will be housed in a style befitting their position as representatives of the great North American Republic, such a change will create a better opinion of us and a more favorable attitude toward the business interests of this country.

As between two merchants, one exhibiting every evidence of stability and the other minus those evidences, you would not hesitate a moment in placing your trade. It would go to the one in whom your confidence was the greater. On a larger scale, this is our situation in South America. We are the natural market for supplying many of their demands as well as the chief consumers of much of their raw materials; yet so lamentably have we failed in making the most of our opportunities that European countries have actually beaten us out of these markets at our very door. As an evidence of this, less than two years ago Dr. Lauro S. Muller, the Brazilian minister of foreign affairs, during a visit to this country pointed out that in 1913 our imports from Brazil amounted to nearly $124,000,000, while our exports to that country reached only a little over $34,000,000.

Now that we are awake to the necessity of an American-owned merchant marine and are to have vessels of our own, we should take another step forward and see that every legitimate and proper assistance that can be extended our trade getters in those countries be offered; and the best way to extend this assistance is through making apparent to the people of those countries whose trade we are seeking that they are trading with a first-class business country, and let the surroundings of our representatives bear evidence of that stability with which we would impress them.

A SOUND POLICY.

Permit me to direct the attention of the House to the fact that the ownership by this country of our diplomatic and consular headquarters abroad is not only a wise investment, when considered with reference to its influence in favor of our country, but that, judged purely from the standpoint of a business investment of the Government, it is a policy economically sound.

We can acquire the necessary property, build our embassies and consulates, and maintain them for a sum much less than we now pay in rent. I have heard it said by some men that they could rent a house at a sum less than the interest charged on the money required to purchase it, but I have never known of an instance where the Government could rent a building equally adequate and suitable for its needs for diplomatic or consular headquarters at a price anywhere near that for which the building could be built and maintained by our Government.

The average private building which can be secured by our Government for the use of its consular offices is, as a rule, unsuited to our particular needs. I understand that it is frequently the case that when the proper building can be secured it is unsuited for our use by reason of its location; then where the proper location is decided upon a suitable building is almost impossible to be obtained. The result is obviously a makeshift. Where our consulate is in the proper building it is generally to be found not in the right location.

It is apparent, therefore, that the only solution of the problem is Government-owned consulates, erected on Government-owned ground, permanently maintained by our Government for its use, as other Governments are already doing.

OUR CONSULAR EMPLOYEES.

I am acquainted to some extent with the character of men in our Consular Service and with the nature of the work they are doing. Of these men I can speak only in the highest terms. They are a splendid body of men, thoroughly qualified, competent, and efficient, and doing a valuable work. Probably no other Government in the world is securing more valuable services from its consular employees than those services which are being rendered our Government by the men in its service. Year after year their field of activity is being expanded and the value of their services becoming greater. Men of this character rendering services of such importance should certainly be adequately provided for by the Government they represent. Because of its good work in behalf of American trade and its aid to business men in the United States our Consular Service holds a warm spot in the heart of our business interests, and I am sure that these interests will emphatically approve of any measure the purpose of which is to give our Consular Service a better standing abroad than it now enjoys, and thus to increase its usefulness.

COMPENSATION OF DIPLOMATIC OFFICERS.

And while the opportunity is afforded I want to refer to one deplorable feature of our Diplomatic Service, namely, the neglect of our Government to bear the rental expenses of all our embassy buildings and our failure to pay our diplomatic representatives salaries commensurate with the positions they hold.

It is true that provision has been made for an embassy in Mexico City and that the President recently asked for the purchase of premises for diplomatic headquarters at Habana, Cuba. We now own our headquarters, at Peking, China; Tokyo, Japan; and Bangkok, Siam, and an appropriation was recently authorized for a new building at Tokyo. These were acquired under the act of Congress of February 17, 1911, providing for the purchase and erection of embassy, legation, and consular buildings abroad. If we continue along this line, of course we shall eventually possess adequate buildings in every foreign country where we will be warranted in constructing them; and we certainly need them.

In a number of countries the salaries received by our chief diplomatic officers, I am told, is hardly sufficient to discharge the rent of their official places of residence. These countries therefore can not be represented by other than men of wealth who can afford to work for the Government without any compensation whatever. But that is not the worst of it; for the usual expenses of entertaining, I am informed, amount to far in excess of the rental costs of suitable quarters for an embassy, with the result that our diplomatic officers must not only suffer the loss of salary, but contribute a substantial sum for the privilege of representing our Government in those countries in which these conditions obtain. As a result, the occupancy of these posts is necessarily confined to men of financial resources with the willingness to pay for what the Government itself should pay. Obviously our Diplomatic Service must have suffered. I make this statement with no reflection upon the men now in the service, or who have been engaged in it in the past, but merely upon the hypothesis that any condition which narrows the number of possible appointees to such posts to those enjoying incomes from private sources must necessarily exclude some men of real ability, precluded from serving by reason of their lack of the necessary financial means.

Our traditional attitude is one of deep-seated aversion to inequality of opportunity. Yet in this situation we find the most flagrant violation of this principle, and one which must necessarily operate to deprive our Diplomatic Service of some of the best men, and thereby prevent that service becoming, as it should be, the embodiment of the greatest skill, experience, and efficiency.

CONCLUSION.

Many reforms in our Diplomatic and Consular Service have been brought about recently. We need the very best men we can secure in the foreign service of this country. We require men of genuine talent and ability, and when we have secured such men, and they have satisfactorily demonstrated their worth, they ought to be rewarded and spurred on to even more valuable efforts. These places ought to be open to all classes of our people possessing the necessary training and qualifications. Under the present arrangement relating to apportionment among the States and the restrictions with which these places are surrounded, through no fault of the officers of our State Department, these appointments do not always go to those possessing the best qualifications for them.

Upon the conclusion of the European war the nations of the earth will enter upon a broader and wider field in their relations. The great victories of the future, I believe, will be those achieved in the battles of diplomacy rather than through the clash of arms. Against that day we must now begin to prepare, unless we would linger in comparative diplomatic and commercial isolation. We must begin the education and training of the best men procurable as representatives capable of looking after our country in all those involved conditions of closer relationship, for it will be through the efforts of men of this character that we shall assume our heritage as a leader in the commercial and political affairs of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to use some time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, as I calculate now, I have 39 minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the position of this Republic in the family of nations makes it important that we should not be indifferent to the good opinion of mankind touching our foreign policy.

In the time I have I want to refer to the foreign policy of the United States, if it has a foreign policy, and suggest what I regard as an important improvement. It is doubtful if the United States has a foreign policy to-day. Let me illustrate: In the closing days of the last administration a delicate situation arose in a neighboring Republic. The retiring President gave as a reason why he thought it would indelicate for him to take any action at that time that the action taken might not be in keeping with the policy of the incoming administration. My contention, Mr. Chairman, is that the foreign policy of the United States should not change with the fortunes of political parties in political campaigns. No other great nation changes its foreign policy as a result of change in political parties. The foreign policy of the United States should be a consistent, continuing policy, maintained by a foreign office that does not change in its personnel below the head of the office with the fortunes of political parties.

I am not criticizing this administration more than any other. I am simply saying that from the foundation of the Republic to the present hour the foreign policy of the country, if it has one, has changed with the political parties as they have changed as a result of a political campaign by political parties and administrations rewarding with foreign appointments and responsible positions in the State Department those who have rendered conspicuous political service or given large campaign contributions. This is not the policy of any other nation on earth, and should not be the practice in this. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], who has just addressed the House, has spoken of the necessity of this Nation having the respect of mankind and of the people with whom we have international relations. But how can foreign nations with a consistent foreign policy, that have foreign offices with men trained in the foreign service, who carry out the policy of their country, have respect for a great nation that gives as a reward to political campaigners or those who have given contributions the office of ambassador or minister to the great countries of the world, and too often without any regard whatever as to their fitness for work in statecraft and diplomacy, as we have just been shown by the case of Santo Domingo.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the fact that our Government is a Government of parties, so-called, what remedy has the gentleman from Kansas to suggest for this condition which he describes?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Simple enough. I would make all officers below the Secretary of State continuing officers. I would not change the Assistant Secretary of State, I would not change the Counselor for the State Department, and I would have officers who are familiar with the precedents and with international law and usage, and also familiar with the details of the office and able to carry out a consecutive foreign policy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not a fact that, regardless of parties and administrations in the past, with very few exceptions, and small exceptions, too, our representatives abroad have reflected credit upon our country and distinction upon themselves in the discharge of their duties?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In the main, that is true; we were hopelessly weak in our Consular Service until the last 15 years, when we established the merit system in that service.

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not yield further. Until 15 years ago our Consular Service was worse than weak. Since that time we have made the Consular Service a continuing service, and men appointed and promoted in that service now are not appointed or promoted because of their political affiliations or services in political compaigns, but it is different in our foreign service. Our ministers and ambassadors are far more important to the welfare and the peace of our country in the family of nations.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Make it very brief.

Mr. CLINE. I want to inquire whether you think the retention of the Secretary would not change the policy of the Government; in other words, the undersecretaries would not control the policy of the Government?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Secretary would rely upon the office. I would make it the policy of the Government of the United States to ignore partisanship in the matter of the foreign policy. [Applause.] For instance, we should have had a foreign policy that would have enabled President Taft to have dealt with the conditions in Mexico in the closing days of his administration that would not have been changed and would not have invited a change by the incoming administration within a few days. The same thing is true of what has been done in Colombia. The policy of one administration with that country has been changed as a result of a change of political parties. We should be above and independent of the influence of foreign nations in our domestic politics. No nation on earth except our own should have any concern as to which political party should be successful in a campaign in the United States. And now that we have become great in the family of nations and our relations are becoming more and more important, naturally foreign nations will participate in our political campaigns and have an interest in them if our foreign policy is to be changed every time political parties change in this country.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I agree absolutely with the attitude of the gentleman from Kansas, but I want to ask him this question: Has he ever tried to obtain legislation to bring about the condition which he describes?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The thought I am giving this House has just suggested itself to me within a few days.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman how he would proceed to fill vacancies?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Just as they are filled in the Consular Service—by promotions and from an eligible list.

Mr. McKENZIE. By civil service?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; I would make it so that men would have an opportunity in our foreign service to prepare for the foreign service as a career, just as they prepare for our military service, as they prepare for service in the Navy, and I would advance them as they show a fitness for advancement, and I would have houses and equipment, so that men of modern circumstances could go to the Court of St. James, to Paris, to Berlin, and to all the great courts of the world without having a private fortune or the necessity of a private fortune. These are the suggestions that I arose to make while this bill was under consideration. And I think it important not only to the welfare but to the dignity of our country that we cease to appoint men to responsible positions in the State Department and as ambassadors and ministers to reward them for campaign services or campaign contributions. We can no longer be indifferent to the opinions that other nations have of us. There is no question that the nice things the Secretary of State has said to South American Republics are all overturned by what he has done in Santo Domingo. Nations take note of these things, and gauge us and our foreign policy and our lack of foreign policy by what we do. So I urge that the Committee on Foreign Affairs take up the question of a foreign office. I do not know that I would include ambassadors in the classified foreign service at the present time, but ultimately I would include the ambassadors, or as soon as suitable provision can be made in foreign countries for housing them.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has just said, and there is much force and merit in his views upon the question of a fixed foreign policy in so far as the same may be practicable. I invite his attention to this, that under all conditions, changing as they are from time to time, a fixed policy always would be impracticable and impossible. He refers to two instances. He refers to the case of Colombia, and I infer from what he says that we ought to abide by the rape of that helpless nation and not undertake to make amends for the injustice which all the world recognizes as such. He lamented the fact that President Taft did not decide upon a fixed Mexican policy. I regret that he did not, for if he had done so I have no doubt that President Wilson would have carried that policy out. But this administration had to originate a policy with reference to the Mexican situation. It has been a successful one, and to-day the American people applaud President Wilson's course with relation to Mexican affairs. [Applause.] One thing which I regret more than another is that in times such as these, when the world is involved in war, the Members of this House can not sometimes get serious and forget partisan bias and give credit where credit belongs. To-day, and on every day, criticisms come from that side of the House—fault-finding and carping for political purposes and for political effect. And yet no man here volunteers a suggestion as to how conditions can be remedied or what policies would be better.

I am not the spokesman of the administration. I have no brief other than as a Democratic Member of this House to speak for the President or the Department of State. But I sometimes feel like coming to my feet and asking gentlemen to point out what there is in the management of our foreign affairs that could be improved and what changes they would make. I for one believe that Mr. Bryan is performing noble duties for his country, and that his department is being conducted as well as it ever was in the history of our country. With all the troubles that surround us, the complications which arise from day to day, gentlemen can not put their fingers upon a single act of the Department of State and criticize it—not one. They can not point to a single change which ought to be made; and if this administration continues as it has and gets through with the troubles that now involve the world without the United States becoming involved, the present Secretary of State will go into history as one of the greatest that ever exercised the functions of that high office. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman think that the Santo Domingo incident is above criticism?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not seen anything to seriously criticize in that. I will say that I rather commend or approve the Secretary of State in wishing in a proper way to provide for political friends, because in all that he has done in that direction he has never recommended or secured the appointment of any man who was not a good, capable, and suitable man for the position.

Now, may I ask gentlemen to grow serious for one moment? Forget that we are partisans, that there is a line here dividing this House, and upon that side sit partisan Republicans and upon this side sit partisan Democrats, and for one moment say to ourselves that we will give credit where credit is due. I will read an extract from a great newspaper, edited by a great editor, and I only wish that gentlemen here could sometimes grow as broad minded as the author of this article. It is entitled "The man of burdens," and is from the Chicago Herald of the 17th, a paper which never was Democratic. It is edited, as I have said, by a broad-minded, liberal man, who can sometimes forget partisan bias and pay tribute to one to whom tribute is due.

I read:

THE MAN OF BURDENS.

In these troubled times, when every day shows more clearly the dangers that confront even the most sincere neutrality, the hearts of all Americans should go out in sympathy and support to that solitary man sitting in the White House at Washington who carries the welfare of 100,000,000 people so largely in his hand.

His is a staggering responsibility. It is the greatest that could be laid on the chief executive of any nation in time of peace. No American since Lincoln has borne such a burden, has been confronted with issues which are so big with fate for the land we love.

It is easy for those who do not share his burden or realize its tremendous weight on heart and mind to say what ought to be done under any and all circumstances. But his is the solemn duty not only of saying, but also of acting; not only of acting but also of doing so with the knowledge that the welfare of his fellow citizens may hang upon his course.

Under such circumstances President Wilson needs the sympathy and support of every true American. He needs to know that political friends and foes alike are with him; that they know the burden he is carrying and believe that he will carry it—if with pain and labor to himself—with honor to the Nation.

He should be made to feel that there is from one end of the country to another an abiding faith in his integrity and singleness of purpose and in his absolute determination to walk with circumspection but directly to the goal, stepping aside neither in the spirit of truculence nor subservience.

He should be made to feel that partisanship and personal feeling wholly cease to have a meaning for Americans when their President is confronted with what may quickly develop into an international crisis of grave significance; that the whole moral force and the whole heart and the whole mind of the Nation are his to lean upon or to call upon for support.

And above all he should be made to feel that Americans understand how free from the taint of personal ambition and pride are his high-minded efforts to serve his country in these moments of its need for wise guidance; that it is of his country and not of himself he thinks first and last of all; that his one aim is to serve her and her alone.

Nothing that could be said or felt or done can avail to abate his high and solemn responsibility. But his way may and should be brightened by the knowledge that those for whom he stands and speaks and labors have confidence in his integrity, his ability, his singleness of purpose, and his zeal.

[Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, in the short time allotted to me I shall not discuss foreign affairs, but will bring to your attention some domestic affairs.

Lately we have heard much said here about the number of people in this country who are out of work. I am pleased to be able to inform the House that business conditions in the State which I have the honor to represent have been improving recently, and are still improving, notwithstanding the disturbance of business caused by the European war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Some of the new business is shown by the newspaper articles which I will read.

The Evening Journal, of Wilmington, Del., of December 5, 1914, contains the following article:

HARLAN & HOLLINGSWORTH TO BUILD BIG FOREIGN STEAMER—LOCAL CORPORATION GETS CONTRACT FOR FREIGHT CARRIER 450 FEET IN LENGTH—ONE OF LARGEST EVER BUILT IN LOCAL YARD.

Announcement was made by the Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation to-day that it had just signed a contract for a large steamship.

The vessel will be 450 feet long, and one of the largest, if not the largest, ever constructed in Wilmington.

It will be a freight steamship, and is to be constructed pursuant to an order received from a foreign country.

Just for whom the steamship will be built is not announced. The Harlan & Hollingsworth officials stated that work has been started on preliminary details, but actual construction may not be started for a month.

The Wilmington Morning News, of Wilmington, Del., of February 16, 1915, contains the following article:

HARLAN & HOLLINGSWORTH CORPORATION GETS ANOTHER CONTRACT—LONDON PETROLEUM CONCERN DUPLICATES ORDER FOR SHIPS.

The Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Co., of London, England, that recently placed an order for the construction of a freight steamer 450 feet long with the Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation, has duplicated the order, it was said yesterday, and where the company was to build one ship it will now build two.

The Wilmington Morning News, of Wilmington, Del., issued to-day, contains the following article:

HARLAN & HOLLINGSWORTH CORPORATION GETS ANOTHER CONTRACT—TO BUILD FERRYBOAT AND STEEL PASSENGER COACHES.

Information was given out at the offices of the Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation yesterday that they have succeeded in securing a contract for the building of the hull of a large steel ferryboat for the Fort Lee Ferry Co., of New York. The vessel will be 200 feet in length and 61 feet in breadth of beam. It is to have a carrying capacity of 1,200 persons, and will be fitted with all the latest modern accommodations, together with a strictly fireproof equipment, conforming to all rules regulating safety required at sea. She will be used for traffic between Riverside, N. Y., and Edge Water Park, N. J.

Announcement was also made of the contract secured from the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad for the construction of 10 all-steel coaches. The cars will be 70 feet in length, and they will be completed as soon as possible.

These two contracts, coupled with the contract for the two large tank steamers which are to be built for the Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Co., of London, England, and several minor contracts, will mean a revival of old-time activity at the plant. It is thought by the opening of spring the concern will be working on full time, with their full quota of men. It was learned that the keel of the first tanker had been already laid and that preparations for the second one are now going on, the material arriving yesterday.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is their objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that he has 24 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] has 14 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman who has just left the floor [Mr. BROCKSON] with a great deal of interest. The news that he has read has suggested to my mind a few queries.

First, I have wondered whether this was a "psychological" recovery from a "psychological depression." I have been wondering if we have had no bad times, as our friends on the other side have been claiming for the past year, how it happens that they were improving.

But the one question that suggested itself most pointedly to my mind was this: It seems that this shipyard referred to by the gentleman from Delaware is now constructing foreign ships for the foreign trade, for the freight trade; the very character of vessels that are proposed to be purchased under the terms of the bill that we passed the other day.

Now, if the foreigner can come into our shipyards and have his vessels constructed, where is the necessity of our giving authority to a shipping board to go forth and purchase foreign ships? If the foreigners have ships for sale, why are they here in our yards ordering vessels to be constructed? What becomes of the argument that we have been hearing, that we must have the privilege of going out and purchasing foreign ships to get them under the American flag?

I could not help thinking, when the gentleman from Delaware was telling about the conditions that had been improved, of the argument that we have so frequently heard to the effect that the European war has brought upon the country the great business depression that we are now suffering from. The revival of which the gentleman speaks is mostly due to foreign orders. It seems that the war has acted to a certain extent as a protective tariff. It has caused the foreigner to sell us less and to buy of us more. It is giving some work to our own people. I hope when the gentleman gives us a statement the next time about prosperity he will show us something that is being revived in our domestic industries not due to the war.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Delaware?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have only three minutes.

Mr. BROCKSON. Well, I know; but I want to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman can correct it in a minute, all right.

Mr. BROCKSON. Only two boats are to be used in the foreign trade. The other boat is to be used in New York, and the cars are intended for domestic trade entirely.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understood the gentleman to say that some of the cars were for the foreign trade.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] to use some of his time. We will probably have but one speech on this side.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman says "probably." Will you or will you not have but one speech on your side? It ought not to be difficult to determine that.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am not positive.

Mr. COOPER. I will ask the gentleman why not? Why can not the gentleman determine?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Because I have not made up my mind. It is a question between two gentlemen, as to whether one shall have all the time or divide it between the two.

The CHAIRMAN. Do the gentlemen want all the time to be taken out of their time equally?

Mr. COOPER. This is not debate. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in view of some recent events, I want to discuss in the time allotted to me the question of the relations between the President and Congress.

Under the Constitution the President has the right to recommend to Congress such measures as he deems proper, and he also has the right to veto any measure that may be passed by Congress that he deems unwise, and in both of these rights he can not and ought not to be interfered with. In other words, the President has the right to recommend any legislation that he may desire, and he may also veto any bill that may be passed by the Congress and without assigning any reason for his action.

I do not believe, however, that the Constitution contemplated that the President should have the right to influence the legislative body to the extent that on many occasions Executive influence has been exercised, and we have very recently had an illustration of such influence both with relation to the passage of a bill and also with relation to a veto message that, in my opinion, violates the spirit of the Constitution, and if the tendency that has gradually been growing up in the last few years for the President to dictate, if not dominate, the Congress is not discontinued the time will soon come when one of the great political parties of this country will declare against what will be termed "Executive interference," and the people will indorse the party that makes such a declaration.

Within a very few days the present Congress passed the immigration bill. It was sent to the President, and after considering it for a number of days, in his wisdom, using his discretion and the power given him by the Constitution, he saw fit to veto the bill, and he had a right to veto it if it did not meet with his approval. There, in my judgment, his responsibility in relation to the measure ceased. The bill had passed the House by a vote of 252 to 126, or by a vote of 2 to 1. It went to the Senate. It passed that body by a vote of 50 to 7. The bill then went to conference, and when the conference report was adopted in the House the vote was 227 to 94. So it appears beyond any question that a two-thirds majority of the House and a 7 to 1 majority of the other body was in favor of the legislation.

Notwithstanding the vote in the House upon the bill and the conference report, when the vote was taken upon the passage of the bill over the veto of the President it failed to receive the necessary two-thirds majority, due to the change of several Members on that side of the Chamber who voted to sustain the veto when only a few days before they were recorded for the passage of the measure.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe anyone will deny that except for the influence of the Executive the bill would have passed this House, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. I do not believe there is anyone on either side of the House who will assert that in his opinion the veto would have been sustained had it not been for the influence of the administration.

In vetoing the immigration bill the President in his message said:

> Its enactment into law would undoubtedly enhance the efficiency and improve the methods of handling the important branch of the public service to which it relates. But candor and a sense of duty with regard to the responsibilities so clearly imposed upon me by the Constitution in matters of legislation leave me no choice but to dissent.

This was a sufficient statement to explain why he could not approve the measure, and it would seem as if a Member of Congress ought to be permitted to vote his conviction upon any question when convinced that "candor and a sense of duty with regard to the responsibilities so clearly imposed * * * by the Constitution" impel him to do so.

He ought to be left to discharge his obligation without such influence from the Executive as might be exercised, in view of the great power that the President possesses, and he ought not to be criticized if his position is not in accord with the opinion of the President.

I want to refer to the shipping bill that was passed by the House the other day. The President, in his message delivered in this Chamber at a joint session of the Senate and House on the 8th day of December, in accordance with his power under the Constitution, urged the Congress to enact into law the then pending shipping bill. That was entirely within the functions of his high office. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the President ought not to take any interest in measures that he may recommend to Congress, because that would be going further than I wish to go. But I do say that the Executive ought not to use the power that he has, as it was used on this shipping bill and with relation to the veto of the immigration bill, and that such use is a violation of the power conferred by the Constitution upon the President with relation to legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the shipping bill that we passed on Tuesday was not the pending bill that the President referred to in his message on December 8. It was a bill originating outside of the House, prepared and brought here, but not introduced. It came into the House under a special rule reported by the Committee on Rules, making it in order as an amendment to a bill that had passed the Senate and was pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and which had not had any consideration by that committee; the rule discharged the Committee on Naval Affairs from the consideration of the bill and directed that it be reported to the House with the shipping bill added to it as an amendment, though the amendment was not germane to the Senate bill. The rule provided that after six hours of general debate the previous question should be ordered and the bill placed upon its passage without being read, so that its different provisions could be discussed under the usual five-minute rule, and without any opportunity to offer amendments, and under that gag rule it was jammed through the House. This action is another evidence of Democratic inconsistency, because for a number of years before they got control of this House they were protesting against gag rule, and made it an issue in the campaigns. I wonder what some of them will say to their constituents if they are questioned with reference to their action in voting, as most of them did, for the rule that was adopted in connection with the ship-purchase bill. I might remind them that in their platform of 1908 they declared that under the Republican Party the House of Representatives "has ceased to be a deliberative body." In their platform of 1912, boasting of what their party had accomplished, they said:

> It has, among other achievements, revised the rules of the House of Representatives so as to give to the representatives of the American people freedom of speech and action in advocating, proposing, and perfecting remedial legislation.

The adoption of the rule on the ship-purchase bill is only following many other gag rules that have been adopted by this and the preceding Congress that in their drastic provisions exceed by far anything that the Republicans were ever accused of.

Mr. Chairman, no one now will dispute that the ship-purchase bill is the President's bill. It was admitted in the debate, in speech, and in verse; it was stated by the distinguished Speaker of the House in a caucus of his party during the late hours of the night immediately preceding the day when the bill was passed, if we can believe what we read in the newspapers, that it was the bill of the President; that it was the President's desire that the bill be passed; in fact, that he was insisting upon its passage, notwithstanding that a clear majority of the Members of this body, if they had voted their honest convictions, were against it; it was jammed, as I have already stated, through the House.

And how was it done, Mr. Chairman? To a large extent it was done in the same manner that the veto message on the immigration bill was sustained when it was considered by the House. A representative of the administration, one of his immediate official family, and the same one in both instances, appeared at the Capitol and was very much in evidence lobbying with the Democratic Members of the House, urging them to support the wishes of the President. And why was that particular member of the Cabinet—the Postmaster General—selected to lobby with the Members in both of these cases? It is perfectly apparent why he was selected. It was because he happens to have the ear of corn. [Laughter on the Republican side.] In other words, the Democratic Members saw post-office appointments in their different districts dangling before them, and they evidently believed that if they wished to have their way with relation to these appointments it would probably be policy on their part to do the will of the administration.

We have heard a good deal since this administration came into power about lobbying and lobbyists, but there is no influence upon legislation that is more pernicious than a Cabinet official who has much patronage to dispense using his influence with the Members of Congress upon pending measures. That this has been done by the present Postmaster General both as to the veto of the President on the immigration bill and with reference to the ship-purchase bill can not be denied.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the morning after the caucus, and the day on which the shipping bill was considered, it was currently reported that the Postmaster General had communicated with somebody in the House, wanting a list of the names of the members of the Democratic Party who had stated that they would not abide by the action of the caucus of the night before. Now, I do not know whether he made that inquiry or not, but if he did, what was the significance of it? Certainly it could have but one significance, and that would be the effect that it might have upon the Members on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had more time to discuss this question. I want to read as a part of my remarks excerpts from two speeches, one by the lamented Abraham Lincoln at Pittsburgh on February 15, 1861, another by Stephen A. Douglas at Alton, Ill., October 15, 1858, which speeches were published upon the editorial page of the New York Sun recently, both dealing with the subject of the President and Congress. I commend the same to the Members of the House.

[From Abraham Lincoln's address at Pittsburgh, Feb. 15, 1861.]

By the Constitution the Executive may recommend measures which he may think proper and he may veto those he thinks improper, and it is supposed that he may add to these certain indirect influences to affect the action of Congress. My political education strongly inclines me against a very free use of any of these means by the Executive to control the legislation of the country. As a rule, I think it better that Congress should originate as well as perfect its measures without external bias.

[From Stephen A. Douglas's opening speech at Alton, Oct. 15, 1858.]

And now this warfare is made on me [by Mr. Buchanan] because I would not surrender my convictions of duty, because I would not abandon my constituency and receive the orders of the Executive authorities how I should vote in the Senate of the United States. I hold that an attempt to control the Senate on the part of the Executive is subversive of the Constitution. The executive department is independent of the Senate and the Senate is independent of the Executive. * * * Whenever you recognize the right of the Executive to say to a Senator, "Do this or I will take off the heads of your friends," you convert this Government from a Republic into a despotism. Whenever you recognize the right of a President to say to a Member of Congress, "Vote as I tell you or I will bring a power to bear against you that will crush you," you destroy the independence of the Representative and convert him into a tool of Executive power.

Mr. Chairman, I am an optimist. I am always looking for the good that there is in everything. I have seen some good come out of this outrageous, high-handed proceeding that took place here two or three days ago in connection with the shipping bill. It is reported by the newspapers that the distinguished Speaker in the Democratic caucus the night before the bill was passed made the statement that a special session of Congress meant disaster and defeat to the Democratic Party. Here is what the Speaker is alleged to have said:

The House should do everything possible to expedite action and avoid an extra session. If there is an extra session, the Democratic Party will be wiped off the face of the earth at the next election.

At that time it looked as if a special session was inevitable, but we now understand that it is not being considered and that there is no intention of any special session of the Sixty-fourth Congress. So that much good has come out of the passage by the House of the ship-purchase bill, and the Speaker, who went so far as to help the administration out of a bad situation by aiding in getting his party associates to vote for the bill, has indeed rendered to the country a most valuable service if his prophecy of the effect of a special session has resulted in abandoning that idea. Another good that came out of the passage of the shipping bill was that it afforded a question upon which the Republican Members of the House for the first time during this Congress were able to vote as a unit, and it was extremely gratifying to me, as I am about to retire to private life, that at last the Republicans are united and that they had the support of a majority of the Progressive Members of the House, which, Mr. Chairman, assures in 1916 Republican success and a return to the prosperity that will come to the country as it has on every other occasion when that party is in control of the affairs of the Nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY] was to occupy some time, but inasmuch as he is not here I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY] have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON] gave some figures about the improvement of the industries on the Atlantic coast. Since that time I have felt in my pocket, and have found there some figures that show the conditions on the Pacific.

A few days ago the House of Representatives of the State of Washington passed a resolution, by a vote of 74 to 20, asking the repeal of the Underwood tariff law. They gave some figures to show some of the reasons why. I quote from the resolution figures giving the increases in imports into the State of Washington for the year 1914:

The importation of butter increased from 12,008 to 1,104,000 pounds; eggs from 4,755 to 289,000 dozen; fresh beef from 145,891 to 3,453,000 pounds; hogs from 5 head to 98,000; salmon from 759,362 to 3,000,000; lumber from 434,000 to 12,026,000 feet; shingles from 44,276,000 to 235,000,000.

All that represents that much work and wages that have been taken from the laborer in Washington and given to the foreigner. Not a single one of the articles is selling for a cent less than when the Underwood tariff bill went into effect.

Last night I had the pleasure of attending a banquet in New York, given by the American Pulp and Paper Association, and the facts developed there that there is not a single newspaper on Puget Sound that is using a pound of paper manufactured in the United States. Before the Underwood tariff law went into effect every pound of paper used there was manufactured in the State of Washington. The paper then used represented a pay roll of $150,000 a month, and every cent of that has been transferred from the State of Washington to British Columbia. The Underwood tariff law has destroyed the pulp business of Puget Sound as completely as a conflagration. But the people pay the same for the newspapers that they paid before. That is some of the prosperity that we are suffering under on Puget Sound as the result of the Underwood tariff law, and we do not believe that it is psychological or entirely a state of mind. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I have here in my hand another matter, an order issued by the Postmaster General, reducing the salary of letter collectors $200 a year. What is the reason for that? What is the use of reducing the wages throughout the country in this time of the return of prosperity. Also in his report he requests that the eight-hour law be repealed in order that these letter carriers can do more work. That does not look like a period of general prosperity. Is that the reason that we have the general reduction of hours and wages? Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that I have three minutes left.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART].

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose to make a few observations on our foreign relations, but on account of the shortness of time I am unable to address myself properly to that subject.

I am very much interested in the fact that the State Legislature of Washington took occasion to pass a resolution with reference to the repeal of the Underwood tariff law. I have no doubt but that there are many phases of the law that may not be to the best interests of all the people of the State of Washington. But I will take this occasion to call attention to another resolution that was passed by a Republican house of representatives in the State of Kansas. Kansas Republicans are nothing if not eloquent. The house of representatives of Kansas consists of a large majority of Republicans—66 Republicans against 49 Democrats, 9 Progressives, and 1 Socialist, constituting the 125 members of the lower house of the most prosperous State in the Union. This is what they said:

House resolution No. 33.

Whereas the Old World is now a theater of war and blood, more appalling than any picture to be found in all the past history of the civilization; and

Whereas the United States forms a striking contrast to these warring nations, being a land of happiness, prosperity, and contentment, her people nobly following peaceful pursuits, and out of her generosity and abounding love for humanity sending her fair daughters to relieve the suffering of the wounded and dying, and immense cargoes from her abundant stores to save the lives of the unfortunate victims of this world's catastrophe: Therefore be it

Resolved, First. That we extend to the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, and his able advisers, our grateful and heartfelt thanks for having preserved the peace of our country and kept us out of this maelstrom of human destruction.

Resolved, Second. That we pledge to the President our united support in any and all honorable means that he may deem necessary to preserve the peace and dignity of our country and to bring about peace among the people and nations of the world.

Resolved, Third. That a copy of this resolution, signed by our speaker and certified by our chief clerk, be sent to the President of the United States and to each of our Members in Congress.

I hereby certify that the above resolution originated in the house, and passed that body.

Adopted February 15, 1915.

ROBERT STONE,
Speaker of the House.
I. E. LAMBERT,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I want to refer, in the first place, to a statement made by my good friend from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] with reference to the passage of several bills under what he denominates "compulsion and gag rule" in this House, and the anticipated punishment by the Postmaster General of those men who refuse to be bound by the caucus.

Since the statement has been made by my friend from South Dakota I have taken occasion to inquire of three or four gentlemen in the cloakroom, who had reserved the right not to be bound by the caucus action on the shipping bill, as to whether Mr. Burleson or any other official had interviewed them with reference to their position on the immigration bill or on the shipping bill, and I found that neither of these gentlemen were interviewed by the Postmaster General or anyone in his behalf. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I also find that it is properly within the province of the minority to criticize the majority in its legislation. The majority, Mr. Chairman, is responsible for the legislation always, and at no time in the history of the country in recent years has any party been so ready to accept the responsibility of standing for the legislation that has taken place in the Sixty-third Congress as we are. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I know that my friend from South Dakota is addicted to the general habit that a great many good Republicans are in the matter of prophecy. In 1909 I heard the gentlemen on that side say the Republicans in 1910 would sweep the country in the election. In 1911 I got the same prophecy as to what they were going to do in 1912. In 1913 I heard the same statement as to what the country would do to the Democratic Party in 1914, and I expect, Mr. Chairman, to hear this year the same kind of talk as to what the Republican Party is going to do in 1916, and with the same result. The average ordinary Republican is as full of forecasts as the Weather Bureau, and not half as reliable. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I want to take occasion here to differ from my good friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in reference to his theory of how the Government ought to be conducted. If I understood the gentleman correctly, it was that in the standardization of consuls of the United States, and in placing all of the administration officers under the civil service in the different departments of Government, we ought to establish a fixed and definite policy that should continue through the administrations that shall come after us. I do not think my friend means to say that. In this Republic, made up of parties to which the people appeal for a change of policy whenever in their opinion it ought to be made, that condition could not be effective.

Mr. CAMPBELL rose.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have only a few minutes left.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But right on that proposition.

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman undertook to say that there should be no change in the offices held by the administration forces of the Government, except the Presidency and the secretaries of his Cabinet, and that all of the other officers——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, the gentleman should quote me correctly. I was referring to the foreign service entirely. I make a distinction between our domestic policy and our foreign policy.

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman says that he was talking about the foreign service. The consuls in the foreign service do not affect our policy. Those policies are affected by our ministers and not by the consuls, who are the especial business agents of the United States, and they have nothing to do with the policies of the country. They are representing our business abroad and not the policy of any party.

The man that fixes the policy of the party is the titular head of the party, the President, represented through his Secretaries and other administration officers. The consuls have been put into the classified service, into a standardized service, for the purpose of maintaining some regularity in their appointment and in the offices the duties of which they are to perform. But, Mr. Chairman, that could not possibly affect the policy of a party, and in a Republic the policies of the different parties are as distinct as it is important they should be. The policy and theory of the Democratic Party are as absolutely distinct from those of the Republican Party as it is possible to make them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the foreign policy of the Democratic Party as distinguished from the foreign policy of the Republican Party?

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman will excuse me, when I have only one or two minutes of time. I do not want him to take that away from me. I will say to the gentleman one thing—that the foreign policy of the Democratic Party is a policy of absolute neutrality and universal peace. [Applause.] We are proceeding with the head of the party to establish those relations upon strictly and absolutely neutral grounds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Was that the policy of the Democratic Party when you went down and took Vera Cruz last April?

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to another matter in this discussion. My good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] has undertaken, as several gentlemen have recently, to criticize Mr. Bryan with reference to the writing of the Vick letter. To use an everyday expression, it is a cold day when the administration is not criticized with reference to this Santo Domingo incident. Mr. Bryan assumed, however violent the assumption may have been, that even under this administration a good and deserving Democrat might be recognized when he could discharge the duties as well as a Republican and an opportunity arose to appoint him. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have no authority to speak for Mr. Bryan, other than as a Democrat to defend a man unjustly attacked when he is absent and to unqualifiedly indorse his actions in the San Domingo incident. It may be sufficient to say that through the appointment of the minister now representing this Government there that Mr. Bryan has established a stable and respectable government and wiped out some reprehensible methods.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a short question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago I sent to the State Department and asked it to send to me a list of all the men that had been appointed, transferred, or promoted under the Consular Service from March 4, 1909, to the 20th of January, 1912. I shall not have time to read it at this time, but I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend it in my remarks by including this list.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend the letter from the State Department in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

[1] Nomination pending.

Mr. CLINE. That statement was made out and delivered to me about January 20, 1912, by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Knox. I am not an extreme partisan, but I wanted to know the facts connected with the Consular Service in which the appointments were made under the farce of a civil service examination stripped of political preferences. He sent me the names of the gentlemen who have been promoted, who have been appointed, who have been transferred to these positions. There were 212 out of 289 consuls of the United States when this new law became effective. I asked for the home address, the place to which they were appointed, and the salary, and when they were appointed or transferred. Out of the 212 I found that 199 were Republicans, and that there were 13 Democrats appointed in four years, or promoted or transferred, and that out of $726,500 of salaries, the Democrats drew $31,500, or less than 5 per cent of the amount that was paid to those men in those situations. The State of Massachusetts, that the gentleman [Mr. ROGERS] comes from, had five men appointed or transferred in that time, whose salaries equaled more than half of the entire amount that was coming for a year to the 13 representatives of the Democratic Party in the Consular Service, and yet the gentleman finds fault because a Democrat gets into the service.

The State of Illinois had 13 representatives appointed or transferred during the four years, commanding salaries amounting to $43,500. The great State of Pennsylvania had 18 representatives appointed, transferred, or promoted during this time, carrying salaries amounting to $62,000, twice the amount paid to the Democratic representatives for the entire United States. Only two of the 13 were appointed north of the Mason and Dixon line. What kind of salaries did they get? Six of them got $2,000 a year, three of them got $2,500 a year, three of them got $3,000 a year, and one $3,500 a year, and all of them occupying inferior and unimportant positions.

Mr. Chairman, that is an exemplification of the administration of the holy civil service under a Republican administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Charges d'affaires ad interim and vice consuls, $50,000; total, $587,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee the reason for putting the vice consuls separately in this item and not having them included under the general designation for the Consular Service? I did not know that vice consuls were a part of the ambassadorial or legation force.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the reason for putting them there was that they might participate in this fund of $50,000. The gentleman will recall that a few weeks ago Congress passed a law classifying the Consular Service and the secretaries of embassies and legations, and provided that vice consuls when acting as consuls should get the same proportion of the consul's pay that the chargés d'affaires do of the ambassador's or minister's pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should think that would be included under the item, page 19, which relates to salaries of the Consular Service, rather than in this connection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What item?

Mr. STAFFORD. Page 19, the paragraph with the heading "Salaries of the Consular Service."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The item on page 19 is for the salaries of consuls and consuls general. This item back here is a specific appropriation heretofore to pay the first secretary who is acting in the place of an ambassador or a minister half of the salary of such ambassador or minister when he was away from his post of duty. Now, under the new law we recently enacted, the vice consul acts in place of the consul general in the absence of such officer from his post of duty and gets half of the salary of that officer, and we put vice consuls in here in order that they might participate in this fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. The vice consul, of course, will not have any duties to perform connected with a legation or embassy.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is why I asked the gentleman why it should be included here if it is really part of the Consular Service.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It may have been better to have divided the appropriation and put it in a different place.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF SECRETARIES IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

For secretaries in the Diplomatic Service as provided in the act of January —, 1915, entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," approved January —, 1915, $157,500: Provided, That the amount appropriated for "Salaries of secretaries of embassies and legations" contained in the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, is hereby made available for the salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service at the rate of compensation specified in the act entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," approved —— —, 1915; and there is also hereby appropriated for salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of the said act of January —, 1915, during the remainder of the fiscal year 1915, the additional sum of $7,500.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order pending.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, let the gentleman make it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make the point of order, at least I do not know that I do, but I want to inquire of the chairman of the committee in reference to this matter. This is apparently a deficiency appropriation. That is an appropriation for the current year.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That was necessitated by reason of the fact on February 5 of this year the law went into effect reorganizing the service of secretaries of embassies and legations, and increased the compensation of secretaries taken as a whole to an amount that would equal this $7,500 for the last four months of this fiscal year. The purpose of this proviso here is to enable the State Department to pay the balance of appropriations of this year which was made for secretaries of embassies and legations under the old system to the secretaries under the new law, and adds $7,500 for the purpose of making their salaries what they would be under the new law from the 1st of March to the 1st of July.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does not the gentleman think it would be a better form of appropriation for this to have been carried in the deficiency bill rather than in this bill? It is a deficiency.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, I do not know; I do not believe, under the circumstances, it would.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact this is simply a deficiency, as he is appropriating for the current fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. That is, the $7,500 is a deficiency?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. And my question was if the gentleman did not think it would be better, at least, to have that amount carried in a deficiency bill rather than in this appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from North Carolina will permit, when the consular reorganization bill was passed there was some discussion whether the bill itself ought not to make available the existing appropriations for the payment of the reorganized service.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I recall it.

Mr. MANN. The fact is the gentleman from Virginia really wanted to have that done, although the way it came up it is probably not convenient; but as this is to make the present appropriations available for salaries, I can see there is some reason——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I want to say to the chairman of the committee I shall not press the point of order, but I merely wanted to call his attention to the fact that this item belongs to a deficiency bill and not to this bill. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer four amendments to this section, all the same. On page 2, line 26, strike out the word "January" and insert "February 5."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 26, by striking out "January" and inserting "February 5."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. On page 3, line 2, strike out the word "January" and insert "February 5."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 2, by striking out the word "January" and inserting "February 5."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. On page 3, line 10, insert the words "February 5" after the word "approved."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, after the word "approved," insert the word and figures "February 5."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. On page 3, line 14, strike out the word "January" and insert "February 5."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, line 14, by striking out the word "January" and inserting the word and figure "February 5."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the salaries of ambassadors, ministers, consuls, and other officers of the United States for the periods actually and necessarily occupied in receiving instructions and in making transits to and from their posts, and while awaiting recognition and authority to act, in pursuance of the provisions of section 1740 of the Revised Statutes, so much as may be necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the Chairman kindly indicate what appropriation is used for these respective services? One would expect there would be some amount appropriated in this paragraph, but none is included, and none was included in last year's act also.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is provided for by the Revised Statutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The appropriation?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Whatever is necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. From what fund is the money paid? Here is an item without carrying any appropriation.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Revised Statutes authorize it to be paid, and it is paid out of any money in the Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I assume the money is appropriated somewhere.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Here is the amount paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. Which amount?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman from North Carolina asked me what amount was paid. Last year it was $109,700.

Mr. STAFFORD. But where is the money appropriated?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Revised Statutes provide that it shall be a charge on the Treasury. Whenever the State Department draws on the Treasury for money on this account it is paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a very exceptional case. I never knew of the Revised Statutes carrying an unlimited appropriation.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We frequently impose an obligation on the Treasury, and when the conditions called for in the Revised Statutes are complied with, there is a payment. It is not unusual, though probably not the wisest method of legislating.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the statutes authorize the expenditure of the money and designate the sum, what is the need of carrying the paragraph?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It has been carried in this bill so long if it was left out some question would arise as to its payment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the amount of money from which it is paid? That is the question that is difficult for me to understand.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is paid out of any money in the Treasury. I can not make it plainer than that. We do not make any specific appropriation here. We simply recognize an existing law.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow a question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Then, whatever amount is paid out of the Treasury, out of this particular provision, is not included in the aggregate of the amount carried in this bill?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In other words, if the amount appropriated in the bill is in excess of the amount shown in the report, such amount is paid in this paragraph?

Mr. STAFFORD. And last year the amount expended was $109,000?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. One hundred and nine thousand and some odd dollars.

The Clerk read as follows:

Interpreter to legation and consulate general at Bangkok, Siam, $1,500.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of interrogating the chairman of the committee in regard to the item we had under consideration at the top of this page. What is the reason that the amount that is necessary to meet this obligation can not be carried in the appropriation bill?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is no reason why it can not be done. The committee has just followed the custom of years.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There are some customs that ought to be revised, and I should have thought that the gentleman from Virginia in taking charge of this bill would have been on the lookout for things of this sort.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think the committee has in the last two years been on the lookout and revised a good many of them.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Now, the result of this is that here is an appropriation bill on its face carrying a certain sum of money——

Mr. COX. How much?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Something over $4,000,000. And the facts are that the bill carries appropriations of an amount of money in excess of that—an undetermined amount. No Member of the House could possibly know how much. The chairman of the committee says that something like $109,000 was expended under this item last year. Has the chairman of the committee any information as to what amount will likely be expended during the current year for which this appropriation is made?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think it will be less this year than the year before.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Was information obtainable when the gentleman was constructing this bill to enable him and his committee to make a fairly accurate estimate of the amount of money that will be required under this item?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It will evidently be considerably less than it was last year, because there were more changes in the Diplomatic Corps last year than there will be this year.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman then could have carried in this bill as an appropriation for this purpose, say $100,000, using the language, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," which would have fixed the amount that the bill carried.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We could have done that.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I suggest to the gentleman next year in making up this bill that he take that under consideration.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In order that we may know what amount of money we are appropriating.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 10 student interpreters at the legation to China, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Chinese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the legation and consulates in China, at $1,000 each, $10,000: Provided, That said student interpreters shall be chosen in such manner as will make the selections nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as interpreter to the legation and consulates in China so long as his said services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee how the selections are made of these 10 student interpreters. Who has the power of naming them?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The State Department names them.

Mr. GOULDEN. And there is no civil service?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They put them through a civil-service examination of their own. There is none provided by law.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman know what particular requirements are demanded of those who apply for that examination—the age, educational qualifications, and so forth?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They have to speak an additional language to the English language and stand an English examination. They have to be educated.

Mr. GOULDEN. Has the gentleman any idea about what age they have to be?

Mr. COX. I think it is from 18 to 35 years. I had an opportunity to look that up a few years ago.

Mr. GOULDEN. This looks like a fine opportunity for young men to see other countries. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESCUING SHIPWRECKED AMERICAN SEAMEN.

Expenses which may be incurred in the acknowledgment of the services of masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing American seamen or citizens from shipwreck, $4,500.

THE SEAMEN'S BILL.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The Democratic Party came into power with a distinct platform promise to aid American seamen. Involuntary servitude on ships was to be ended forever. The priceless boon of freedom and liberty was to be guaranteed to the men who go down to the sea in the ships. Their independence and self-respect was to be encouraged. This doctrine was not only incorporated in the platform pledges, but it was proclaimed from the throats of a thousand spellbinders of greater or less force and magnitude throughout the Nation. All the coast cities were raided with these sturdy declaimers and their fair promises. Congress convened and the shipowners assembled. They lobbied and they explained. Every argument and influence they could summon was brought into play. The chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was in London at a conference, and delay was necessary. Finally when it became apparent that the foreign shipowners were deceiving the public as to safety provisions and were sandbagging the seamen at that conference, Andrew Furuseth, the seamen's representative in this country, who was serving as one of the American delegates, packed up his belongings and left. He told the people of the United States that the shipping interests had control of that international conference.

Finally the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, who is himself independent and faithful to duty, returned to his post here in this Congress. The report of the conference and the treaty it proposed was sent to the Senate for ratification.

Silence was the special order in the House committee on the much advertised promise of the Democracy to abolish involuntary servitude. Months passed and on my own motion the committee finally found itself in position to lay aside temporarily such questions as the renaming of merchant ships, the creation of lobster beds and fish hatcheries, and other matters and consider the seamen's bill which Senator LA FOLLETTE had forced through the Senate months and months before.

In the meantime there came up on this floor a recodification bill, and the statute on which involuntary servitude was based was read and reenacted. My motion to strike out the statute, which had been denounced as un-American by the Democratic platform, was rejected and the law was actually reenacted in violation of the platform.

Finally the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries wiped out the La Follette bill, all except the enacting clause, and reported a substitute which was so objectionable that the representative of the seamen of America, Andrew Furuseth, urged all friends of the seamen and of safety at sea to vote against the bill as reported. I had submitted a minority report against the bill. The committee got together again and submitted a further much improved substitute which was passed and sent over to the Senate about six months ago.

The international treaty was pending and action on the bill was continually delayed. In the meantime another election approached. The Democratic Party went before the people to answer for its legislation and to tell how it had redeemed its platform pledges. A campaign textbook was issued and in violation of propriety, as it appears to me, the seamen's bill was referred to as one of the accomplishments of that session of Congress.

But the seamen's bill all the while rested quietly in the hands of Senate and House conferees, where it still lodges, and I fear is sleeping the sleep that knows no waking. The Shipping Trust is watching the bill. We are within 10 legislative days of adjournment. No report from these conferees is forthcoming, and rumors about the Capitol tell that they have about agreed on a report that will be pleasing to shipowners and will greatly displease the seamen.

It is doubtful, very doubtful, if any bill reported by these conferees can pass unless it meets with the tacit approval of the Shipping Trust and the all-night talkers in another House.

Plain, ordinary decency demanded a prompt report from these conferees long ago. Andrew Furuseth, in his position as to the international treaty, has been vindicated, for the treaty has been rejected because by its terms it made this legislation impossible. It seems to me that unless this bill is passed there will have been a deplorable lack of good faith and sincerity on the part of the Democratic Party in this matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman relative to this provision appropriating for "the expenses which may be incurred in the acknowledgment of the services of masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing American seamen or citizens from shipwreck, $4 500." The gentleman proposes to strike out this appropriation of $4,500, and yet at the same time he speaks in behalf of the American seamen. It seems to me as being inconsistent.

Mr. BRYAN. Instead of the gentleman, as one of the leading representatives of the Democratic Party, taking up the proposition I submitted, he tries to take this motion of mine to strike out the last word, and which I took as the ground to present the argument I did present, and fails to refer to the real matter I presented. Why does not the gentleman say something about the seamen's bill and explain why his party and those in power here in this House and the other House fail and neglect to bring out this bill? There is a vast majority of this House in favor of it and a majority in the other House; yet it is absolutely neglected and no attention is paid to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Washington. It strikes me he is trying to blow hot and cold at the same time.

We have not the American seamen's bill up now. I voted for the shipping bill and I am for the seamen's bill. We are now trying to do something for some oppressed seamen and trying to appropriate $4,500 for them in this bill. This is the item that is now up for consideration.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say——

Mr. HARRISON. I do not yield now. This is the item that we must now vote on. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike from this bill this item of $4,500 that is recommended to be appropriated for the seamen of this country. We are bound to conclude that the gentleman is sincere in his motion, and I oppose it, and I do not think the House ought to accept the view of the gentleman from Washington and strike out this item of $4,500 for the seamen of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment will not be adopted. It is to strike out the appropriation of $4,500 for rescuing shipwrecked American seamen. The item has been carried in this appropriation bill for 30 years, and it has accomplished much good in behalf of shipwrecked American seamen. I trust the committee will vote down the gentleman's amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not do that. I make a point of order on that. There is a motion already pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is out of order. He will have to get unanimous consent.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not propose to allow the RECORD to show that I am opposed to this appropriation of $4,500. Those who may read the RECORD will know that the motion was offered in order to present this matter to these two gentlemen; and now, not only the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] but the gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, gets up and, instead of answering the question I propounded in regard to the seamen's bill and its merits, indulges in the same joke that the gentleman from Mississippi has attempted to perpetrate on the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is a motion now pending.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I object.

Mr. BRYAN. I would like to call attention to the fact that the Democrats are really by their action advocating the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. They will not strike it out.

Mr. BRYAN. They would like to strike out everything connected with the seamen's bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that is pending before the House is that of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] to strike out the last word. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905, $7,500: Provided, That $5,000 thereof is made immediately available to resume and continue the work relating to the distribution of water, under the direction of the Secretary of State, and as authorized by and in pursuance to the protocol of May 6, 1896, between the United States and Mexico, and to enable the commission to study the questions connected with the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande River between the citizens of the United States and Mexico, and to make an investigation under the supervision of the Secretary of State as to the best and most feasible method of preserving the boundary line between the United States and Mexico by preventing the flood waters of the Rio Grande and its tributaries where the said Rio Grande constitutes said boundary line from disturbing and changing the channel, and also the best and most feasible mode of impounding, regulating, and utilizing said waters in such manner as to secure to each country and its inhabitants their legal and equitable rights and interests in said waters, and to report in detail plans, findings, and conclusions to Congress not later than December 10, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAY). Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to correct the spelling of the word "tributaries" on lines 2 and 3 of page 11.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice, Mr. Chairman, in the report that the Department of State recommended an appropriation of $50,000 in connection with this boundary commission, and the committee has reduced the amount appropriated last year from $15,000 to $7,500, and yet makes available for expenditure this year $5,000.

First, I would like to inquire how much of the appropriation of $15,000 is now available and the reason for the deficiency appropriation of $5,000; and next, the reason for this new authorization about boundary lines between Mexico and Texas, along the Rio Grande.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is not new. It was in the bill of last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, it is all new, I will say to the gentleman, after the first four lines of the proviso.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What does the gentleman mean by the first four lines?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. The language is new from the beginning of line 15, page 10, down to the end.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what I said—that all after the first four lines is new. The proviso begins on the fourth line.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The appropriation of $7,500 is made under treaties between this country and Mexico. There is a commissioner on the part of this country and one on the part of Mexico to establish and keep established, so far as that can be done, the boundary line between this country and Mexico, and an appropriation of $7,500 was made under this treaty. There is another commission, which has been acting under a protocol between this country and Mexico and under the authority of the State Department for quite a number of years, to determine the amount of water of the Rio Grande that citizens of the United States are entitled to and the amount that citizens of Mexico are entitled to.

As far as the boundary-line question is concerned, owing to the disturbed conditions in Mexico there is very little that can be done, and this appropriation was made simply for the purpose of keeping the treaty alive until conditions got better in Mexico.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman furnish to the committee a statement of the amount under the $15,000 appropriation that is now unexpended?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think it is all expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. With nobody representing Mexico, and still the representative has gone ahead and spent $15,000, and you are asking for only $7,500 next year under the same conditions?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman must remember that we inherited these two commissions from a preceding administration. One of them was authorized under a treaty made by an administration prior to this one, and there were a number of officials employed to take the measurements of the waters of this river and kept an office at El Paso and one in Washington. The officials were there, and while they were not doing as much work as they might have done they still were there, and on the pay rolls of the Government. We reduced the appropriation from $50,000 to $15,000, and under that they could keep only a portion of these officials, but they still kept enough of them to consume this $15,000, doing work which, while not strictly under these treaties, was of very great importance to the people on the American border in the State of Texas and work that the State of Texas and the citizens of that State were greatly interested in. We thought they could get along with even less than $15,000, and we cut it down to $7,500, which was enough to keep the organization in existence, so that when matters settle down in Mexico the commission will be there, the treaty will be alive, and our commissioner can cooperate with the Mexican commissioner in settling the questions that arise by reason of the changing channel of the Rio Grande River and the questions that have arisen in the past as to the equitable distribution of water.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is expected that this commissioner will, during the ensuing fiscal year, spend only $2,500?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The boundary-line commission will spend only $2,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think $2,500 will be sufficient to undertake this new work of providing an irrigation system for the Rio Grande?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think it will be sufficient for any purpose in the world except to keep the commission alive. I do not think they can do very much work; but they will be there, and the treaty will be complied with by us, and the institution will be ready to be reestablished and go to work when Mexico gets into a condition to appoint a commissioner on her part.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand, then, that the commissioner, or the attachés connected with the commission, need some new work in order to justify their keeping themselves employed.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not some new work.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what you are delegating in this paragraph.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what you are delegating in this new authorization.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; that work has been done for years. The difference between this bill and previous bills is that formerly the authorization was not made by Congress, but an appropriation of $50,000 was made, and the State Department, under prior administrations, diverted the larger part of this $50,000 to do this work that we have specified here in the second part of this section, without, as we thought, any authority of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Since the new administration has taken hold, do I understand that the new commissioner has done none of the work authorized in this new authorization?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, yes; he did it; but he did it under the authority of Congress in the last appropriation act.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was no such authority in the appropriation act as that contained in the lines following line 20.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It may not have been as specific and detailed as it is in this bill, but still the authority existed.

Mr. GARNER. The authority is given in the treaty.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understood, last year there was a jumble of authority, and the commissioner who had been appointed found that there was no system whatsoever, and he went up to the State Department and protested about the conditions existing and claimed that there were duplications of work and the like, and thereupon the committee rearranged this item and provided a special authorization, as carried in last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that. The committee itself inserted the provision in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was so represented to me by some persons attached to this commission.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Whoever informed the gentleman from Wisconsin was mistaken. The committee saw that that work had not been authorized by law. It was being done, and it was a very valuable work, and the committee put in this provision authorizing it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It must be very valuable if they are going to appropriate only $2,500 for the ensuing year. Therefore I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the amount that has been appropriated, which I think will be interesting to the committee. Since the question of an international boundary between the United States and Mexico arose we have expended $409,000. The appropriations ran year by year from $20,000 to $25,000, and when the new auxiliary came into existence the appropriation of larger sums, as high as $50,000, took place, so that the entire amount expended has been $656,000. The reason the appropriation is only $7,500 was because the committee thought that was sufficient to keep the commission alive, as we knew that there could not be anything done during the present conditions in Mexico, except what would have to be done over again.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice that from the State Department there was a proposition to construct on the upper part of the Rio Grande an irrigation project known as the Engle Dam, and it was thought that they ought to have $50,000 for another project. How much has been expended on the Engle Dam?

Mr. GARNER. About $12,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas says about $12,000,000; that comes under the irrigation laws.

Mr. GARNER. We have no public lands in Texas.

Mr. COX. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana, has this entire sum of money been expended for clerk hire and salaries?

Mr. CLINE. This goes way back to 1884, and that amount has been expended in keeping gaugers and engineers and surveyors, maintaining an office here at this capital in connection with it.

Mr. COX. It is all gone for salaries practically?

Mr. CLINE. Yes; and in determining the boundary rights of the Mexican people and ourselves.

Mr. COX. I do not know anything about the geography in that territory down there.

Mr. CLINE. A part of the money has been expended to determine the geography and where the boundary line was.

Mr. COX. Is it a fact that the Rio Grande is constantly changing its channel backward and forward, washing people that live in the United States over into Mexico, and vice versa?

Mr. CLINE. That is what the committee understands, and the further proposition is added to it to devise ways and means whereby the flood waters of the upper part of the Rio Grande can be impounded and saved.

Mr. COX. How long has that attempt been carried on to impound the flood water of the upper part of the Rio Grande?

Mr. CLINE. It is under advisement; there has been no attempt made to establish reservoirs.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman understand that the project is contemplated to ultimately create the erection of a great dam to impound the headwaters of the Rio Grande and prevent its overflow?

Mr. CLINE. No; I do not understand that there is any proposition determined. That is one of the things the country will have to consider.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have just come in, and I did not hear all the debate on this paragraph. I think it has not been brought out just how the amount in question came to be recommended in the bill. We have been hearing a good deal in the last weeks and months, and very properly, too, about the need of economy in every department of government. We have been told that every Secretary and every subordinate was being urged and required to prune down estimates to the very lowest possible cent. I have in my hand the estimates for the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill of 1916 furnished the Committee on Foreign Affairs by the Department of State. On page 13 of that print I find that in place of the $15,000 which was allotted last year for this Mexican Boundary Commission the sum of $50,000 is recommended this year, an increase of $35,000, or some 300 per cent, over last year.

When the commissioner of that boundary commission, the Hon. John Wesley Gaines, came before the committee he was naturally asked why that increase was necessary at this time, when, as we all know, the boundary conditions are of the most chaotic description, and when it was obvious that in any bilateral undertaking, such as the settlement of a boundary, there could be no effective work done toward fixing that boundary.

Several questions were asked Mr. Gaines along that line. In the course of the testimony he said he had not been consulted in advance by the Department of State as to what amount should be called for. He said he had no knowledge, until the moment he came before our committee, of the amount asked for in behalf of his mission. Then this question was asked him:

> What figures would you suggest in substitution for the $25,000 and the $50,000?
> Mr. GAINES. Make it $25,000 for the waterworks, or so much thereof as is necessary—the usual way when we do not exactly know—and let it be used under the administration of the Secretary of State, and say so literally.

Then, again, later, this question was asked him:

> You have not given us in terms what you say you ought to have in place of the $50,000.
>
> Mr. GAINES. I am not an engineer, and I do not know what it would cost. Let it be $25,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, for waterworks.
>
> Mr. ROGERS. Instead of the $50,000.
> Mr. GAINES. Yes; we do not need $50,000; I have looked far enough into it to see that.

Of course it did not need the testimony of Commissioner Gaines; it was obvious that with the prevailing conditions on the Mexican border, $50,000 could not be judiciously expended there, nor any appreciable part of that sum. The committee thought it was wise and necessary to keep the commission alive, and having heard the testimony of Mr. Gaines, having considered the recommendation of the Department of State, cut the sum down from the $50,000 which the State Department asked, from the $25,000 which the commissioner asked, to $7,500.

Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the recommendation of the Department of State, in these days when the most rigid economy is required in all branches of Government, for three or four times as much as last year, without reason and without foundation, was an insult to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, was an insult to this body. I maintain that those recommendations ought to be made with prudence and foresight, discrimination and care, and that we can not have the slightest confidence in any recommendation unless we know that their advice has been carefully considered by the Department of State, that it represents due study and accurately reflects present-day conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are two typographical errors in this paragraph that ought to be corrected at this time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that we correct those typographical errors in lines 3 and 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the typographical errors will be corrected.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] that the fact that the State Department sent an estimate greater than it turned out was needed to the Committee on Foreign Affairs was an insult to that committee. I think, on the contrary, it showed that the State Department had confidence in the committee, and knew that the committee would investigate the estimate and not make a report in favor of an estimate that was not justified by the facts and the law. And I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the way the State Department fell into this error was because for years, under Republican administrations, they had been sending estimates for this and giving appropriations for $50,000 for this commission, when it was doing no more work then than it did last year on $15,000. I think the committee is deserving of the thanks of the House, as it has the confidence of the State Department, for investigating the estimates so carefully and reporting to this House only such sums as are necessary to properly carry on the work of the projects under that department. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia surely was not serious when he said that they did as much work last year as they did some years ago upon this boundary commission?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am serious in that; yes.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman is not informed as to the facts. There is no work being done on this boundary commission now to speak of. We are paying a salary to a former Member of this House—and I have no objection to that—to maintain the commission alive; but for many years before the Mexican trouble got bad they were really working on this boundary commission.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman makes the statement that they did any work, he is ignorant of the facts.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not. I took the trouble to look this up, something which probably the gentleman has not done. There was a great deal of actual work done on this boundary commission, actual work in the field as well as in the office. It is a mere honorary position now, a sinecure.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was a sinecure before, and for years the only thing the commission did was to work on what is known as the Chamizal case, being a litigation between citizens of this country and citizens of Mexico to determine in which country about 600 acres of land at El Paso was located. For years an appropriation of $50,000 was made to keep up this commission, with a long list of high-paid officials, and, so far as we were able to find out, the only work they accomplished was the work they did on this Chamizal case, determining in which country a few bancos were located. When these gentlemen who constitute this commission came before the committee they themselves could tell of no other work that had been done. I was justified in saying that the work done by this commission last year upon $15,000 was as great as the work that had been done heretofore for $50,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, draftsmen, and clerks as are necessary; and for the more effective demarcation and mapping, pursuant to the treaty of April 11, 1908, between the United States and Great Britain, of the land and water boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, as established under existing treaties, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, including the employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, draftsmen, and clerks as are necessary, and commutation to members of the field force while on field duty, actual expenses not exceeding $2.50 per day each, to be expended in accordance with regulations from time to time prescribed by the Secretary of State, $40,000, together with the unexpended balance of previous appropriations for these objects: Provided, That hereafter advances of money under the appropriation, "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada, and the United States and Canada," may be made to the commissioner on the part of the United States and by his authority to chiefs of parties, who shall give bond under such rules and regulations and in such sum as the Secretary of State may direct, and accounts arising under such advances shall be rendered through and by the commissioner on the part of the United States to the Treasury Department as under advances heretofore made to chiefs of parties.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Wisconsin reserve a point of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why the provision is inserted on page 12, line 7, "that hereafter advances of money, etc.," thereby making permanent law?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it was in order to pay promptly the parties that the commissioners sent up on the Canadian boundary line. The representation made to the committee was that when the vouchers had to go through the State Department the pay was delayed and these parties were a long time getting their pay. It was practically done in this way before, but they wanted authority of law. They had been doing it in this way, but some question was raised by the Auditor of the State Department, and in order to prevent delay in paying these rodmen and laborers and others they wanted the matter made clear. We understand that the work will probably be completed within a year or two.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That being true, there was less necessity for making it permanent law than if it were going to continue for a longer period of time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No. These men go up into the woods in Maine and they have a great deal of trouble getting up there and they need their pay promptly.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. What is the reason that that can not be done without this proviso?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. My recollection is that Dr. Tittmann said they would have to get a voucher for each man and it would have to come back and be certified by the State Department before the auditor would pay.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, if the gentleman would leave out the word "hereafter," it would effect the same purpose.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The purpose of this was to make it only apply to this particular appropriation.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment to strike out the word "hereafter" in line 7, page 12.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The amendment is acceptable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have a reservation of a point of order pending. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the chairman of the committee, so far as the present explanation has been made, that there is any urgent need of giving the chairman of this commission full authority to control the moneys expended by the commission. We are acquainted with conditions existing in other branches of the service where the persons who perform work in the field receive their money direct and are obliged to give vouchers therefor, and I do not think it is a very good system of accounting to pay over the money entirely to one man, even though he is under bond, and allow him to determine whether the money is properly expended by his subordinates. I think it is a better system of checks and control to have the individual employees give vouchers, as in the Postal Service, rather than depute to one man the privilege and have the money go through his subordinates without check or control. Now, it is true the Coast and Geodetic Survey has it to some extent, but I question whether we should depart from the present practice; and unless the gentleman can give some further reason, I shall feel constrained to make the point of order on the proviso.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Here is what the commissioner said:

The system of direct advances to chiefs of parties has caused serious delays, principally because as much as a month elapses between the time a field officer makes requisition for funds and the date he receives notice that they are placed to his credit, and, further, because the system of direct advances to field officers imposes upon them the necessity of extensive accounting.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman that I read the report, but it did not satisfy me there should be any change made. Here under the existing practice the chief of parties receives these moneys, and he accounts for them and is obliged to give vouchers. If we pay all that money over to one man there will be no check whatsoever, but merely the bond received from the various individuals.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And the account he renders for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The comptroller and auditor do not pass upon those. I think, Mr. Chairman, it would be a bad practice to adopt this policy, and therefore I make the point of order on the proviso, beginning line 7, page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by inserting after the word "necessary," in line 2, page 12, the following: "And including a sum not exceeding $50 per month as additional compensation for the clerk of the Coast and Geodetic Survey disbursing these funds."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Does the gentleman wish me to reserve it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will reserve it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to carry out what was recommended by the State Department. The State Department recommended that the chief clerk of the Coast and Geodetic Survey be paid an additional $50 per month as disbursing agent. Now, when this commission was organized, in 1903, the chief clerk was asked to take charge of the disbursements, and for many years he continued this work until it became quite onerous. In 1913 a letter was written to the chief clerk, Nicholas G. Henry, which is as follows:

MARCH 24, 1913.

Mr. NICHOLAS G. HENRY,
Coast and Geodetic Survey, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At the request of Mr. O. H. Tittmann, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, you are hereby appointed a special disbursing agent of this department to disburse, under the direction of Mr. Tittmann, so much of the appropriation of $75,000 provided for in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act of April 30, 1912, and the unexpended balance of previous appropriations as may be actually necessary to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties and for the more effective demarcation and mapping, pursuant to the treaty of April 11, 1908, between the United States and Great Britain, of the land and water boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada as established under existing treaties.

It has been decided to allow you $50 per month for your additional services as special disbursing agent of the department, to cease when in the judgment of Mr. Tittmann your services are no longer required.

A blank form of bond for execution by you in the penal sum of $20,000 is herewith inclosed, together with three cards which you are requested to sign for the use of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ALVEY A. ADEE,
Acting Secretary of State.

Now, Mr. Henry entered upon the work and for several months he received $50 per month, but the auditor in looking over the accounts decided that there was no authorization for this $50 per month, and, though he was doing the work and had been paid, decided that he could not be paid because there was no authorization. So he put it up to the comptroller and the comptroller decided definitely that the payment could not be made, because there was no authority for it.

Now, Mr. Henry has continued to do that work. He is a splendid and efficient man. He gets only $1,800 a year, and he has spent the larger part of his leave each year in catching up with this disbursing work and tabulating it, and so forth. In fact, I believe he received last year nine and three-eighths days of his entire leave, and the balance of it he spent on his books in this matter. Each and every day during the year he keeps these accounts. He can not do it during his time in the office, because he has too much other work to do, and he does it after his hours are over, at night. He is a man who knows how to do it, has made a splendid official, and he has been in the department for years, and has been doing this work. The State Department wants him to have the $50 per month; the State Department, under Acting Secretary of State Adee, wanted him to have the $50 per month; and there is no authorization for it. He has been doing the work outside of his regular official duties, and he has been giving a bond of $20,000 for the faithful performance of that work, and the premium on that $20,000 bond he has been paying out of his own pocket. He could not complain, because he accepted the job, and he believed he was going to get the $50 a month, but the comptroller found he could not be paid. I know this gentleman, and I believe that you, if you could see him and talk to him, would find out, as I have found out, that this is a meritorious case and that he is entitled to this money.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to have the gentleman yield to me long enough to ask the chairman of the committee who acts as disbursing clerks of these other commissions?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have only a couple of minutes. I will not yield for a question as to some other commissions. If you want to ask about this one, all right.

Mr. BORLAND. It strikes me that this can not be an isolated case. It must occur in other commissions.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think there must be some money provided out of which they are paid in those other funds. I am anxious that this man should receive this extra $50 a month, because he has performed the duty, and the State Department says he ought to have it and they recommend it. We did not have all the facts before us, and it was stricken out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a remark or two concerning the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COX. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to increasing the salaries, especially of this commission. It has been the most expensive piece of work that this Government has ever undertaken by way of a commission. We have expended on the boundary line between Alaska and Canada—and I am not finding any particular fault with that, because the difficulties necessarily encountered to establish the boundary line there are very great—we have expended in establishing the boundary line between Alaska and Canada $668,000 in round numbers.

Mr. COX. How long has it been running?

Mr. CLINE. From 1905 to 1912. The unfinished work, which was a very small amount, was then transferred from the Alaska boundary line to the commission that had charge of the boundary line between the United States and Canada, and the total amount expended between the United States and Canada, and that work consisted chiefly of remonumenting the line, the line having been established some time about 1850. But we have expended in remonumenting that line $749,176, and this commission did not have jurisdiction over more than 1,000 miles of the line between the United States and Canada. Over 1,000 miles of the line is a water boundary under the jurisdiction of another commission. It illustrates the absolute necessity for some different manner of making appropriations for these commissions. As I have said, we expended $749,176 to establish the Canadian boundary. To survey the Northern Pacific Railroad from 1866 to 1870—and I understand they made three surveys; that is, they surveyed three different routes—the directors of the organization spent only $250,000. I am not including the amount, of course, that the Government paid for sending the Army along to keep the Indians off the survey. But the actual expenses of the survey by the directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad were $250,000, and yet we have spent in remonumenting this line between the United States and Canada $749,176, and the end is not yet.

I shall incorporate at this point in my remarks the data furnished me by the State Department showing the amounts appropriated, available, and expended, respectively, on the boundary between the United States and Alaska and between the United States and Canada year by year since the projects have been undertaken.

The appropriations, "Boundary line, United States and Canada," and "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada," were combined by Congress for the fiscal year 1913, the unexpended balances of both appropriations being reappropriated and made available for use, together with the new appropriation, under the title, "Boundary line, United States and Canada and Alaska and Canada."

Appropriation, "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada and United States and Canada," fiscal years 1913 to 1915.

Year.	Appropriations and balances.	Total available.	Expenditures.	Balances.
1913	$75,000.00 [1] 90,974.51 [2] 76,571.65	$242,546.16	$182,851.29	$59,694.87
1914	100,000.00 [3] 59,694.87	159,694.87	122,298.82	37,396.05
1915	100,000.00 [3] 37,396.05	137,396.05	.....	.....

[1] Available balance from appropriation "Boundary line, United States and Canada, 1912."
[2] Available balance from appropriation "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada, 1912."
[3] Available balances from appropriations for 1913 and 1914, reappropriated and made available for expenditure during fiscal years 1914 and 1915, respectively.

I want to say that it illustrates the viciousness of making a lump-sum appropriation to these commissions. Of course, they say a man ought not to complain about a method for expending money when he has no better theory to advocate, but there is not a man here who is acquainted with private business who would turn over such sums to be expended without better supervision. And we have made available in several instances more than $250,000 to this commission to dip into and spend here and there wherever they thought it was necessary. I say that is a waste of public funds. It is illustrated by a remark I once heard from a great Republican orator who is now deceased. He said that Uncle Sam would spend a dollar as though it was a leaf and that leaf as though he owned the whole unbounded forest. I simply make the statement that we are compelled to take these estimates from men who are interested always in increasing their respective appropriation, and we have no way of determining the actual amount necessary. We ought not to make such an appropriation as this, and for that reason the committee at this time cut down the amount that was appropriated to $40,000 and made available the unexpended balance. The commission last year worked from about the 1st of May to the 1st of October. Of course, the surveyors come back and make a permanent record of the field notes and the topographers make the necessary maps in connection with the survey. But no man can make me understand that it is necessary to spend in remonumenting the line between the United States and Canada $746,000, with two or three years yet to run.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 12, line 3, after the word "duty," the comma and inserting the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 12, line 3, by striking out, after the word "duty," the comma and inserting the word "or."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether that is the proper thing to do; but the language of the bill as it reads, I think, can not be understood. It says, "Commutation to members of the field force while on duty, actual expenses not exceeding $2.50 per day each," and so forth. If the commutation is to be limited to $2.50, then the amendment that I have offered is the proper amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What is the language now?

Mr. MANN. "Commutation to members of the field force while on duty, actual expenses not exceeding $2.50 per day each." In either case the amendment I offer limits the commutation.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LINTHICUM. In reference to what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] says about increasing salaries, I think this stands on a different basis from the ordinary increase. Here is a man who was appointed by the Secretary of State to do this work. He was ordered to do it, and he took out a bond of $20,000, and he has been disbursing over $200,000 each year. He was receiving $50 a month for this service, according to the Secretary's own letter. Yet you say he should not have it. If he took that appointment in good faith and has done the work and given the bond and paid for it out of his own pocket in all equity he is entitled to the increase promised him by the department.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. Is not that the argument that any man can make about increasing his salary?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No. Here is a man who is appointed to an office outside his regular duties. He is ordered to give a bond. He gives a bond, and he pays for it out of his own pocket, and does the work, and now you say he ought not have the salary promised him.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Is it not a fact that this salary was contracted for and paid for some years and then under a ruling of the auditor he had to refund?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is a fact that he received it for several months, and when the auditor said there was no authority for it, he received it no longer; and then the State Department recommended that it be put into the bill, so that he would have the authority to pay him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. When was that decision made?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know exactly; but it was about three months after March 4, 1913—in June or July. There was a decision to the effect that he could not receive it. He has since been doing the work and paying the premium on the bond.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is his salary?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Eighteen hundred dollars. He is earning it. I am sorry that the gentleman saw proper to make the point of order to that. It is a just claim.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Is there any question about the authority of the official who wrote that letter and made that promise?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know anything about the authority he had. He was the Acting Secretary of State. I presume he thought he had the authority. He thought the money could be paid out of the regular fund as compensation for his services as disbursing agent, and he told him to go ahead and do it, and he did it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL PRISON COMMISSION.

For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission, and the expenses of a commission, including preparation of reports, $2,550.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. What does the evidence show as to what that $2,500 is expended for?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It began many years ago, I think in 1846. I think the organization was effected on the initiative of this country. Conferences are held every five years. Twenty nations are members of it. The object is to study the treatment of criminals, to promote prison reform, the general suppression of crime, and the rescue of children. The United States became a member 20 years ago. The first regular appropriation we made was in 1897. The quota was paid to the prison bureau at Berne, Switzerland. The American commissioner is Dr. Charles R. Henderson. He is under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. His reports have to be made to the Secretary of State.

Mr. BORLAND. How much was the first appropriation?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The same as this one.

Mr. BORLAND. About $2,500 a year?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. How does it happen that our expenses as one member of that body run $2,500 a year? With the meeting only once in five years, how can they absorb that amount of money?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They keep a bureau at Berne, with a considerable number of clerks and officials in it, and get out very valuable literature. There are only 20 adhering nations, so that does not mean a very large total amount of money. They pay in proportion to the population, I think, so they do not all pay as much as we do.

Mr. BORLAND. There is a meeting only once in five years?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They meet only once in five years, but the work is kept up all the time. The bureau is maintained regularly.

Mr. BORLAND. Once in five years we send representatives, do we?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Once in five years there is a meeting of the representatives of these different nations.

Mr. BORLAND. Do we have an additional expense at that time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; this appropriation covers that.

Mr. BORLAND. Are all of the expenses paid out of this fund?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The expenses of our commissioner, Dr. Henderson, of Chicago, are paid out of it; yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I thought something in the hearings of the committee would show what they spent the money for.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Some of it is spent in publication work.

Mr. BORLAND. Do we have a separate employee there?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. BORLAND. No American representative?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; but the reports are published and sent out.

Mr. BORLAND. I take it when we have occasion to send a delegate to that meeting we send some American official who is in Europe, convenient to the place of the meeting, do we not?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; Dr. Henderson, of the University of Chicago, goes as our delegate.

Mr. BORLAND. What is his official position?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Dr. Charles R. Henderson, of the University of Chicago, is the representative of this country in that congress.

Mr. BORLAND. That amount seems to be a good deal in comparison with the amount we pay for keeping up the bureau for the suppression of the African slave trade. That is only $125.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. But the activities of this bureau are much larger. The printing is considerably more.

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose the committee have looked into it to see whether this continuing expense ought to go on.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I notice in the hearings, according to the statement of Mr. Carr, that this is the sum contributed annually, and that it has remained the same for many years, although the population has increased; that it is now proposed to request the Government to contribute the maximum sum mentioned, namely, 50 francs for each 1,000,000 inhabitants, and that several governments have already signified their intention to grant this increased contribution. This is the quota of the United States in that amount.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has the gentleman from Virginia any objection to recurring to page 12, line 24, for the purpose of inserting a comma after the word "Continent"? There should be one there.

Mr. FOSTER. The enrolling clerk has the power to correct the punctuation.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent to insert a comma after the word "Continent," in line 24, page 12. I do not press it at all unless the gentleman from Virginia agrees to it. As it reads there it says, "in a certain defined zone of the African Continent of firearms."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert a comma after the word "Continent," in line 24, page 12. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAN AMERICAN UNION.

Pan American Union, $75,000: Provided, That any moneys received from the other American Republics for the support of the Union shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit, in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the chairman of the governing board of the Union for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Union and of carrying out the orders of said governing board: And provided further, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin not to exceed 6,000 copies per month, for distribution by the Union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what amount of money has been contributed by the different American Republics.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. To the Pan American Union?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The rest of them contribute $50,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. I notice it says here—

That any moneys received from the other American Republics for the support of the union shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit, in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the chairman of the governing board of the union for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the union and of carrying out the orders of said governing board.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is based on population.

Mr. GOULDEN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION.

To meet the share of the United States in the expenses for the calendar year 1914 of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration, created under article 22 of the convention concluded at The Hague, July 29, 1899, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, $1,250.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the chairman's attention again to the fact that here is a very important international organization, and our contribution to that is only $1,250. It does seem on further investigation that $2,550 for a prison commission is an amount that is not properly represented by the amount of work that we get out of them.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The committee did not agree with the gentleman about that. They did make inquiry into it, and as the gentleman from Mississippi called the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact, it was the purpose to increase it rather than to decrease it. They seem to have the idea that the work that is appealing to the different countries which are parties to it is a work that is valuable to those who are interested in improving prison conditions all over the world.

Mr. BORLAND. I have never seen or heard of any of their work, so it can not be very far-reaching.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman from Illinois by my side and the gentleman from Illinois on the other side and the committee have inquired into it, and they are all of the opinion that the work is very valuable, and probably next year there will be a proposition to increase the appropriation.

Mr. BORLAND. And I think the proposition will not be met. Twelve hundred and fifty dollars for the international bureau of the permanent court of arbitration is a very reasonable sum, but $2,550 for a prison commission seems to me more than we get out of it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I make the suggestion that the amount of which the gentleman speaks as being somewhat extravagant carries a delegate?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. A commissioner.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I used the word delegate to bring out the idea of a representative. In the Hague tribunal the appropriation does not cover the delegate, but only our proportional part for the maintenance of the bureau itself.

The Clerk read as follows:

The judge of the said court and the district attorney shall, when the sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghai, receive in addition to their salaries their necessary actual expenses during such sessions, not to exceed $10 per day for the judge and $5 per day for the district attorney; and so much as may be necessary for said purposes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire the reason why you single out the district attorney and pay his actual expenses, and not accord the same consideration to the marshal and the clerk when they are obliged to accompany the court when held at some other place than Shanghai.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We do it in the interest of economy.

Mr. STAFFORD. You have been doing it all along, and it is not fair treatment. Why single out one and deprive the other two, who have equally meritorious claims, when they are obliged to accompany the court when held at a place other than Shanghai? If the gentleman is going to economize, why not eliminate all? Why single out the higher officials and leave the fellows with smaller salaries to pay their own expenses?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am willing to eliminate all of them. We have carried this provision for years. We inherited it and have not thought to change it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I think they have a court bailiff at each place.

Mr. STAFFORD. But they have no clerk.

Mr. MANN. I think they have.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been informed that they have not, and that the clerk is obliged to accompany the court to each place.

Mr. MANN. They could have a clerk at each place.

Mr. STAFFORD. I say that the clerk is entitled to his expenses as well as the marshal.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The clerk and the marshal can have deputies at these places.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman realizes that that would cost a great deal more than it would to pay their expenses, at not to exceed $5 a day, when accompanying the court.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The marshal could not have a deputy unless he paid him, because his salary is fees.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt he has a bailiff.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not sufficiently advised about that, but I do not believe that the gentleman or his committee is in favor of putting a wet blanket on the judge and district attorney holding court at other places than at Shanghai when the purpose of justice demand, which would happen if you struck out these lines.

I will not offer an amendment this year, but I would like to have the gentleman and his committee next year inquire into as to why the clerk and the marshal should not receive the same treatment.

Will the gentleman kindly bear in mind next year an inquiry into whether there is any reason for not paying the clerk's expenses if he accompanies the court, as I understand he does.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; we will look into it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. I have understood that in this court in China, where we are paying a total of $28,800 a year, that there are not more than a dozen cases a year, and that those are of trivial importance.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is mistaken. I made a special inquiry of a gentleman in the State Department, whom I believe is as well informed as anyone in this country about this, and he told me that the business was considerable.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood from a gentleman who has been practicing before that court more or less, and was told within an hour, that there were very few cases.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Who is the gentleman to whom the gentleman alludes?

Mr. BAILEY. A Mr. Curtis.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He has been before committees of Congress here for the last four or five years making representations about this court that an investigation of our committee does not show to be correct.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman was before a committee of which I have the honor to be a member a few months ago and made certain charges, which were so well sustained that the judge against whom they were filed was compelled to retire, and did retire.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is now another judge there.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I referred to his statement about there being no business before the court. I was informed, as I say, by an official of the State Department that there was a great deal of business in this court and that Mr. Curtis's statement in reference to that matter is incorrect. He made that statement to me. I do not know that he ever appeared before the committee, but he made it to me personally, and he has been around Congress here making attacks on this court for a number of years on account of differences which he had with the judge who has resigned.

Mr. BAILEY. I have also been informed, whether correctly or not, that the district attorney in the China court was not a lawyer at all.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, that is a mistake. I think the gentleman is a young lawyer, but he is a lawyer, and a good one.

Mr. BAILEY. The allegation is made that he is not a lawyer at all.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that I have a friend who is to be marshal of this court and who is also a lawyer.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I believe this court is of sufficient importance to be retained in China on account of the conditions in the Orient at the present time, and even if there were no cases before the court it should be retained for the purpose of maintaining the dignity and standing of the country. The fact of the matter is that many cases are brought before this court, and the marshal made many arrests last year. He made 8 or 10 arrests in December. What I want to call the attention of the committee to is the fact that, while the marshal may have a deputy and the clerk may have a deputy at places where the court is held other than Shanghai, there is but one stenographer connected with the court, and his salary is $1,800 a year, and out of that $1,800 a year he has to pay all of his traveling expenses and his hotel bills while he is absent from the location of the court at Shanghai. I think that next year the committee ought to arrange for the proper care of these lower paid officials.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, United States agency: Two counsel, at $2,520 per annum; one stenographer, at $1,200 per annum; and messenger, $720 per annum; in all, $4,440.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to strike out the words "in all, $4,440."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 25, strike out the words "in all, $4,440."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the item says "two counsel, at $2,520 per annum." Is it intended to have two counsel at that sum each?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It would be necessary to say "each," then; and then the gentleman could move to change the total. As the bill reads without the word "each" the two counsel combined would get $2,520.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the intention of the committee is to provide for two counsel at $2,520 each, and I make that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 24, after the word "annum," insert the word "each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now I suggest that the gentleman correct the total.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the former amendment in respect to the total and offer another amendment, to change the figures "$4,440" to "$6,960."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 25, strike out "$4,440" and insert "$6,960."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a few questions in regard to this item, in which I notice that there is a considerable reduction. I certainly do not take any exception to that, but I am interested in knowing exactly how the committee arrived at a knowledge of what particular positions should be eliminated. For instance, I notice here that the bill provides for two counsel at $2,540 each. At the same time the committee has eliminated the position of joint secretary provided for under current law. I assume the gentleman will say that this economy was made possible by the fact that it is not expected that the commission will be able to do much during the next fiscal year toward the settlement of claims. If that be true, I do not understand why you want two counsel. It seems to me a secretary might be needed for the purpose of taking care of the business and papers, and so forth, of the commission.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman the committee thought this tribunal would be able to do very little work during this year, but it was constituted under a treaty, and we thought it wise to keep the tribunal together and to keep some person in charge of the office who would take charge of the papers, the books, the briefs that had been prepared when the tribunal last met; and in doing that we decided to dispense with the high-priced lawyers, such as the agent at $7,500, the attorney at $5,000, also dispensing with the law clerk at $1,800; and we kept those two attorneys, one of whom would act as disbursing officer, and they could work on those cases during the time between now and the next assembling of the tribunal, and by making this arrangement we save $40,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Do I understand it is expected that one of the counsel shall act in the place of the secretary?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Act as disbursing officer instead of the joint secretary; that was the idea the committee had.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The item does not say so; it makes no provision for that.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The duties may be imposed upon him by the Secretary of State.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I was going to suggest there is no work for a joint secretary while the commission is not in session, and this work is being carried on and the pending cases are being carried on by these two counsel.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. From the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia, it seems to me the only work that is expected to be done by this commission during the next fiscal year would be such as is usually done by a secretary.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This is not the secretary. This is the joint secretary, the secretary who acts and works when England and the United States are both represented.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not going to offer any amendment, for if I had any idea of doing so I do not think it would be adopted; but from the statement made in detail of the duties of these counsels it seems to me they are more peculiarly the duties of the secretary rather than of a counsel, as I understood the gentleman to say that about all to be done was to look after the papers, books, and briefs, and keep the records straight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Just a moment. No; the joint secretary acts as disbursing officer of this tribunal, and we think one of these attorneys can do that, and then they could spend their time preparing cases that they already have, so as to be ready to submit them to the tribunal when it next meets; but I believe the result will be that the State Department will not keep at least one of them. I think there is only one there at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fisheries convention, United States and Great Britain: For the payment of the actual and necessary expenses of a commissioner on the part of the United States under the convention between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, signed at Washington on April 11, 1908, while engaged in work under the convention, including clerical expenses that may be incurred in carrying out the convention during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether this commissioner is the commissioner who agreed to a convention between this country and Canada that has not been approved?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I could not hear him.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to know whether the commissioner provided for in this fisheries matter is the commissioner who agreed to a convention between the United States and Canada that has not been approved?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to pass over the next paragraph temporarily.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the next paragraph be passed temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to pass the next paragraph temporarily. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF THE CONSULAR SERVICE.

For salaries of consuls general and consuls, as provided in the act approved January —, 1915, entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," $1,060,000: Provided, That the amount appropriated for salaries of consuls general and consuls contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," approved June 30, 1914, is hereby made available for salaries of consuls general and consuls at the rate of compensation specified in the act entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," approved January —, 1915; and that there is also hereby appropriated for salaries of consuls general and consuls, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of the said act of January —, 1915, the additional sum of $13,333.35.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer several amendments to that. The first one is in line 15, page 19, to strike out the figures "$1,060,000" and insert "$1,069,000." It was a typographical error. The amount the committee intended to report was $1,069,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Then, in line 13, strike out the word "January" and insert "February 5."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And then, on the same page, line 24, strike out the word "January" and insert "February 5."

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And on page 20, line 3, the same amendment, to strike out "January" and insert "February 5."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this is also a deficiency appropriation, and, that he may not overlook it when he comes to draw the bill a year from now, I wish to say that it is in line with the first item of the bill that I called to his attention.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF CONSULAR INSPECTORS.

For the actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses of consular inspectors while traveling and inspecting under instructions from the Secretary of State, $15,000: Provided, That no inspector shall be allowed expenses for subsistence in excess of $10 per day.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. This proviso authorizes $10 a day for subsistence, I think that is too much. When we passed the consular reorganization bill, I think in that bill, as far as they were concerned, we changed it to $5 a day.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Five dollars a day.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman willing to do that here?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$10" and insert "$5."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 12, strike out "$10" and insert in lieu thereof "$5."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Allowance for clerk hire at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $493,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I notice that here is an increase in these Democratic times of $117,800 in clerk hire alone. The committee states it is occasioned by substituting American clerks for clerks of the domicile where these consular offices are established, and also by reason of increased work. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much is due directly to increase of salaries occasioned by the employment of American clerks and how much by reason of increased service?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The proposition is to increase the clerical force at the consulate and to eliminate from it, as far as possible to do, everybody except Americans. They have now in some of these consulates people working for $400 to $600 a year who are natives of the country in which the consulates are located, and it has been the purpose of the department for quite a number of years to eliminate the foreign employees and fill our consulates with Americans. That has been done to some extent already, and appropriations have been increased for that purpose. I can not say exactly how much we will use for that purpose, but enough will be used to carry that into effect and the balance of it for the giving of more clerical force to these consulates which the department does not think have a sufficient clerical force. In many instances the consuls have to do the clerical work and can not get around sufficiently to gather information valuable to the department and to our mercantile people.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the report of the department that is included on page 11 of the report I find that the amount now appropriated would provide one clerk at $1,259 for each office. Does that refer to the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is an allowance of $1,259 for a clerk for each consular office. Now, you propose to increase this appropriation nearly one-third, nearly 33⅓ per cent, in these pressing times of economy?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We did not think this was an item upon which to economize. When the opportunity for enlarging the commercial influence of this country all over the world is so great, we did not think it was time to economize in our consular work.

Mr. STAFFORD. The question of enlarged activities is not involved at all. They have clerks, but they happen to be natives of the country in which they are located. Now you propose to send American clerks to those places and you will be obliged to send them at increased salaries. We have an item just preceding for 40 consular assistants at $40,600, an average of a little over $1,000, and yet you are proposing here, without any information as to the increased salaries to be paid to these men in these pressing times, over $117,000 additional to be paid at the will of the Secretary of State and in a haphazard way.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is not haphazard and it is not at the will of the Secretary of State. It is in pursuance of a well-regulated system conducted by gentlemen who are familiar with the situation and necessities confronting our Consular Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says that will improve the system, and yet he has no facts to present to the committee when I asked him what the facts are.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have stated the facts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I asked him at the very start, and he stated that he could not furnish the information, as to how much of the increase would be occasioned by the substitution of American clerks for these foreigners, and how much for increased work. The gentleman stated he could not furnish the information.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, I can not furnish that, and that is a matter of very minor importance; very minor importance indeed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, very minor importance to the Democratic chairman of the committee that is appropriating $117,000 more than the total appropriation for this item in the bill of last year.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman wants to clog the commercial prosperity of this country and our efforts to extend our trade in foreign lands, let him vote against the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has never been any opposition by Republicans at any time to the improvement of the service; in fact, the reorganization of the service as to these clerks was adopted by a Republican administration about 10 years ago; but this is only a means of creating places and taking care of some favorites.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, that is too despicable an argument to call for an answer.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a word?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia knows that the gentlemen on this side of the House are asking the courtesy of that side of the House, which the gentleman, I know, is very willing to grant.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LINTHICUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. POWERS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John Storms, H. R. 1480, first session Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. ALEXANDER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Catherine J. Thomas, H. R. 16768, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George Tederbaum, no adverse report having been made thereon.

H. J. Res. 391. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to postpone the sale of fur-seal skins now in the possession of the Government until such time as in his discretion he may deem such sale advisable.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 19376. An act confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington; and

H. R. 19545. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HELVERING was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of illness.

PURCHASE OF SHIPS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the conferees on the part of the House on the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe: Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. HARDY, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, and Mr. HINDS.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order made, until to-morrow, Saturday, February 20, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of the First Presbyterian Church of Darien, Ga., v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1614); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. Letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting schedule of papers and documents which are not needed in the transaction of public business in the Post Office Department and which have no permanent value or historical interest (H. SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 20, 1915.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 19, 1915.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Fletcher	Overman	Smoot
Brady	Gallinger	Page	Stone
Brandegee	Gronna	Perkins	Thomas
Bryan	James	Poindexter	Thompson
Burleigh	Jones	Ransdell	Tillman
Burton	Kenyon	Robinson	Townsend
Catron	Kern	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Chamberlain	La Follette	Shafroth	Walsh
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Sheppard	Warren
Colt	Lodge	Sherman	White
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Shively	Works
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was requested by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to state that he is detained from attendance at this time on the Senate by work upon the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has been called home on account of the death of a dear friend, and will be absent for several days.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] on account of sickness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on the amendment of the committee on page 124.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to be heard very briefly on the pending amendment. I represent an agricultural State, and I make bold to say, notwithstanding the very great number of agricultural associations, granges, and other similar bodies in that State, I have not received one request from anyone in Ohio representing the agricultural interest asking for the adoption of this amendment, which is a proof to my mind that the farmers of the country do not desire it.

At this time, when the revenue is less than the expenditure, it seems to me we should hesitate a very long time before adopting any such amendment saddling upon the country so large an expense. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] yesterday suggested a better way for securing these statistics. The method in vogue in North Dakota to which he referred, a report by the assessors, has been adopted in many of the States, and it is possible in that manner to obtain reliable figures.

I recognize that many of the reports have been altogether inaccurate. For instance, for a long time, up until after 1910 the statistics in regard to the number of cattle in the country were erroneous. The accepted figures showed no decrease at any time. But the reports made soon after 1910 showed not only a decrease in proportion to population, but showed an absolute decrease between 1890 and 1900 in number, and only a slight increase between 1900 and 1910. I question, however, whether this method will give us any more valuable statistics than can be obtained in other ways. In addition to that, the decisive argument to my mind is the very large and unnecessary expense contemplated by the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. The yeas and nays, I suggest, have been ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is absent, and for the present I will withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a pair for the day with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and allow my vote to stand.

Likewise, Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. NELSON. I transfer my general pair for the day with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I understand that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer my pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and let my vote stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to announce a pair between the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—12

Bryan	La Follette	Myers	Ransdell
Fletcher	Lea, Tenn.	Overman	Sheppard
Gore	Martin, Va.	Perkins	Warren

NAYS—47.

Ashurst	Fall	Owen	Stone
Borah	Gronna	Page	Thomas
Brady	Hollis	Poindexter	Thompson
Brandegee	James	Pomerene	Tillman
Bristow	Jones	Robinson	Townsend
Burleigh	Kenyon	Root	Vardaman
Burton	Kern	Saulsbury	Walsh
Catron	Lane	Shafroth	Weeks
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Sherman	White
Colt	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Williams
Dillingham	Nelson	Smoot	Works
du Pont	Norris	Sterling

NOT VOTING—37.

Bankhead	Goff	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Camden	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Chilton	Hughes	Penrose	Stephenson
Clapp	Johnson	Pittman	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	Lee, Md.	Reed	Swanson
Crawford	Lewis	Shields	Thornton
Culberson	Lippitt	Simmons
Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Gallinger	McLean	Smith, Ga.

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the vote just taken reinsert lines 1 and 2 of the House text, which were proposed to be stricken out by the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I want to make the appropriate motion that we do not concur in that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be to reconsider the motion whereby the amendment was adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw the suggestion for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was in error about the matter referred to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. It was treated as an amendment to strike out and insert, according to the RECORD. So lines 1 and 2, on page 124, remain in the bill, according to the vote just taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand the Chair to say that the action of the Senate committee in striking out those lines stands?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Those two lines, as I understand, are now restored and constitute a part of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Lines 1 and 2 remain in the bill now, in accordance with the vote of the Senate on the amendment, which was an amendment to strike out and insert—to strike out lines 1 and 2, on page 124, and insert lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. President, I move that lines 1 and 2, on page 124, of the bill be stricken out.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that is exactly what the Senate has acted upon.

Mr. THOMAS. Either I am very obtuse this morning——

Mr. BRYAN. Under the vote taken lines 1 and 2 remain in the bill, and that is what the Senator from Colorado desires.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I want them stricken out. In other words, I want that section repealed as the House proposed to repeal it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is done.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is done by restoring those lines. It repeals the law, and if we do not make the appropriation under the law it ought to be repealed.

Mr. THOMAS. I am entirely in accord with that view.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is exactly what is done. The ruling of the Chair is that those lines remain in the bill and that the law is repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does this complete the committee amendments?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This completes the committee amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the item for Division of Loans and Currency, on page 39, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "5," where it first occurs, and to insert in lieu thereof "6," so as to read "6 of class 3."

Mr. OVERMAN. This is no increase of the number of clerks over the clerks that are now authorized for that department. This clerk was carried in what is known as the sundry civil bill, and that has been done for 50 years. The department thinks he ought to be carried in the legislative bill, instead of being cared for in the sundry civil bill. While it adds one more clerk here, it is merely the transfer of the provision for this clerk from the sundry civil bill to this bill. That is all the amendment proposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment proposed by Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word or two in reference to this amendment. The committee did not provide for this clerk because the committee was unable to find any human being connected with the Government service who was willing to say that he was needed. I was very reluctant to strike out this salary, which is being drawn, no doubt, by a very worthy and competent person; but the question was raised that the person was not needed, and the other House refused to make the appropriation. I sent to the department and had before the committee the man who ought to have known something about it. He said he was not willing to say that the Government needed the services of this clerk. Therefore the committee did not provide for him. If anybody can now show that he is needed, I shall not have a word to say, but I was unwilling to provide for a clerk when no human being would say that he was needed by the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the facts are these: The chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives came over here and said they had left out the item thinking it would go on the sundry civil bill—it has been on the sundry civil bill for 50 years—and so I offered the amendment. The duties of this clerk are these: It was provided by law, I think, in 1868, that in the destruction of the currency two officials should be assigned from the Treasury Department to see that the destruction was complete, and that one other person should be selected to represent the public. Of course, as to these clerks, I suppose they all represent the public, but the custom of the Government for 50 years has been as I have stated. That is all there is to it. I do not care what is done with the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina, who was present at the hearings and heard the questions asked, if he has been able to find a single officer of the Government who is willing to say that this work is necessary?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator agreed with me that the man who testified did not seem to know anything about his business.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is true; but somebody must be found who knows that the Government needs this clerkship before I can support the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know anything about this; but I know that it has been recommended by the Treasury Department, which estimated for it, and I know the position has been in existence for 50 years. I also know that this clerkship has been provided for in another bill; and if it is going to be provided for, it should be provided for in this bill, instead of in the sundry civil bill, as heretofore.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if these three men are of such a character that they need to watch one another, why ought there not to be another man to watch these three?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am merely stating what the situation is.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I voted against the inclusion of this item for the reason stated by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and for still another reason, which was that after the House had passed the legislative bill they passed the sundry civil bill, and in the sundry civil bill they did not provide for this clerk. So evidently the House did not intend that he should be provided for this year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, on page 59, line 24, the Senate adopted an amendment reducing the lump-sum appropriation of $2,600,000 to $2,500,000 for the payment of revenue agents. This morning I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury stating that that amount can be reduced, without detriment to the service, to $2,200,000, thereby saving $300,000, provided a further amendment is made, which I send to the desk. First, however, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to fixing the amount at $2,500,000, with a view to the reduction which I have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was adopted is reconsidered.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Now, I make my motion to amend by substituting "$2,200,000" in place of "$2,600,000," and following it with the proviso which I have sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 24, in the provision for collecting internal revenue, it is proposed to strike out "$2,600,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$2,200,000" and the following proviso:

Provided, That whenever any cask or package of distilled spirits containing 5 wine gallons or more is dumped by a rectifier for rectification or filled and received from rectification for sale, shipment, or delivery, the same shall be gauged, marked, branded, and stamped by a United States gauger; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury provide that the gauging, marking, stamping, and branding of such packages so dumped for rectification or received therefrom be done by the rectifier instead of by a United States gauger.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the proposed amendment is rather a sweeping one and changes existing law. I should really like to have the Senator having the bill in charge explain just what changes the proposed amendment makes in the present law.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in explanation of the amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; let the letter be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 19, 1915.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MARTIN: I have the honor to transmit herewith a proposed amendment to H. R. 19909, the legislative bill. I respectfully recommend that this amendment be added at the end of line 24, page 59, of the bill.

This amendment will authorize regulations which, if adopted, will save to the Government at least $400,000 annually, without in the least jeopardizing the interests of the Government in the collection of its revenue, and the appropriation of $2,600,000 for salaries and expenses of revenue agents, gaugers, etc., may accordingly be reduced to $2,200,000.

At present spirits dumped by a rectifier are regauged before being dumped by a regular United States gauger, and after being rectified and drawn off into packages they are again gauged. The expense of this gauging is approximately $450,000 per annum.

The gauging of spirits to be dumped for rectification does not in practice operate to protect the interests of the Government. Spirits upon which the Government imposes a tax can be made at distilleries, and at distilleries only. Storekeeper-gaugers are assigned at all distilleries, and spirits produced at registered distilleries are, of course, gauged by these officers, and the tax is paid at the registered distilleries.

If spirits upon which the tax has not been paid get upon the market, whether produced at a regular registered distillery or at an illicit distillery, they are not taken to a rectifying establishment to be rectified but are sold direct to the trade, unless the owner of the rectifying establishment has entered into a corrupt agreement with the gauger assigned to duty at his place. The taking of illicit spirits to a rectifier in no way assists the owner of same in evading the tax, unless the Government officer is corrupt, in which event the rectifying house may be used to dispose of untax-paid spirits.

It is believed that the proposed change, dispensing with the use of gaugers at rectifying establishments, would not result in the loss of any tax whatever to the Government. So far as the records of the Internal-Revenue Bureau show, there has been in the history of the bureau practically no untax-paid spirits discovered, and no tax saved through the instrumentality of gaugers at rectifying establishments.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only objection that I can see to the proposed change in existing law is that, if we adopt this amendment, then there will be only one gauger to do the necessary gauging of rectified spirits. Under the present system there is a check. There are two gaugers, and, of course, under that system it has been practically impossible for corruption to exist; but under the proposed amendment, if there is one dishonest gauger, it may cost the Government a hundred thousand dollars or more per annum. However, so long as we will make a saving of more than that we can perhaps take the chance, and so I shall say nothing more about it, but I myself think it is a little dangerous.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The department says that it can safely be done, and will involve the saving of over $400,000 per annum. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. POMERENE. If there are frauds of that kind, we have secret-service men to look after them. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. REED], who has been suddenly and unexpectedly called from the city, I propose, at his request, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 15, after the words "Assistant Sergeant at Arms," it is proposed to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,500."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as I understand, the reason of this proposed increase of the salary of the Assistant Sergeant at Arms, aside from the belief that the amount now paid is inadequate for the service rendered, is that two officials who are subordinate to the Assistant Sergeant at Arms, namely, the Assistant Doorkeeper and the Acting Assistant Doorkeeper, receive salaries larger than that of the Assistant Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the better plan, therefore, would not be to reduce the salaries of the other two to $2,500 each?

Mr. STONE. I have not made a motion to that effect. Of course I leave that to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I may make that motion, if it is necessary.

Mr. STONE. The motion I make on behalf of my colleague I have submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I simply want to say this amendment was not before the committee; it was never presented to the committee; and has never had any consideration at the hands of the committee. I also wish to say to the Senate, and especially for the information of the Senator from Missouri, that the Assistant Doorkeeper, Mr. Keller, and the Acting Assistant Doorkeeper, Mr. Loeffler, are not under the Sergeant at Arms, but are elected by the Senate; so that they are not subordinates of the Assistant Sergeant at Arms, as the Senator from Missouri seems to think; yet he is proposing to give the Assistant Sergeant at Arms $500 more than either of the officers to whom I have referred receives.

I am very sorry to have to raise my voice against this matter, but I can not give my approval to it. It ought to have had the consideration of the committee, and there ought to have been some investigation of the work of this officer and an ascertainment of the fact that he is inadequately paid, if such be the case; but we have had no opportunity to make that inquiry, because it has not been brought before the committee or considered by it.

Mr. STONE. I have nothing more to say, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. Those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed will say "no." [A pause.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on this matter.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am going to raise a point of order so as to save any question about it. This amendment offends against paragraph 1 of Rule XVI, in that it is not estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is raised that the proposed increase has not been estimated for nor referred to the Committee on Appropriations for examination. Under clause 1 of Rule XVI, the Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order. Is there any appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Chair to say that the point of order was sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to sustain it, in the view of the Chair, under clause 1 of Rule XVI.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have two other amendments I desire to propose and have disposed of. I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The first amendment is proposed in line 20, page 35, increasing the amount from $30,000 to $75,000. I ask to have it read, and then I shall say just a word about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 20, in an amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$75,000," so that if amended it will read:

For emergency clerical services, to be expended by the Secretary of State in his discretion, $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the amendment is clearly in order under the rule. It was not, as I was about to say, introduced and referred to the committee; but the matter was brought up before the Committee on Foreign Relations and there considered, and that committee directed me on its behalf to propose the amendment to the bill which I have just submitted. I did so, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that was done. That occurred several days ago. I do not know whether or not the Committee on Appropriations has considered the amendment; but I gather, if I may be permitted to say so, that the chairman of the committee thinks the amendment is a proper one. If I am mistaken in that, I should be glad to have the chairman correct me now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I think this amendment reducing the amount to $30,000 was first made by the subcommittee. It was before the committee, and the committee fixed on $30,000. I do not know exactly whether or not it is proper that I should go into my personal views about it, but I will say that I really thought it would have been wise legislation to have made the $75,000 appropriation instead of reducing it to $30,000. The committee, however, thought otherwise, and they fixed it at $30,000, and I do not feel justified in departing from that solution of the matter.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not want to consume the time of the Senate, but I have here a letter from the Secretary of State outlining the reasons for this increase which I will read if it is desired. If there is opposition to the amendment, I will have it read.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to have it read.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think the letter was read yesterday, but other Senators are present now, and I think it would be very proper to have it read.

Mr. STONE. Then I will ask the Secretary to read this letter down to the mark I have drawn across on page 3, as that part refers to another matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 16, 1915.

Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Owing to the disturbed situation in European affairs since the 1st of last August I have made effort to secure what seemed to me an absolutely necessary increase in the permanent clerical force of the State Department. The matter was taken up at the proper time with the House committee; but after consideration that committee, in its judgment, declined to grant the requested increase upon the ground that a permanent force once added to would be difficult to decrease. The chairman of the committee subsequently stated—but after the bill had passed the House—that there would be no objection to providing $75,000 for a temporary clerical force. The matter was thereupon submitted to the Senate committee, and they have amended the bill to provide for $30,000. I do not know whether at this late stage it would or would not be possible to secure an amendment of this provision of the legislative bill when it comes up for consideration in the Senate. As you know, we are looking after the interests of practically all the belligerent countries in Europe and this has involved a tremendous additional labor upon the force of this department. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and therefore conversant with the urgent needs of this department, I thought that possibly it would be proper for you to suggest the necessary amendment to the bill during its consideration in the Senate to secure an increase of $75,000 of the allowance for temporary clerical assistance. I would therefore request that you propose the following amendment to the bill when it is presented for consideration in the Senate:

In line 20, on page 35, strike out "$30,000" and insert "$75,000."

This amendment is suggested because I am convinced of its great necessity. It is more than likely that the demands upon this department will increase within the next year or two rather than decrease, and I am hopeful that Congress will place in our hands the means of promptly and efficiently disposing of this great volume of additional duties. Needless to say, I am heartily in favor of keeping our expenses within the lowest possible figures, and I give my assurance that this will be done. But I believe that the increase for emergency clerical service should be fixed at $75,000, so as to insure a proper disposition of our work if the occasion demands it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the amendment is to be proposed it will be necessary to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was adopted on yesterday.

Mr. OVERMAN. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. STONE. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was adopted is reconsidered. The Senator from Missouri moves to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$75,000."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in relation to the proposed increase. The subcommittee that had this matter in hand considered the letter that has just been read, or one very similar to it; and taking into consideration the action of the House in refusing to give anything whatever, and the testimony that it gathered, it was decided that $30,000 would be ample for this particular service. I will admit that it is an estimate made by the subcommittee. We know nothing more about it than what we heard discussed.

I will say further that the Secretary of State says that perhaps he can use the $75,000. We thought it was a very proper thing to allow the $30,000, and if it became absolutely necessary the Secretary of State could do like many other heads of departments and heads of bureaus have done—spend the money, and have it reimbursed by the Government in the next deficiency bill.

That was the condition in which we found things, and that is the position at which we arrived, and the committee approved the action of the subcommittee in that respect. I think the amount of $30,000 ought to remain as it is, and if a larger amount than the $30,000 should be needed, the Secretary of State, as I say, could do as other heads of departments have done, and we could provide for it in the next deficiency bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to this clause in the letter from the Secretary of State which has been read at the desk:

The matter was taken up at the proper time with the House committee, but after consideration that committee, in its judgment, declined to grant the requested increase upon the ground that a permanent force once added to would be difficult to decrease. The chairman of the committee subsequently stated—but after the bill had passed the House—that there would be no objection to providing $75,000 for a temporary clerical force.

I read that merely in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah that the House had not appropriated anything.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood otherwise, but, of course, I shall not dispute the letter. I have understood, however, that some Members of the House did not favor it.

I shall say no more than I have already said, and allow the Senate to decide whether or not the increase shall be made.

Mr. OVERMAN. In general I want to say, as I was the chairman of the subcommittee, that, as I recollect, we had no officer of the department before us at all. We simply had this letter—the same letter that had been before the House committee. The House committee refused to give anything at all, and our committee thought that if we should give $30,000 now to employ emergency clerks, if they should need more there would be another bill coming here in December; and as we want to keep down expenses as much as possible, we just cut it in two. That is the truth of the matter.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, just a word further: It seems to me to be a bady policy, in circumstances such as confront us now, where the department is asking for these emergency clerks, to say that we will appropriate a less sum, assuming that the Secretary may on his own motion go ahead and employ clerks for whom no appropriation has been made, although asked for, leaving it to a future Congress to provide for a deficiency—a deficiency created without authority.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that if this bill carried all the clerks that were asked for by the departments the amount carried by the bill would be increased over $10,000,000.

Mr. STONE. That may be, but——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator further that I am in full sympathy with him that deficiencies should not be allowed. In fact, I have made that statement on the floor so many times that I hardly feel it necessary to repeat it.

Mr. STONE. I know the Senator's attitude.

Mr. SMOOT. But in a case of this kind, if it becomes necessary to incur a deficiency on account of the war conditions, over which no person on earth has any control, it seems to me it should be upon just such occasions and under such circumstances.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question for information?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator whether there is any fund now under which emergencies like this may be partially cared for?

Mr. STONE. The chairman of the committee can better answer that question.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the question, for information, whether there is any emergency fund connected with the State Department or with the other departments under which clerks can be hired for emergencies for a short time without putting them on the regular roll. We hear a good deal about the departments of temporary rolls. Is there any appropriation of that kind in this case?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As far as I know, there is no appropriation available for this purpose. The Secretary may incur a deficiency and rely on Congress to appropriate for it; but there is no fund available in his office for this purpose unless Congress appropriates for it in this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is, as I understand, some fund available in his office, but probably it is for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is. There is none available for this purpose. This is a special purpose, growing out of the present peculiar conditions of the obligations and responsibilities of the State Department in connection with the European situation, and I know of no authority for him to expend any other fund for this purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Has either the senior Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the committee, or the senior Senator from Missouri any knowledge as to where and how this particular fund is to be used? I understand it is for the employment of clerks; but where are they to be employed and how are they to be employed?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. My understanding is that they are to be employed in the State Department here. The letter that has been read gives all the information I have on the subject, however. I have nothing except what is contained in the letter that has been read to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Can the Senator from Missouri give us any information as to that?

Mr. STONE. I can not give definite information on the subject. It is a fact, however, that because of the troublous condition in Europe men employed locally in the State Department have been temporarily transferred to the foreign service to meet emergencies there, leaving the department short-handed here. It may be that emergency clerks employed under this provision, or some of them, might be sent to some of the embassies or legations abroad. I do not know definitely as to that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to ask the Senator if the report that he referred to of the Committee on Foreign Relations was a unanimous report, unanimously recommending this increase?

Mr. STONE. It was unanimous.

Let us have a vote on the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to strike out the words "for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $11,200," and insert the words:

For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $15,000; and the Secretary of State is hereby authorized, in his judgment, to enter into a lease for a period not exceeding five years for the occupancy of a suitable building within close proximity to the Department of State, at an annual rental not to exceed the sum herein appropriated.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will say that this amendment also was considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations at its last meeting on Wednesday and by the authority and under the direction of that committee I reported it to the Senate and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know whether the Committee on Appropriations have taken it up.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Committee on Appropriations considered the amendment and rejected it. We thought the department could get along without it, and we were not willing to make an appropriation under a 10-year lease for this additional sum.

Mr. STONE. May I have what the Secretary of State has to say with respect to it read for the information of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

I had also suggested to the Appropriation Committees of the two Houses the urgent need of a small addition for the rental of buildings in the District of Columbia occupied by the bureaus of this department. At present we have bureaus of the department located in three different buildings widely separated from each other, which renders efficient work of the department most difficult. It is believed that for a small additional rental we will be able to secure a building located in close proximity to the main department building which will enable us to bring the scattered bureaus under one roof and within a short distance of the main building. It is believed that by housing in this proposed building the various international commissions coming under the jurisdiction of this department there will be a considerable net saving in the amount paid for rental purposes. It will not be possible to secure a new building, erected by private parties, without authority to enter into a lease for at least five years. I would, therefore, earnestly ask that lines 12 and 13, on page 36, be amended to read as follows:

"For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $15,000; and the Secretary of State is hereby authorized, in his judgment, to enter into a lease for a period not exceeding five years for the occupancy of a suitable building within close proximity to the Department of State, at an annual rental not to exceed the sum herein appropriated."

If it be found impossible to secure an increase of our present rental from $11,200 to the requested amount of $15,000, I would still ask that I be granted authority to enter into the requested lease for a period of five years, as it may be possible to secure a building of less capacity than that desired but still sufficient to accommodate the department and to bring our rental within the amount appropriated.

I will personally appreciate it if you will offer these suggested amendments when the bill is considered in the Senate, for I am very sure you will recognize the necessity for them.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. STONE. The Senator makes a point of order against it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is legislation. It provides for a 10-year lease. It provides for the construction by private parties of buildings that the Government shall then lease for 10 years.

Mr. STONE. I was about to remark, if the Senator will let the point of order stand for a second——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will withhold it until the Senator gets through.

Mr. STONE. After having heard this communication from the Secretary of State, if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations still feels disposed, as it appears he does, to oppose the adoption of the amendment, I personally would not be willing to press it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is with much hesitation that I do it; but I believe the department can get along very well without it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 137, after the words "for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $66,500," in lines 20 and 21, insert:

Until otherwise ordered by Congress the building known as the Maltby Building and the buildings on the west side of New Jersey Avenue between B and C Streets NW., in the city of Washington, D. C., shall be used for governmental purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make the point of order that that is legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am constrained to do it because we have not time to go into the discussion of a matter that has had no consideration. We could discuss it here for hours and still be unprepared to legislate on it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say to the Senator that the building is about to be destroyed, that it is a separate building, and——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the law requires it, let it be destroyed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no reason on earth for it. We rent public buildings in the District of Columbia aggregating hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This amendment changes a specific law on the statute books, and I insist on the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. The site is a part of the Capitol Park scheme, and the law provides that all those buildings shall be toru down.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but it is not worth anything to the scheme, and I should like to discuss it, because I feel——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the point of order is insisted upon, the Chair will be compelled to sustain it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is insisted upon.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to be heard just a minute on it, anyhow.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I dislike to have the time dissipated in that way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to discuss the bill just a little while.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course, the Senator can discuss the bill. That is his privilege.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there were included in the Capitol park scheme between here and the Union Station 12 or 13 squares. One of them down here is the square on which the Maltby Building has been erected. That has no connection with the vista that goes between the Capitol and the Union Station. The amount of land that should be considered in the scheme, it seems to me, is the land which lies between Delaware Avenue, upon which the Senate Office Building is located, and New Jersey Avenue; that is, to the east line of the Maltby Building. The Maltby Building cost, I have no doubt, $75,000 to $100,000. There is no indication in any way otherwise than that it is a good building, which could be used by the Government for governmental purposes.

Mr. President, it seems to me that when we are trying to save money and they are about to begin the destruction of that building and the other buildings along on the west side of New Jersey Avenue, some one at least ought to put a stop to it until the question can be considered.

I feel, Mr. President, that the destruction of that building is going to be an injury, and it is not going to improve the appearance of the plaza between here and the Union Station. In fact, if those houses are torn down, the houses that will be preserved will be those upon a small street with buildings not near as good looking as those that face east on New Jersey Avenue.

The only excuse I have heard for this is that they desire to make a straight street between the Columbus Monument and the Peace Monument and thereby cut off also a part of the Capitol Grounds. It seems to me that that would be an injury instead of a benefit.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I hope the point of order will be withdrawn and that we may take a vote upon this proposition. It is not something of a permanent nature. It is merely "until otherwise ordered," so that we can look into it; and if we wait until the next session, the building will have been destroyed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 5, after the word "grounds" and before the semicolon, insert a comma and the words:

Under the direction and supervision of the Librarian, who shall hereafter appoint the employees provided for hereunder.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah is general legislation in that it changes existing law. The act passed in 1897 provides that the employees named in the amendment shall be appointed by the superintendent of the library building and grounds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that is the fact, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to come in after line 6, page 140, and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he will not withhold his point of order until I can explain the amendment in just a minute

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I think the point of order is thoroughly understood, and if we are ever to make any progress with the bill when a point of order has been decided it should not be debated. I must insist on my point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I do not want to take the time of the Senate to speak upon the bill. I never undertake to do that upon any bill, and I shall not do it now. I will content myself by simply stating the way the law is now. If the Senator from Tennessee had told me he was going to make the point of order against this amendment, I never would have allowed the amendment offered by the committee to be agreed to. But he did not say he was going to make the point of order. He came and asked me if I would not allow the committee amendment to be agreed to, and I said I would have no objection to the committee amendment, but I should want to offer my amendment.

Mr. President, the way the law is now there is a librarian put in charge of the library and he can not appoint any of the employees of that institution, and he is held responsible for them. The principle is wrong. It is wrong in theory.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does he not appoint 500, the whole crowd, without any supervision from anyone, and promote them as he pleases without and civil-service regulations or anything but his own will?

Mr. SMOOT. He does not under the amendment as proposed now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The employees of the Library proper, I mean.

Mr. SMOOT. Some of the employees in the Library itself he does, but over 200 of them he will not under this provision.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. All I ask is that it be put under the direction and the supervision of the librarian, who shall hereafter appoint the employees provided for hereunder. Mr. President, I of course stated to the Senator that I would not discuss it any further than that, but no business in this country could ever be run successfully by appointing a superintendent of it and then taking all the appointing power out of his hands.

Mr. KENYON. I have proposed an amendment following line 6, page 140. I ask the chairman of the committee to please note it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 140, after line 6, insert the following:

To enable the Department of Labor to make an investigation as to the cost of living of wage earners in the District of Columbia, exclusive of Government employees, and to report to Congress thereon, $6,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I wish to state that there has been a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor upon this amendment, and that it has been favorably reported from that committee. So it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am not prepared to give any concurrence of my judgment that this amendment ought to be adopted, but there is so much feeling in favor of it that, so far as I am concerned, I will be glad, in the interest of economizing time and in the interest of good legislation, to have the amendment adopted and let it go to conference, where it will be carefully investigated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 22, strike out "$2,000" where it occurs and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500," so as to read:

Clerk on Journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be selected by the Official Reporters, $2,500.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suppose everyone in the Senate knows the hard work that little fellow who sits there at the end of the desk does on the Journal work. There is no man in the Senate who does as hard work as he is doing, day and night, in making up the Journal work for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I think his salary ought to be increased.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that this amendment was not brought to the attention of the committee, but I have had expressions in regard to it from so many members of the committee with whom I have talked I believe it would have had the approbation of the committee if it had been before it. I think this employee is underpaid, and, speaking not for the committee but as an individual Senator, as he has performed long and faithful service of a most responsible nature, as his work is very exacting both as to kind and as to the hours he bestows upon it, I believe his salary ought to be increased.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if any estimate has been made for this payment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. None whatever; and I do not know how an estimate could be made. The rule of estimates from the departments can not apply to the employees of the Senate. We estimate for our own employees and no one can make the estimate for us. I do not see that that rule can be brought in as against the Senate's own employees.

Mr. THOMAS. I make a point of order against the amendment for the purpose of testing it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. THOMAS. The point of order is that no estimate has been made for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It could not possibly have been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say——

Mr. THOMAS. I make the further point of order that it was not reported by a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That point of order will have to be sustained.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to be heard on the point of order. I wish to say that in this matter the committee favored the raise of the salary, and it was simply forgotten at the time. Now, as to the estimates covering Senate employees, those estimates do not come up like others. They are simply copied from the appropriation bill of the previous year. There is no one who pretends that the estimates——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That point of order has been overruled.

Mr. WARREN. That I will pass by. On the other hand, this increase has already been heretofore voted in by the Senate, but with other matters it was lost in conference. There is not a single employee of the Senate, among the many faithful ones—and they are all as a class most faithful—who deserves promotion and better pay more than does Mr. Moxley, to whom it is sought to give this slight raise in salary. I want to say that this underpayment has been understood for a long time, we have tried to fix it before, and it ought to be remedied now, letting it go to conference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming does not pretend to say that the Committee on Appropriations reported this item.

Mr. WARREN. I speak now from the Committee on Appropriations when I say it was intended, but it was forgotten. I ask the chairman of the committee whether I am right about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The last point of order made by the Senator from Colorado was that it had not been reported by a standing or select committee. The rule provides that—no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The point of order, as the Chair understood it, was that the amendment had not been moved by direction of a standing or select committee.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the technical position, and I want to appeal to the Senator making the point of order to withdraw it. The amendment was dropped through forgetfulness by the committee. I think the chairman will verify what I say.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it was not brought to my attention. I was not reminded of it. I have thought for some time that his salary ought to be increased, and if it had been brought to my attention when the committee was considering this bill I would have urgently advocated that the amendment be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee last year reported the bill with this item in it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; but that it was heretofore reported would not cover the point of order made now. I can not question the ruling of the Chair. I think it is correct, and we might as well go on with some other matters if the Senator from Colorado insists on his point of order. I regret it exceedingly, because I believe this is a most meritorious proposition and I am very anxious to see it adopted.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment on page 8, at the end of line 4. I will read it. I am not sure that it will appeal to the Senate, but it appeals to me, and at least I will have the opportunity of expressing my opinion upon the subject. It reads:

Provided, however, That the positions of clerks and messengers to committees hereinbefore named shall not continue longer than January 1, 1916.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment because I think we ought to abolish our present system of calling clerks of committees men who are really secretaries to Senators. When we have a clerk of a committee he ought to be the clerk of the committee subject to the call of the members of the committee and not the private secretary of the chairman of the committee. The abuse that has followed the present practice is shown in the bill as it is presented to the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose this amendment is adopted, and on the 1st day of January we make the change; there would be no appropriation after the 1st of January to pay these employees, and we would have to get a new appropriation, unless it was paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate, and the contingent expense fund will not be ample to pay it.

I agree with the Senator that there ought to be a change; but the question is, how are you going to pay these clerks after the 1st of next January if the amendment is adopted?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We could very easily put it on an appropriation bill in December.

Mr. President, what I insist is this: There are committees that need clerks, and those clerks should be in the committee room, subject to the use of members of the committee they are supposed to serve. They should not be the private secretaries of the chairmen of the committees.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I raise a point of order that this is plain legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us see. Is there any law of the Congress of the United States which provides for the appointment of these clerks?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suppose there is; but, independently of that, this makes a change in the law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On the contrary, Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It makes a law to fix the term of office extending it. I think there is a law, and I will ask the clerk of the committee to find it; but, even whether there be a law or not, here it makes a limit on the tenure of office, fixing the time when it shall expire as January 1, 1916.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, Mr. President; and it is done on a bill which undertakes to fix the term itself. The provision of the bill undertakes to fix the term for 12 months, and I undertake to substitute 6 months for the 12 months' provision in the bill.

Mr. President, I insist that members of a committee are entitled to have the services of anyone designated as clerk of the committee for all the members of the committee, and that the practice of having a clerk nominally for a committee who is not a clerk to the committee but who discharges other duties is a misnomer. If we would give each Senator a private secretary——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will permit me, does he know of a clerk of any committee who is not available to every member of the committee at all times? They do a great deal of work for other Senators. I have never heard it suggested since I have been the chairman of a committee that the clerks did not owe the same duty to other members of the committee that they owe to me. No member of the Committee on Appropriations has ever desired the service of a clerk of the Committee on Appropriations that he did not get it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am glad to hear from the Senator from Virginia. I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee and have not had occasion to call on those clerks. What I insist is that the man who is clerk of a committee or the expert of a committee ought to be in the committee room and not in the room of the chairman of the committee. He ought to be there to serve us, and each Senator ought to have for himself the same force; each Senator ought to have a secretary, an assistant secretary, and perhaps a stenographer.

Mr. MYERS. If I may make a suggestion there, I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that the clerk to the Senate Committee on Public Lands and one stenographer are at all times in the Senate Committee on Public Lands whenever the Senate is in session. That committee is open, and those employees devote practically all their time to the committee business. I personally do not get any work out of them at all worth speaking of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Montana is entitled to have for himself, and he ought to have, a secretary, an assistant secretary, and a stenographer while the Senate is in session for his personal work, for the work of his State, and what service the committee requires—the actual committee work—ought to be performed by men who are assigned to the committee.

I am criticizing the plan that I find in force, and which has been in force for years—the using of the term "clerk of a committee" for the place of a secretary to the chairman of the committee, and then adding several other well-paid men called assistant clerks to committees, but who really are used as the personal force of the chairman. I wish to press the fact that the service would be more satisfactory if each Senator were given the same service for himself personally, and if the additional force required for the committee was really set apart exclusively for the committee.

Now, Mr. President, I called attention on yesterday to the force of the Finance Committee. I find for that committee a clerk at $3,000, an assistant clerk at $2,220, and another assistant clerk at $1,600 a year. Although a member of the committee, I know of nothing they do for the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator from Georgia will excuse me, I want to call the attention of the Vice President, who asked whether there is any law in respect to this matter to the fact that I find a provision relative thereto, as follows:

SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

So the salaries are fixed by law. I have read from the legislative act for the year 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the contention of the Senator from Virginia that the language which he has read constitutes an act creating the office?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It fixes the salary of the office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia claim that there is anything in that language except that from year to year the House and the Senate provide for certain clerks and messengers in the annual appropriation bill? Is there any law other than the annual appropriation bill which provides for clerks and messengers?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The legislative bill contains a provision; that is a general law; it is a statute providing that these salaries shall be the permanent law; and it was put in for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. From what section of the law does the Senator from Virginia read?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is section 6——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator again read it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is section 6 of the legislative act for 1915. I will send it to the desk.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the same as the section in the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the same language as that of the pending bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; substantially so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending bill reads:

SEC. 6. The officers and employees of the United States whose salaries are herein appropriated for are established and shall continue from year to year to the extent they shall be appropriated for by Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, that was an annual appropriation bill and this is another annual appropriation bill. If that were a general law which could not be changed in an appropriation bill, we could not touch it in any respect in this appropriation bill; we would simply be compelled to follow it just as it was there written; and a point of order could be made to any change of any kind proposed to be made in that act.

Mr. STONE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not yield to the Senator. I desire to go on with what I have to say.

I call attention to the fact, Mr. President, that the Committee on Finance has a clerk at $3,000, an assistant clerk at $2,220, another assistant clerk at $1,600, an assistant clerk at $1,440, a messenger at $1,440, two experts, one for the majority and one for the minority, at $2,000 each.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will yield for just a moment, he has cited the Committee on Finance. The Senator himself is a member of that committee, and I ask him how often the committee meets?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If there has been a meeting of the committee in months, I do not know of it. If they have had anything to do at this session of Congress except to confirm a few appointees, I do not know of it.

Now, there are two men, at $2,000, called "experts" on the committee. Do they stay in the committee room? Where are they? Here are two additional clerks. I insist that the proper way to handle that committee and the other committees is to allow the chairman of the committee as a Senator a secretary, an assistant secretary, and perhaps a stenographer, treating all alike in that respect. If the committee needs an expert or needs a special clerk for some special work, the special clerks of the committee should be in the committee room handling the work of all the members of the committee. This system is wrong. I am not criticizing this particular committee; I just happened to know about it, as I am a member of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield to me for another question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am also a member of that committee, and I should like to know if the Senator himself has any knowledge as to what the actual work of these two experts may be? What do they do during the time when Congress is not engaged in tariff legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had overlooked the fact, though a member of the committee, that the experts were carried on the pay roll of the Government until I saw provision made for them in this appropriation bill. When we had up the war-tax bill, we had experts from the Treasury Department, who were with us, as the Senator knows and as the majority know, who helped us prepare the bill. I am criticizing the system. I illustrate the impropriety of the system by using one of the committees of which I am a member, which furnishes a splendid opportunity to illustrate its impropriety. I believe every Senator ought to have a secretary, an assistant secretary, and a stenographer when the Senate is in session.

Every Senator ought to be given the force that he requires to attend to the work of his constituents. Then, a committee, where it has real work to perform, ought to have such assistance as the public service requires for the committee; but the two ought not to be intermingled. If you intermingle them, you can not tell where responsibility of the committee begins and where the relation of secretary to the chairman of the committee begins, or where either ends.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me that one suggestion the Senator has made is not well founded. The Senator says that, in addition to a secretary and an assistant secretary, each Senator should have a stenographer during the session. There is very little cessation of work upon the part of a Senator during the recess of Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I had in view was that the Senator's secretary and assistant secretary ordinarily could do his regular work; but while he is here in Washington during the session of Congress he would need a stenographer as well. Of course if he needs the stenographer all the time, he should be provided. What I am urging is that a Senator be given to assist him in discharging the duties of a Senator from his State such help as he needs; that the committees be given such help as they need; and that the positions of clerk to committees and of secretary to Senators be separated, so that the two be not commingled in such a way that an outsider, when he desires some service rendered, does not know whether he is trenching upon employees who are engaged in doing the work of a Senator as contradistinguished from the work of the clerk of a committee. We know that the men who are called clerks of committees are in reality not clerks of the committees. I am chairman of the Committee on Labor. The clerk of that committee does nothing for the committee, but is really my private secretary. The assistant clerk does the work of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator's plan is carried out, would it not necessarily entail additional expense, because now our private secretaries attend to the work of the committees, while at the same time doing a great deal of personal work for the chairmen of the committees? If they were appointed as clerks of committees merely, and if all they had to do was to attend to committee work, it seems to me that it would add necessarily to the expense.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would reduce the expense, instead of adding to it. I would not add a special clerk for a committee or special expert for a committee except in a few cases. In other instances the chairman of the committee himself carries the additional work for the committee. I would not think of adding an additional clerk for a committee, except in cases where a man is needed to devote his time to the work of the committee. But where four men are assigned to a committee, in addition to the three I have suggested for the personal use of the Senator who may be chairman of the committee, making seven in all connected with the committee, I think it manifestly is an unwise plan, and that the much wiser course is to give to each Senator for himself the personal force he requires, no matter what committee he is at the head of, and then, if the committee needs additional help, give it to the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, would not the scheme proposed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia be calculated to increase, instead of decrease, the amount of money that we pay out for services of the kind referred to?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator that the highest-priced man is the clerk to the committee. Suppose, as a matter of fact, we adjourn on the 4th of March until the first Monday in December. According to the amendment proposed by the Senator, as I understand it, the clerk of the committee will say, "Good-by; I will be here on the first Monday in December"; whereas now the clerks of the committees having been appointed with the knowledge that they are not only clerks of committees, but also subject to the orders of the chairmen of those committees, will perform work from now until the first Monday in December. If you do not require them to do that work, you will practically have to hire other men, additional men, in order to do the same work.

So far as my committee is concerned, all three of the employees connected with it work every day; they are continually at work; but as to the actual work of that committee it does not meet very often. It has had and will have important work, but the assistant clerk of the committee does the work of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator for a question, not for a speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to enforce the rule pretty soon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not desire to yield for speeches under any circumstances.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will; yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator and I are both members of the Committee on Rules; and is it not a fact that the chairman of that committee has promised that this matter shall be taken up by that committee and fully considered?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was why I desired to suggest a limitation of six months for these employees, rather than 12 months. It was because I believed we could work that proposition out and put it in much better shape that I suggested the six months' limitation.

Now, replying to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], he has three employees connected with the committee of which he is chairman. Under the plan I propose, as a Senator he would have three just the same.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then a clerk of the committee added would require $2,240 more for the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If there were no need of having a clerk for the committee of which the Senator is chairman, there would be no special clerk provided for that committee, just as in the case of the committee of which I am chairman, the Committee on Education and Labor. I would not ask for an additional clerk for that committee. There are probably half a dozen committees that need one or at most two extra men beyond the ordinary force required by a Senator; and they should be real clerks of the committee, working solely upon committee matters and separate from the personal work of the Senator who is chairman of the committee; they should not be simply under the names of clerks to a committee, the personal force of the chairman.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the difficulty that I see in the whole matter is the proposed limitation which the Senator makes of six months for the payment of these employees. The Senator says that it is an easy matter to get appropriations through Congress, but I will say to the Senator that it is not an easy matter. This item in the bill appropriates $426,680 for clerks and other employees of committees. If the Senator's amendment is adopted, on the 1st day of January next there will be no money to pay for a single clerk. There will have to be some appropriation then made for these emplyoees in order that they may be available after the 1st of January. Where will the appropriation have to originate? It will have to originate in the House of Representatives. We shall have to go there and beg for another appropriation in order that we may have clerks, and it will take months to get such an appropriation through the House and the Senate. In the meantime where are we going to get the money to pay these employees?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That could easily be provided for.

Mr. OVERMAN. We could provide that the unconsumed portion of the appropriation on January 1 should be paid to employees of committees after that time, and I think the Senator had better incorporate in the amendment some such provision as that. I am urging the matter now to show the difficulties in the way if this amendment should be adopted. We will be absolutely without clerks and might not be able to get them for months.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I agree that the plan under which we have been working is a bad plan, in view of the fact that it allows the private secretary of one Senator, who may, perhaps, have nothing more to do than has the secretary of another Senator, a higher or a lower or a different salary. The Senator from Georgia is quite right in saying that the clerk of a committee, as a rule, does not do the work of the committee. The work of the committee is done in most cases by the second man upon the committee force. The first man upon the committee force is almost invariably the private secretary of the Senator who is chairman of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will permit me just a word, I want to say that the clerk of my committee has never done 10 minutes' work for me, but has been engaged purely upon the work of the committee. He has never been called upon for 5 minutes' service except upon the work of the committee. I do not know how it may be as to other committees, but, at least, I want to state this fact, so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I said "most of the committees." Perhaps in order to make it absolutely accurate I should refer to the committee of which I have had charge. I have been chairman of one of the large committees of this body in years past. The clerk of that committee received a salary of $2,500 per annum, but, so far as I know, he did no work for that committee. The work of the committee was done wholly by the assistant clerk. The gentleman who was clerk of that committee when I was chairman is now clerk of the minority committee of which I am chairman, and, after 20 years' service, is getting $250 a year less than he heretofore received.

But I can hardly agree with the Senator from Georgia that the amendment ought to be adopted at this time. It looks to me as though it was wrecking the ship without providing any lifeboats. As stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], if the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is adopted we will be up against a condition, and not a theory, when it comes to the 1st of January.

I simply rose to assure the Senator that when he gets to work on the revision of the method of employing our clerks, assistant clerks, and messengers, I shall be heartily with him; but I can see certain disaster ahead if his amendment is adopted limiting the employment of the present force that we have to six months from July 1 next.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not rise to address myself to any part of the amendment introduced by the Senator from Georgia further than to answer some of the statements made by him with reference to the Finance Committee. When I became chairman of the Finance Committee, in addition to the five clerks that are allowed that committee, the majority was entitled to an expert and two additional employees. The minority membership of the committee was likewise entitled to an expert and two additional employees. I was advised that that arrangement had been in force for many years; that is to say, that there were six employees in addition to the regular clerks to the committee and the Senator who might be chairman of that committee. When the last appropriation bill was under consideration, by mutual consent, four of these employees were dropped—two that belonged to the minority and two that belonged to the majority—and the bill provided for only the five clerks of the committee and an expert for the majority and an expert for the minority.

The Senator says that this expert ought to have a room where he would be accessible to all the members of the majority, and especially to all the members of the committee. The gentleman who represents the majority as an expert is in fact an expert upon the subject of the tariff. Before he was appointed to that position he had had large experience in statistical work that pertained to matters connected with the tariff and with finance. He has a room in connection with the Finance Committee in the Office Building, No. 306, a room which he occupies almost entirely by himself. He is a man of very great learning and very large ability. He has the use of one of the stenographers that I have appointed as chairman of the committee, and he takes a great deal of his time. During the making of the last tariff bill and during the making of the emergency revenue bill that gentleman was kept constantly at work. When we are not making a tariff bill, as we are not now, he does about as much work as any clerk of any Senator in this body, in my judgment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator while he is upon that subject where the other expert is, and if he gives any time whatever to the affairs of the committee and does anything beyond drawing his salary?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know about that. I am only speaking with reference to the expert that is allowed the majority.

Mr. THOMAS. I assumed that the Senator would know whether the other expert occupied a room in the suite of rooms that is devoted to the use of that committee, and whether he puts in an appearance there at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. He does not. I would suppose that the other expert occupied rooms in connection with the committee of which the ranking minority member of the Finance Committee [Mr. PENROSE] is chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Probably the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] can tell us where the minority have used their expert. The Senator from Wyoming is a member of the minority, and he no doubt can tell us how they use their expert.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should have to refer the question to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is the ranking minority member of the committee. I presume, however, that he is profitably employed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I want to say for the minority expert that he is always in attendance upon the minority. While he does not come directly under my observation I am very well acquainted with him, and I know him to be a man of unusual ability and fitness for the position, and I know that in the discharge of his duty he reflects credit upon both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I was misinformed as to the actual situation, and as I am now informed I am satisfied that the expert for the minority is in constant attendance upon Congress and at the service of the minority members of the committee. I make that statement in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know nothing about that, Mr. President, except that on yesterday the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is the ranking member of the Finance Committee on the minority side, and who, I understand, by courtesy is allowed to select this expert, and in whose rooms I suppose this expert has his office, stated to me that he was receiving on an average 500 letters a day; that a large part of those letters related to matters pertaining to the tariff, and in order to answer them some sort of an investigation was very frequently required, and that they were referred to this gentleman, and that he got up the information.

I want to say about the expert of the majority that I have said to members of the committee that this gentleman was at all times at their command. I have said to various members of the majority who are not upon the committee that this expert was always at their command. Everybody knows that the tariff is a perennial question. We always have it with us. Whether we have a tariff bill up or do not have a tariff bill up, we have the tariff with us. There are always inquiries, even after a bill is passed, with respect to the operation of certain provisions and items and sections of the bill. They are addressed to various Members of the Senate, and the majority Senators are in the habit of sending those letters to me and asking me to answer the inquiries of their constituents. I have not the time to sit down and work out these answers. Some of them require statistical work; some of them require information from the departments. I turn these letters over to this expert, and I put at his service all the clerks of my office to go to the departments and help him to get up this information.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the fact of the matter is that it requires an extraordinary expert to explain the workings of the present tariff law.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator knows that I do not desire to get into any tariff controversy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no. I do not want to get into any controversy, either, because——

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator may be correct about that. The tariff is a complicated and intricate question. We will all admit that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Most complicated; and the present one is the most complicated of all.

Mr. SIMMONS. We know perfectly well, the country knows, it is a matter of common knowledge, that we are going to have quite a controversy about the tariff from now on. Our friends on the other side have given us notice that that is to be one of the great issues. I take it that Senators on this side, when that question comes up for discussion in the Senate Chamber, want information. They want statistics. They have not time to look up the desired information or statistics themselves. They have not an expert under them to do this work, but they are at liberty to call upon this expert directly or through me for the desired data. Mr. President, this expert is needed by the committee and by the majority membership of this body, and the same is true, I am sure, of the minority side of this Chamber.

Mr. President, with reference to the number of clerks that the Finance Committee has, the Senator from Georgia says that this committee, having gotten through with the tariff bill and the war-revenue bill, has nothing to do; and he refers to the fact that probably there has not been a meeting of that committee since we passed the war-revenue measure. That is true; there has not been a formal meeting of the committee. As we are all in a hurry here, to save time, the committee has adopted the rule with reference to nominations of having the clerk go around and poll the membership of the committee and avoid calling meetings for that purpose. There are before the committee, however, I venture to say, not less than 20 or 30 bills of different degrees of importance, some of them very much pressed; some of them pressed by the departments of the Government, the Treasury and the Department of Commerce.

I have not called a meeting of the committee to consider those measures for obvious reasons. By agreement with members of the minority I have not done it because I knew and they knew that there was no possibility of getting consideration of these measures at this session of the Senate except by unanimous consent, and therefore it was not deemed necessary to interfere with our other business in order to hold sessions to pass upon these bills.

The Senator from Georgia is chairman of a committee. It is an important committee, but I venture to say that it is a committee that has had very few sessions——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has had precisely the same number during this session of Congress that the Finance Committee has had.

Mr. SIMMONS. How many is that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator has just stated—none.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have just stated that we have not had any since we passed the war-revenue measure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I said at this session of Congress, since the 7th of last December.

Mr. SIMMONS. How many did it have the session before that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, we had an immense amount of work. For two months we were in constant cooperation with the vocational educational board and a joint committee of the House and the Senate, and in session for two months and more continuously.

Mr. SIMMONS. How many meetings did the committee have?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very few.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator on yesterday asked to have the salary of one of his clerks increased. He has three clerks and he asked to have one, who has a salary of $1,440 increased to $1,800. That was done, and I think very properly done. While that is an important committee, it is one that has not as much work as some other committees of this body. I think the Senator himself will agree to that. But the Senator stated to me on yesterday, when we were talking about this matter, that the work of his committee was so great that he had been forced to supplement the force in his office by going into his pocket to the extent of $2,800, in order that he might have sufficient force to do the work of the committee. The Senator may be able to do that——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is mistaken. I made no such statement to him. I will state for myself what I said to him, although I am not in the habit of going into private conversations on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not suppose the Senator would object to my making that statement, and I did not understand that he was making it to me as part of a private conversation. We talk about our affairs here, and it is well known that some Senators, who are able to do it, supplement their regular force from their private means.

Speaking for myself, I am one of the Senators—and there are many others; I am not claiming any credit to myself on that account—I am one of the Senators who stay in this Chamber when the Senate is in session. I have not the time to be constantly running around to the departments about matters connected with patronage, legislation, and so forth—the thousand and one things about which we are called upon to consult the departments. I have to send my clerks. If I absented myself from the Chamber when the Senate was in session, I could give a good deal of my time to that work, but I do not do it. Unless the matter is very important and seems to require my personal attention, I turn it over to my clerks, and it takes a great deal of time for these clerks to attend to that business.

Mr. President, the Finance Committee has just two more clerks than the committee of the Senator from Georgia. I think that is as few clerks as that committee has ever had. I want to say to the Senate frankly that I do not want to get into any controversy about this matter. Whatever the Senate wants to do about it, it can do. I say to the Senate frankly that the men I have are not idle men. There is work for them to do, and they do the work, and do it well. I could not very well get along with a less force than I have and do my work. These gentlemen who are assigned to a Senator are not only assigned to him to do the committee work, but they are assigned to him to do the work that he has to do as a Senator outside of and independently of his committee. I am perfectly willing for the Senate to do whatever it pleases about these two experts, but I want to say that, in my judgment, it would be a mistake to deprive the committee of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I really do not know who the majority expert is.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is Capt. S. A. Ashe. He is a lawyer, and for many years was the editor of the leading newspaper in North Carolina.

Mr. SMOOT. I do know, however, that Mr. Stewart is the minority expert, and I suppose that if Senators want anything particularly upon the question of finance or the question of the tariff or the question of statistics relating to importations and exportations they feel perfectly at liberty to call on Mr. Stewart for that information.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would not want either the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] or the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to think for a moment that I was questioning the usefulness of the clerks of the Finance Committee, because I was not doing so. I know that the expert who is provided for the minority, Mr. Stewart, is constantly in attendance, ready for any work that may be brought before him. When I first answered the inquiry of the Senator from Georgia I was not aware that Mr. Stewart was carried on the rolls as the minority expert. I knew that he was connected with the committee, but I was not aware of that particular fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think he is the expert of the minority.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to say that I think Mr. Stewart's work and his devotion to his duty here might well be taken as an example for Members of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the point of order overruled?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has never had a chance to rule upon it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask for a ruling.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for just a minute——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from North Carolina is discussing another question. I am addressing myself to the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this discussion is going on until it is finished, regardless of what direction is given to the motion before the Senate; so the Senator will not speed his case by pressing the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have a right to submit the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. And I should be glad to have the Chair rule on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia calls the attention of the Chair to section 6 of the appropriation act of 1914, which reads:

> That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

The Senator from Virginia does not call the attention of the Chair to any statute of the United States which creates the office of clerk or messenger. The Chair does not believe that there is any statute of the United States which creates these offices. They are simply created from year to year in the appropriation bill. The Chair believes, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is not general legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is, however, fair to state in consideration of the amendment—but probably it is not the business of the Chair—that there is not anything in the bill which provides that these salaries shall be paid by the month. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply desire, in addition to what I have said, to call attention to the fact that committees of the same importance as the Finance Committee have as large an allowance for clerks. For instance, the Committee on Appropriations has a clerk at $4,000, and he is also allowed an additional sum of $1,000; an assistant clerk at $2,500, another assistant clerk at $1,900, one at $1,800, and a janitor at $1,000.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce has a clerk at $2,500, an additional clerk at $2,000, an assistant clerk at $1,500, and a janitor at $1,000. The Ways and Means Committee of the House, which certainly have no broader jurisdiction than the Finance Committee of the Senate, in fact, not as broad a jurisdiction as the Finance Committee of the Senate, because the Ways and Means Committee has no connection with appointments and confirmations, has one clerk at $3,000, an assistant clerk and stenographer at $2,200, an assistant clerk at $1,900, and a janitor at $1,000, and another employee not designated by name at $720. They have five clerks, the aggregate amount being practically the same as that allowed for the clerical assistance of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate. As illustrating the desirability of changing our system of furnishing clerks for committees who are in reality to be secretaries serving for chairmen of committees, I called the attention of the Senate to the Finance Committee to illustrate the value of my suggestion that a change should be made.

Now, just one word more with reference to the clerk of the Finance Committee. Without a committee hearing since Congress adjourned last fall this committee is supposed to have a clerk to the committee at $3,000. It has an assistant clerk at $2,220. It has another assistant clerk at $1,600. I do not know either of the three, although I am a member of the committee. I know nothing of their serving the committee. It has another assistant clerk at $1,440, a messenger at $1,440, and two experts at $2,000. I realize the importance of keeping the Senator from North Carolina on the floor; and if it is necessary to have all these clerks to keep him on the floor of the Senate, I do not raise any objection to it. He has told us how necessary they are. To enable him to perform his arduous duties on the floor of the Senate, they visit the departments for him.

Mr. President, I am only insisting that all Senators may have a fair chance in handling their business in the departments. It produces invidious distinctions; it creates disturbance in the force of other Senators to see the real private secretary of one Senator paid $3,000 and another $2,000 when called clerks to committees but doing private secretary work in the departments, to enable the Senator whom they serve to stay on the floor of the Senate.

I would like to see a system inaugurated by which they would all be treated alike, that all Senators might stay on the floor of the Senate, and now I have given the reason why I offered the amendment.

I am well aware that this is not a time when we can pass it. I do not think we can have this done now. We have a resolution on the subject before the Committee on Rules, and I hope that we can be able to present next December a plan which will appeal to the Senate to treat Senators alike with reference to their secretaries and assistant secretaries, and assign to the committees fairly the men who are really to do committee work, separating the personal work of Senators from the work of the committees.

Mr. President, I withdraw, with the consent of the Senate, the amendment which I sent to the desk.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before this amendment is withdrawn I want to say a word or two on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. As long as the Senator from Washington wants to discuss the amendment which has been withdrawn, I will yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment before the Senate.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Georgia asked to withdraw it and I rose to object to its withdrawal. I want to be heard on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Montana. He did not know for what purpose the Senator from Washington was rising.

Mr. JONES. The Chair did not submit the request of the Senator from Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the universal custom to permit a Senator to withdraw an amendment without any action on the part of the Chair.

Mr. JONES. Very well; I will make some remarks at another time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment to the bill, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 16, amend by inserting, after numerals "$1,440," the words and figures "assistant clerk, $1,200."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, my object in offering this amendment is to give the Committee on Public Lands an additional clerk. I believe the Committee on Public Lands is the only committee heavily burdened with work in this body, a committee which transacts a great deal of business, which has no more than three employees for the chairman and the committee combined. Every other committee that transacts any business in large volume in this body has more than that number. I submit the amendment for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be read again. I did not quite catch it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 16, after the numerals "$1,440," insert a comma and the words "assistant clerk, $1,200."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, what I wanted to say with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] may just as well be said in reference to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. I am glad that the Senator from Georgia has presented the matter as he has done, and I would have voted for his amendment not so much because I believed it was a proper amendment to adopt, but more because I think it will take some drastic action like that in order to get the Senate to get down to work and bring about some system different from what we now have. So I would have voted for it in the hope of adopting a drastic provision that would practically force the Senate hereafter to adopt another system.

I agree with practically everything that the Senator from Georgia has said. We ought to get the help of the Senate provided for on the basis of the help that is needed by Senators for the Senators and the help that is needed by the committees for the committees. I do not think I would separate them entirely, however.

I have offered an amendment covering this matter and had it printed. It is intended to carry out the idea suggested by the Senator from Georgia. I do not claim that it is original with me. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] really suggested it quite a while ago; but I close my amendment with the following provision:

All assistance provided for Senators shall be ex officio assistants of any committee of which the respective Senators may be chairman, and the chairmen of all committees shall appoint the assistants provided for their committees.

That, of course, provides for the help of all Senators particularly, but it also provides that this help may be used in connection with committee work. Sometimes a committee is rushed with work, and it is hard to separate the work of a Senator from the work of a committee.

I wish to call attention briefly to the provisions of the amendment I have offered. I do not pretend that it solves the matter entirely, but it occurs to me that it does furnish a basis upon which we could work. There are some committees of the Senate that have much more work to do than others, while there are many committees of the Senate that practically have no committee work. There are fifty-odd committees of the Senate that could be done away with absolutely and not interfere with the work of Senators, either by burdening it or lessening it. There are too many committees that do no work when there is given to a Senator, because he is chairman of a committee, possibly even more help than he needs.

I have provided for practically two classes of committees. I have provided, first, for a clerk to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Commerce. I suggest a change in the amendment here by striking out of the first class the District of Columbia Committee and putting in the Committee on Pensions. The Committee on Pensions, I imagine, from what connection I have had with it, is about as busy a committee as there is in the Senate, and I think it does a great deal of work during the recesses of the Senate as well as during the sessions of the Senate.

Then follow the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Interstate Commerce Committee, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Public Lands, and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I would provide each of those committees in this plan with a clerk at $2,750 and a messenger during the sessions of the Senate at $1,200.

Then, as to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Committee on Rules, the Committee on Claims, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Printing, the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I would provide each of those committees with a clerk at $2,000 a year and one messenger while the Senate is in session at $1,200 a year.

Those are the only committees I have provided for in this provision for committee work.

I provide for assistants to Senators 96 clerks at $2,500 each and 96 assistant clerks at $1,500 each. That gives each Senator as a Senator one clerk permanently and one assistant clerk permanently.

Then I provide that during the sessions of the Senate each Senator shall have a stenographer to be paid at the rate of $1,440 a year.

Now, what does that do, for instance, for the Committee on Finance? It gives the Committee on Finance a clerk and the chairman of the committee an additional clerk and an assistant clerk, and then when the Senate is in session it gives the committee a messenger and also gives to the Senator a stenographer. So it does not diminish the help very materially while the Senate is actually in session, and I think it does provide an abundance of help to take care of the work of Senators when the Senate is not in session.

Then I make the provision that all assistants for Senators and committees, shall be, you might say, changeable, so that they will cooperate one with the other.

Mr. OVERMAN. What does the Senator propose shall be the salary of each Senator's secretary?

Mr. JONES. Twenty-five hundred dollars. It gives him such a salary that he can get the sort of a man he ought to have. We want to have a secretary who is something more than a man to go down to the departments, something more than a mere errand man. The secretary to a Senator ought to be a man who can really be an assistant to the Senator in research work and investigating questions that must come before the Senate that he has not time to investigate fully.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the Senator's idea that the messengers shall be paid only during the sessions of the Senate, when now they are paid during the year?

Mr. JONES. Surely.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think really with that assistance we probably might save something.

Mr. JONES. I will say that, estimating that Congress would be in session on an average six months every year in a short session or a long session, this plan would save about $50,000 or $60,000 a year. This leaves a large margin for all the help Senators may need while the Senate is in session. I think a Senator ought to have the help necessary for him to do his official work. He ought not to be required to pay it out of his own pocket. Every Senator, whether from a small State or a large one, needs an efficient secretary. An efficient secretary will have all he can do, whether from a small State or a large one, and the Senator who comes from a larger State, if he needs more assistance, does not need a more highly paid secretary, but needs more help, and we ought to provide for that; that is, for whatever is necessary.

Mr. President, I do not expect the Senate to adopt this in this bill now, but I do hope that the Committee on Rules will some time during the summer get to work and try to work out some plan that we may incorporate in the next appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to correct one statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. He misunderstood me when he said that I had paid out $2,750 or $2,800 for the committee. I did not say that. I never paid out anything for services for the committee, but I have paid out more than that for additional service for my office help. During the first two years I employed an additional stenographer myself, and paid him out of my own pocket. I found it necessary to have him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has been recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina for a moment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it is due to the Finance Committee I should state that that committee has, according to the statement of my clerk, handled something over one hundred and forty-odd nominations, and there are now between 40 and 50 bills pending before the committee. Six of those bills have already passed the House, and five of them have been referred to subcommittees. We have had no sessions to consider these matters and report on them, because it was understood by the committee that in the congested condition of the calendar and the situation we had here, there was no possibility of legislation at this session unless it could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is going to be adopted let me suggest to him that he change the amendment for this reason. As the amendment is offered it would provide for an assistant clerk. The Senator will notice that his messenger is paid $1,440, and the amendment provides for an assistant clerk at $1,200. It seems to me if the amendment is to be adopted the Senator ought to strike out the words "messenger, at $1,440," on page 7, line 16, and insert "assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200."

Mr. MYERS. I accept that amendment, Mr. President. I wish to say that I only failed to get this before the Committee on Appropriations from mere lack of time. I went down three or four times and my duties would not premit me to pursue it any further, but I have consulted practically all the members of the committee about it and no objection has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 16, strike out "messenger, $1,440," and insert "assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I suppose every Senator will agree to. I ask to have it read, and after it is read I should like to make a few remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of line 10, page 9, after the word "each," and all of lines 11 and 12 and insert in lieu thereof "$11,680 for 16 pages, at the rate of $730 per annum, which last amount they shall be paid annually after March 4, 1915."

Strike out all of line 18, page 17, after the word "each," and all of lines 19, 20, 21, and 22 to the semicolon preceding the word "superintendent," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$33,580 for 46 pages, including 2 riding pages, 4 telephone pages, press gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrance to the Hall of the House at the rate of $730 per annum, which last amount they shall be paid annually after March 4, 1915."

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I have introduced this amendment because I think these young men ought to be paid at least the amounts specified. They are now receiving during the time they are attending the Senate session at the rate of $2.50 a day. My amendment provides that they shall have an annual salary which will amount to $2 per day. The law with reference to the pages of the Senate reads as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the Sergeant at Arms to classify the pages of the Senate so that at the close of the present and each succeeding Congress one-half the number shall be removed; and in no case shall a page be appointed younger than 12 years, or remain in office after the age of 16 years, or for a longer time than two Congresses, or four years.

These young men come into the service of the Senate in this capacity from outside. They are not wealthy; their parents are not wealthy. They have to give all their time while the Senate is in session to the session of the Senate. While they are here during the sessions of the Senate—and they have been here practically 24 months up to the present time—during this Congress they have received probably more than this would give them for the past two years. For the next two years it seems to be estimated, on the theory that there is to be no extra session of Congress, that the Congress will last probably from the 1st of December until some time in June following, then meet in the December following and last until the 4th of March. They would not, therefore, receive as much in that time as they have been receiving; but these young men have to attend school, or they ought to attend school. They are compelled to be here only between the ages of 12 and 16. That takes them away from their school life. There is no way for them to make up that time and at the end of their 16 years to take the classical course, which they should take if they want to, unless they can make it up by an education acquired during the vacation of the Senate and of Congress. To do that they would have to employ teachers or tutors, and this may enable them to do it. From this class of young men which we have been having in the Senate Senators have come into this body, and we expect some others may still come.

I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to be consistent in my position as to these amendments. One would think from the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico that the pages of this body were obliged to work here. My information is that there is a long waiting list. Boys are anxious to get here and fill this position. For my part I do not think this is the time to indulge in these generous impulses at the expense of the people of the United States. I wish to make the point of order against this amendment that it is not included in the estimates nor recommended by a committee and therefore is not germane.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the amendment been referred to a committee?

Mr. THOMAS. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order will have to be sustained, then.

Mr. JONES. I desire to submit an amendment to come in on page 139 after the word "day," in line 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 139, line 12, after the word "day," insert "and for temporary statistical clerks and stenographers in the District of Columbia, to be selected from civil-service registers and to be paid at the rate of not exceeding $100 per month, the same person to be employed for not more than six consecutive months, the total expenditure for such temporary clerical assistance in the District of Columbia not to exceed $6,000."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as the chairman of the committee knows, this is estimated for by the department, and the department is anxious to have this provision made. It does not increase the amount of the appropriation. I suggest to the chairman that it might be well to adopt it and let it go to conference and there see whether or not the provision should not be retained. That would save time.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator does not seem to entertain a serious expectation of having the amendment adopted.

Mr. JONES. How is that?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suppose the Senator does not think seriously that it will be accepted by the House.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; I do.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was considered by the committee and rejected. I can not think that it can be finally adopted. I hope the Senator will not insist upon it.

Mr. JONES. It will take some time for me to discuss it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator wants to make a filibuster on a measure of that sort, let it go in and let it go to conference, and it will meet its fate. In all probability the House is not going to agree to it. I thought the Senator knew the temper and the condition there well enough not to seriously expect that any such amendment would be made.

Mr. JONES. No; I did not.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. So far as I am concerned, to avoid protracted debate, I will not resist the amendment at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, then.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I want to have printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment some data, but on account of a remark the Senator from Virginia made I want to say to the Senator I do not exactly like the remark of the Senator from Virginia that I threaten a filibuster, because it is not true. I want to save all the time I can.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I so understood it, but if the Senator disclaims it that is all right.

Mr. JONES. I certainly disclaim it. I simply wanted to present the facts and reasons; that is all. I ask that this matter may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

This amendment will not add a single dollar to the amount to be appropriated for the miscellaneous expenses of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. It merely grants authority to the bureau to expend not to exceed $6,000 of the total appropriation of $64,090 for miscellaneous expenses for the employment of temporary clerks and stenographers in the District of Columbia. The wording of this appropriation was changed last year to correct what some Members of Congress believed to have been a tendency to increase salaries of permanent employees in the Bureau of Labor Statistics by drawing upon this lump sum for this purpose. The change then made in the wording of the section, however, went far beyond the correction of the thing complained of and put a handicap upon the bureau which I take it was not intended. This amendment would not increase the permanent force of the bureau in any manner whatsoever, nor permit any increase of salary of permanent employees to be paid from this lump sum, as the amendment specifically provides that these shall be temporary employees, none of whom are to be employed for more than six consecutive months, and the salary in any case, is not to exceed $100 per month. This is, by all means, the cheapest and most effective method of compiling and preparing for publication the results of investigations made by agents of the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the field, as it would enable the bureau to hire clerical assistance in Washington when the amount of data sent in from the field is so great that it can not be handled by the present small office force of the bureau. It would, obviously, not be economy to give this bureau a considerable number of additional permanent employees at salaries ranging, say from $900 to $1,200 per annum, when the services of such a number of additional permanent employees could not be utilized to advantage throughout the year. Such a method would increase the annual outlay for salaries very materially, while the method suggested by this amendment does not increase the appropriation either for salaries or for miscellaneous expenses. The bureau having now no authority to employ temporary assistance in Washington, finds it necessary to draw the regular field agents of the bureau in from various parts of the country, some of them high-grade men at salaries of $1,600 and $1,800 per annum, to do clerical work in the bureau in computing and tabulating the data which they have secured in the field, which could be done as well by temporary clerks at from $75 to $100 per month, obtained through the Civil Service Commission. This plan necessarily interrupts and delays the field work, and is a very expensive method of handling material in the office.

The following statement shows to what extent temporary clerical assistance was used on the regular work of the bureau during the fiscal years 1909 to 1914, inclusive:

Year.	Employees.	Approximate time.	Amount.
1909	33	3 to 6 months	$10,974.17
1910	70	1 to 6 months	9,126.66
1911	4	3 to 8 months	1,333.75
1912	26	1 to 6 months	8,741.25
1913	17	1 to 4 months	1,906.25
1914	33	1 to 9 months	6,924.92

This tabular statement emphasizes the importance of temporary clerical help and the necessity for the adoption of this amendment. Here is a small bureau, having now no more regular employees than it had 20 years ago, which is endeavoring in the most economic manner possible to piece out its work by employment of temporary cheap help and has been using from 25 to 30 of such persons for from four to six months each fiscal year, and I take it that Congress does not intend to prevent this work from going on by shutting off this temporary help. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

MEMORANDUM.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, January 23, 1915.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has 27 persons on its pay roll who are available for the field work necessary to carry out the regular investigations of the bureau. The work of the bureau has been planned for each year to cover about 8,000 one-man day's work in the field. That means 324 months' work for one person, or, in other words, 27 men for 12 months each.

The salaries of these 27 persons are as follows: Two at $2,000, 3 at $1,800, 5 at $1,600, 11 at $1,400, 6 at $1,200—the average being $1,500. The $6,000 which the bureau desires to spend for the temporary employment of statistical clerks in Washington means to this bureau 80 months' work for one person, for while the amendment fixes $100 per month as the maximum to be paid, the bureau, as a matter of fact, pays $75 per month for these clerks. Your amendment, therefore, means 80 months, or 2,000 days' work for one person, at an expense of $6,000, while at the same time the regular field work of the bureau would be going along.

The defeat of this amendment means that to get the office work done the Bureau of Labor Statistics must reduce its field work by 80 months, or 2,000 days' work for one person; that is, instead of 8,000 days' field work, the bureau can do but 6,000 days—a reduction of 25 per cent in the amount of field work possible to be done. To get these 2,000 days' office work done by persons ordinarily employed in the field, and whose average salary, as stated above, is $1,500 per year, will cost the bureau $10,000 instead of $6,000, as provided for by the amendment.

It seems unthinkable that Congress wants to cut down the field activity of this bureau by 25 per cent and make a given amount of office work that has heretofore been done for $6,000 cost the bureau $10,000.

Again, the regular field work can not be done with 25 per cent of the field time of agents transferred to the office; neither can the same amount of work—that is, the same volume of office work—be done by the field agents in the office that is done in the same time by temporary clerks. While the bringing in of field agents to do office work will, in cold dollars, cost $10,000 for the same number of days' work that could be hired for $6,000, yet, measured by units of work done, the bureau will not get as much for the $10,000 as it would for the $6,000.

This amendment does not add one cent to the appropriation; it merely permits the bureau to use its funds in the most intelligent way and to get the greatest return for the money appropriated and expended.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, January 6, 1915.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of January 4 acknowledging receipt of my letter of December 31, together with memoranda regarding your amendment to appropriation bill H. R. 19909.

In looking over the hearings before the House subcommittee on this bill, I find, on page 167, Mr. JOHNSON, chairman of the subcommittee, again makes the statement that the last session of Congress transferred the clerks carried on the lump-sum roll to the statutory roll of this bureau, and that this act increased our clerical force by the number of people so transferred; to use his exact words, "We took those clerks up and appropriated for them specifically, thereby increasing the force of clerks in the Bureau of Labor Statistics." Now, Senator, I want to tell you just exactly what was done.

The bureau had been paying some 21 salaries out of the lump-sum appropriation of $64,090. Some of these were clerks in the office, and some were in the field part of the time and in the office part of the time, but of our 96 employees 21 were carried on this roll. In addition to that we had been employing temporary people from one to six months at office work. That is to say, we had a permanent force of 96 people, including those always employed in the District of Columbia, as well as those sometimes employed in the field and those always employed at field work. This constituted our permanent force. In addition to that we had occasionally as high as 25 or 30 temporary clerks.

What Congress did was to put 21 clerks on the statutory roll, thus putting the total force of 96 people on the statutory roll. It then so worded the lump-sum appropriation as to prevent the employment of temporary clerks, thus absolutely reducing the clerical force of this office to the extent of the work heretofore performed by temporary clerks.

Congress did not, as Mr. JOHNSON says, increase the force of clerks in the Bureau of Labor Statistics, but it did absolutely decrease our clerical assistance, as stated above, to the extent of the temporary employment.

The tabular statement which I inclosed in my letter of December 31 will thus show you perfectly the extent to which this action of Congress decreases our force of clerks and cripples the work of this bureau.

I would like to emphasize further the unfairness of this treatment by calling your attention to the appropriations for other bureaus. I turn at random to page 128, line 19, of H. R. 19909, and find the words, "including personal services in the District of Columbia"; on page 129, lines 4 and 5, "including personal services in the District of Columbia"; lines 8 and 9 on the same page, line 14 on the same page, lines 20 and 21 on the same page, lines 24 and 25 on the same page, and line 3, on page 130, etc., all through the bill, authorization for the employment of clerks from lump sums in the District of Columbia is granted.

We are not asking that the employment of clerks from the lump sum be left wide open, as to whether they shall be temporary or permanent in the District of Columbia. I can see that that matter is closed. Congress is unalterably opposed to this bureau's paying permanent salaries in the District of Columbia from the lump-sum appropriation. I do not ask and do not want to reopen that question, but I fail to see why the remedy should go so far beyond the grievance complained of as to estop us from employing efficient help in the most economic way.

Any information that you want from the bureau to assist you in securing the adoption of this amendment, please command me.

Faithfully, yours,

ETHELBERT STEWART, Chief Clerk.

JANUARY 19, 1915.

DEAR SENATOR: I desire to call your special attention to the wording of the section of the bill making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, known as H. R. 19909; that is, to the section which provides for the general miscellaneous expenses of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor. The estimates provided for the following language which follows the word "day" in line 2, page 134, of the bill, as it came from the House, "and for temporary statistical clerks and stenographers in the District of Columbia, to be selected from civil-service registers and to be paid at the rate of not exceeding $100 per month, the same person to be employed for not more than six consecutive months, the total expenditure for such temporary clerical assistance in the District of Columbia not to exceed $6,000."

The authority to employ temporary help, which this language would grant, is a very vital matter. At the last session of Congress all permanent clerks employed from this fund in the District of Columbia were very properly transferred to the statutory roll, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics was stopped from paying permanent clerks in the District from this fund in the future; but the Bureau of Labor Statistics had been, in the past, employing temporary clerks from this fund, and the language of the estimate referred to above simply restores this authority. It is so restricted that abuse seems impossible, and I can assure you that no abuse of it will be permitted.

This amendment proposes no increase in the amount appropriated, and its incorporation in the bill by your committee is of such vital concern that I trust you will see your way clear to include it. In no other way can the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics be kept current, as to wait until the field work is done and call the field men in to do the office work is not only expensive but delays the preparation of the work in the office; and to keep the field men in the office until the material of a previous investigation has been prepared for publication, in turn delays the bureau's activities in the field.

Hoping for your cooperation in this matter, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives there are some hundreds of employees who are provided for. There are three who are designated by name. I know that all these men are efficient and capable employees, but I do not believe in the bill designating three of them when the others are not designated. I shall first offer a motion to strike out the first that appears in the bill, and if that carries I will offer a motion to strike out the others. I therefore move, on page 2, line 20, to strike out the name "Henry M. Rose."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, strike out the name "Henry M. Rose" and the comma.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, of course I appreciate the view that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] takes as to naming men in the bill. I have taken that same view always, except in what were considered very exceptional cases. When I came to the Senate 24 years ago the salary of the superintendent of the document room was appropriated for by name—Amzi Smith—and soon after the chief clerks of the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations were practically named by a provision in which an extra $1,000 was appropriated for each clerkship "while held by the present incumbent," on account of long services and experience which were considered almost indispensable in the work upon the great appropriation bills. When the time came for considering an advance in the salary of the reading clerk of the Senate, Mr. Rose, who had been tried out thoroughly and was popular with both sides of the Senate, was named as Assistant Secretary, at a salary of $5,000, and his name was inserted in the bill, as had been the name of Amzi Smith. He had been offered a position abroad to represent this Government in a diplomatic way at a considerably better salary than he was receiving, and it was only upon an earnest request from both sides of the Senate that he remained in the position.

That salary was fixed, and his name was put in the bill in the interest of the same economy that had prevailed in the nomination by name of the others before that time. For instance, the salary of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate was $4,000, with $1,000 additional so long as the then incumbent remained; and the same was done in the case of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me for just one moment. I may be wrong, but, for the purpose of saving time, I will say that it does not appear to me to be at all important whether the name is left in or not. The payment of the salary goes to the office, and though the incumbent is named, he could be removed.

Mr. WARREN. I am not arguing against that at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But if that be the case—if I am right in that——

Mr. WARREN. I am making a statement as to why the name was put in at the time. Then, of course, the matter can be taken up.

In the Senate Appropriations Committee, when the term of the chief clerk mentioned ceased on account of the death of the incumbent, the salary was lowered $1,000 the same as it would be in other cases. It has been the view of the Senate that putting it in this way it left the Senate freer when they did change—as, of course, they have a right to change—to determine whether that should be a standing salary for whoever might be nominated for the place or whether it would be more easily handled by having it a smaller salary, a permanent salary, with addition for whatever was considered due as a reward for meritorious services.

The House of Representatives has steadily maintained that position, so far as I know, in the changes from Democratic to Republican and from Republican to Democratic control. There has never been a question raised, I think, in the House, and, except on one occasion, I think the question never has been raised in this body. As to putting in a name, if the proposition were to put in a new name at this time it would require very strong presentation and strong argument to induce me to vote for it as applying to any new places; but this was done, as I say, so unanimously—and as that has seemed ever since to be approved so unanimously—I do not feel that there is any necessity or any reason at this time for departing from it as to the particular officials who have so long and so well served in their places. I therefore hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for last year was reported, I gave it a somewhat careful examination, and discovered that out of something over 1,500 employees of the Senate and of the other House, three were mentioned by name. It seemed to me to be so unusual as to justify some inquiry as to its cause. That inquiry was answered completely, but not to my satisfaction. It was my intention then to make the same motion regarding the addition of these names as was just made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], but on account of the pressure of business of the Senate I refrained from doing so. I afterwards intended to call the attention of the Senate to the fact and to suggest that motion in connection with this bill, but, in view of the shortness of the time between now and the expiration of the present session, I had determined to state my objections to the practice and to content myself with giving notice that if the next legislative appropriation bill contains these, or any other names, I should insist on having them stricken out; but inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire has offered the motion, I deem it of sufficient importance to give expression to the views which I entertain upon the subject.

Under the Constitution the Senate is authorized and required to choose its own officers and employees; the House of Representatives has the same authority. That has been done, and it ought to be done either by naming them all or by naming none of them. I do not think that any name should appear in a bill of this kind, because it is a surrender by the Senate of its power to choose its own officers, and it delegates that power of choice to the action of both Houses and to the President; in other words, we consent to the creation of statutory offices whenever the names of the incumbents are inserted in the bill. At the same time, I think, we surrender our power of removal, for it stands to reason that if an office is created by statute—and that must be the case where the incumbent is named—the officer can not be removed or the office be done away with except in the same manner. Every reason, therefore, which exists for the inclusion of a name in a bill of this kind requires the name of every official to also appear in the bill; every reason which opposes the insertion of a name should be equally general, and should exclude them all.

In my opinion, Mr. President, the practice is one which has nothing to do with the personality of the incumbent, either as to his competency or lack of it, to his politics, or to any other personal considerations; it is entirely a matter of principle.

I find three names here, one the Assistant Secretary of the Senate, another the superintendent of the document room, and on page 18 an employee of the House, one Joel Grayson. So out of 1,555 employees, if my computation is correct, there are general provisions for the employment of each official, and but three exceptions are made which name the incumbent and fix his salary accordingly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator also observe that as to the chief clerk of the Appropriations Committee of the House, while he is not named, the provision in the bill is "while the office is held by the present incumbent." Of course, that is as plain as if the name of Mr. Courts had been inserted in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not notice that; but I will say to the Senator that I had noticed an item, on page 2, of $3,000 for the financial clerk of the Senate, "and $1,250 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent." That is the nearest approach to the naming of the officer that I have found in a somewhat careful examination of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I am not questioning the assertion of the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. The one I referred to was in the House, in addition to the one the Senator is naming. There is also one House employee named in the bill—I allude to Joel Grayson, an old and valued House employee.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not questioning the assertion of the Senator; but even if we assume, Mr. President, that the language used in these two instances is language which identifies the particular individual, it only adds two to the list, and the proportion is still infinitesimally small.

Mr. President, if it be lawful or necessary, or even expedient, to incorporate into an appropriation bill the names of the officials or the name of any official, it is equally necessary, equally appropriate, and equally expedient to incorporate the names of them all. In the event this motion is denied, and the motions which are to follow it—which I understand the Senator from New Hampshire intends to make—are defeated, I shall feel it incumbent upon me, beginning with the President of the United States and going down the list, so far as the Congressional Directory furnishes the names to me, to insist upon their insertion also, because I do not think we should make any exceptions here at all. While I do not care to take up the valuable time of the Senate—and I know it is pretty valuable—I think it is due to these other officials that they should be given the same recognition and be held to the same responsibility and to be made statutory officials, if the others are to be so.

I do not think that the statement of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], under the conditions, illuminating as it is as to the history of this particular office, is at all a justification of the practice. Because we create a particular office, it does not follow that we should fill that office in an appropriation bill by naming a particular individual as the incumbent. If it were true, then that is another reason why the names should go in all along the line, for every one of these places has either been created by act of Congress or by the action of the Senate itself, and every officer in the executive departments—practically every one which is of sufficient importance to require a specific appropriation—should also be named. So I hope, Mr. President, that, inasmuch as this motion has been made, it will be sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no Senator who does not know that the name of Henry M. Rose, as Assistant Secretary, and the name of George H. Boyd, as superintendent of our document room, have been put in the appropriation bill as an honor to those men for their long, efficient, and faithful service.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Georgia in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Nixon, the disbursing clerk of the Senate, has been here longer than either of them. Why should not his name, as an honorable distinction, be also inserted in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I am coming to that in just a moment. The House, for the same reason, conferred a similar honor upon Joel Grayson, of the House document room.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And everyone who has ever served in the House knows how valuable his services are.

Mr. SMOOT. As suggested by the Senator from Michigan, any Senator who has served in the House knows how valuable the services of Joel Grayson are.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. OVERMAN. The history of the naming of Mr. Rose is this: The Senator from Utah and I came into the Senate at the same time. Mr. Rose had been a clerk, at a salary of $3,000 a year. He was tendered a position abroad, or, as I recall, the position of collector of internal revenue in Michigan.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was a position abroad.

Mr. OVERMAN. That may be the case; but the position would have paid him $5,000 a year. So I think the then Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, stated on the floor that Mr. Rose was such a valuable man that the Senate ought to retain him, and he asked the Senate to provide for him by naming him in the bill and fixing his salary at $5,000 a year. So his name was put in the bill and his salary fixed at $5,000 in order to hold him. The other assistant at the desk only gets $3,000; but, as I have said, the Senate increased the compensation of Mr. Rose and inserted his name in the bill in order to retain him. That is the history of the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is partially correct. The truth is that the position of Assistant Secretary of the Senate was created upon the motion of former Senator Gorman, of Maryland.

Mr. OVERMAN. Perhaps I was in error in stating that it was Senator Hale; it may have been Senator Gorman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Senator Gorman took such action, with the unanimous approval of the Senate. I have had nothing whatever to do with the appointment or retention of Mr. Rose as Assistant Secretary, but the Senate has retained him because of his remarkable efficiency, and has given him this deserved and additional compliment in the law.

The same thing has been done in the case of Joel Grayson, and I believe if you were to strike the name of Joel Grayson out of this bill, the House of Representatives would put it back there so quickly that you would not know what had happened. He is a little humpback; but he knows the document room of the House of Representatives as no other man has ever known it. I do not care what a man's politics may be, if he steps to the door of that document room and asks for anything in that room, Joel Grayson puts his hand on it in an instant. He is named in the bill as a personal compliment; and the provision now under discussion was intended as a tribute to Mr. Rose, to his skill and efficiency as a parliamentarian; the office he holds was created solely for him. That is the reason that other and deserving names do not appear; the offices are older than the men who fill them. This is a new office created here in the last 10 years; and as every one knows, Mr. Rose is very efficient, his services entirely satisfactory to the Senate. I hope the provision will remain unchanged.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what can be said of Joel Grayson, of the House document room, can also be said of George H. Boyd, of our document room. This honor has been conferred upon three men, and in two other cases reference has been made to the present incumbent of the office. I think, Mr. President, that it seems like a small thing now to try to strike out of this bill the name of Henry M. Rose. I believe he deserves the honor of being named. I do not know where we could replace him to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I know that we could get men to fill the place; I do not say that we could not do so; but I mean for the convenience of the Senate and for the dispatch of the business of the Senate I do not know where we could get another man so well equipped by ability, voice, and delivery as is Mr. Rose.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator know that all of those services can be rendered, all of this consideration given, and the same amount of salary provided just as well whether the name of the official is in the bill or not?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, yes, I know that that can be done, and I know that we can lay flowers upon the graves of the dead after they are gone; but I want, so far as I can, to give a few bouquets, if they may be called such, to worthy men while they are yet alive. I think that Henry M. Rose is entitled to the honor that has been conferred upon him by naming him in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator, then, consider that the same thing should be done in the case of every official who has distinguished himself, whether in a humble or in an exalted place, by putting his name in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President; if they have earned it as Henry M. Rose has earned it. I would not object at all if an employee had distinguished himself by length of service and efficiency and faithfulness to having his name put in the bill.

Now, Mr. President, these are not the only cases of our Government acknowledging and honoring men for their services. No question was ever raised against our paying the late Mr. Bernard R. Green, the superintendent of the Library building and grounds, $5,000 a year, and paying it to him as long as he lived. We are hiring a man to-day to fill his place for $3,000 instead of $5,000, and there was no member of the Appropriations Committee who did not know that Mr. Green would not have left the service of the Government if his salary had been cut from $5,000 to $3,000, but so long as the Library stands, so long as the American people visit and admire it, the name of Bernard R. Green will be remembered.

Mr. President, I do not object to the provision in the bill under which $1,250 additional is provided for our financial clerk, Mr. Nixon, so long as he holds the office, but when Mr. Nixon dies——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not objecting to that, either, but Mr. Nixon's name has not been mentioned, and his tenure of office has been just as permanent and just as continuous as though his name had been printed in large capitals in every appropriation bill for the last 45 years.

Mr. SMOOT. The policy of the committee has been to pay men like Mr. Nixon an extra salary by providing that the incumbent of the office shall be paid an extra salary as long as it is held by him. I would not object if Mr. Nixon's name were specifically inserted, but it amounts to the same thing; there is no difference in principle, because we appropriate an additional amount for him as long as he holds the office.

I think, Mr. President, that the amendment is entirely unnecessary, and I had hoped that the question would never again be raised in the Senate; and therefore, under existing conditions, I certainly shall vote against the motion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to enter my protest against striking from the bill the name of Mr. Rose. I assume that the majority will probably be against me on this proposition, though they ought not to be. I understand that always since Mr. Rose has occupied the position which he now holds he has had the unanimous support of the Democratic Senators, both while they were in the minority and while they were in control of the Senate. So far as he is personally concerned, it does not amount to much; but if I had my way I would not hesitate a moment to include in the appropriation bills those official employees here who have rendered efficient service where such service has been rendered for a long time.

I have been here six years, and I have never seen Mr. Rose at any time in any way, shape, or form show any difference in his actions toward the Democrats or Republicans. I do not feel as some men, Mr. President, that if a man happens to be an employee of this department of the Government and the Democrats are in charge he must act for the Democrats and do things for the Democrats which are not impartial, to say the least, or that when the Republicans are in control he should do those things which the Republicans expect of him. I think it is the duty of a man behind that desk to act with absolute impartiality and fairness; and I have never seen Mr. Rose at any time by word or act show that he was of one party or the other. In other words, he has acted with impartial justice to everybody in the Senate.

I know it is hard for any man to occupy a place behind the desk and in front of the presiding officer, because in the heat of controversy here, Mr. President, I know that the Republicans sometimes feel that a particular officer has not treated them fairly, and, on the other hand, I have heard it suggested that the same officers were not fair to the Democrats; but I have been sitting pretty close to the throne since I have been here, and I want to acquit these officers of ever having done, so far as I have observed, anything against which I could make a protest.

There is no use for us to fool ourselves; I do not propose to fool myself. The purpose of this amendment is to get rid of Mr. Rose—there is not any question about that—just as some others have gone out of here when their names were stricken from the bills which had been framed with their names included in order to show to them some special title of honor, some title of respect. I could name some such instances if I would, and I think that would be the fate of Mr. Rose.

The history of Mr. Rose's appointment has been stated here, Mr. President. I think the suggestion of the creation of this new place and the appointment of this man came from the then Democratic leader of the minority. I do not believe there has been any change in the office since then. I therefore intend to register my protest against this proposition, and hope I shall be joined in that protest by some of my Democratic friends, as well as by my Republican friends who are desirous of doing justice to a faithful and an honest public servant of the Senate of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. THOMAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Hardwick	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Burleigh	Hughes	Norris	Smoot
Burton	James	Overman	Stephenson
Camden	Jones	Page	Sterling
Catron	Kenyon	Perkins	Thomas
Chamberlain	La Follette	Pittman	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Poindexter	Walsh
Colt	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Warren
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Weeks
Fall	McCumber	Sheppard	White
Fletcher	McLean	Shively	Williams
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask to have the amendment stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, it is proposed to strike out the words "Henry M. Rose."

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if it had not been for the statement of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], which was frank and fair and complete, I should have expected to say something to the Senate upon this matter myself. I am only going to say that the present Senators from Michigan have had nothing whatever to do with either the appointment or the selection of Mr. Rose as Assistant Secretary of the Senate. I am sorry that we have had nothing to do with it, because he reflects credit upon the entire Senate, and any connection that we might have had with the matter would have been distinctly creditable; but the truth is that the position of Assistant Secretary was created on the suggestion of prominent Democrats on the other side of the Chamber, and the motion was made by Senator Gorman, of Maryland, and unanimously carried, creating that place for Mr. Rose. That he has been efficient and painstaking and helpful everyone admits. I do not believe there is a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who would willingly dispense with his services here. So far as I am concerned, I have had from him only the service which every other Senator has had in the performance of his official duties; but this is a compliment that was due him, in the estimation of the Senate, when he was promoted from Chief Clerk to the position of Assistant Secretary, and his services since merit a continuance of that recognition on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. In his absence I will withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I am paired for the afternoon with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I therefore ask to be excused from voting. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENYON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. CUMMINS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], but I understand that if he were here he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LIPPITT. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Camden	Lane	Pomerene	Stone

So Mr. HOLLIS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 2, line 15, after the word "Chaplain," being the third word in the line, I move to insert the words "Forrest J. Prettyman."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 15, after the word "Chaplain," where it appears the second time in the line, it is proposed to insert "Forrest J. Prettyman."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On page 30, line 24, I move to strike out "$160,000" and to insert in lieu of it "$80,000," and for that purpose I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted. I think the President ought to have a liberal allowance for making this trip to the Panama Exposition, but I think $80,000 would be very ample for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a point of order. The amendment to which the amendment of the Senator from Washington is offered has been adopted. Can an amendment be offered to it without moving to reconsider?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has moved to reconsider.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am moving to reconsider.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not so understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to make a brief statement in the matter.

A few years ago the salary of the President was $50,000 a year, and in addition to that he received $25,000 a year to cover his traveling expenses.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator excuse me long enough to say about five words?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator seems to be laboring under a misapprehension. This is not for the President. This is for the Nation, to commemorate a great occasion. It is not personal to the President of the United States. His salary has nothing to do with it, because this is not personal to him at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I heard the discussion in regard to the matter the other day, and I think I understand it as fully as anybody does. There does not seem to be any very complete understanding as to how the money is to be expended, but it is to be expended under certificates issued by the President, and the amendment is very explicit that it shall be on his voucher solely.

I was proceeding to mention the allowance that is already made for the traveling expenses of the President, because the President will be the central figure in this expedition of modern argonauts to San Francisco. It will be his party. It is to be upon Government ships. I think anyone would have a good deal of difficulty, however elaborate they might imagine this ceremony ought to be, in explaining how $160,000 could be legitimately expended in connection with it, in view of the facilities of which they will have the advantage and which will cost them nothing. There is the Mayflower, the Dolphin, and other vessels which are ordinarily used without question by the executive departments for trips which have far less of an official character than this trip will have.

As I was proceeding to recall, to illustrate how we slip easily and swiftly into extravagance, the salary of the President was formerly $50,000 a year, and he was allowed $25,000 a year for traveling expenses in addition to his salary; but there was always so much debate about whether he had legitimately expended the money for traveling expenses that the $25,000 was added to his salary, with the expectation that he would spend all of it, and if he did not spend all of it he would keep the balance, and there would be no question as to what he spent it for. The understanding was, however, when the salary was increased to $75,000, that he was to pay his own traveling expenses out of it. It was simply a new method of paying his traveling expenses. But, as so often happens in similar matters, we went on appropriating the $25,000 for his traveling expenses just as we had done before, notwithstanding we had added that amount to his salary for that purpose; so that these appropriation bills at present carry $75,000 for his salary and $25,000 for his traveling expenses.

The point I am making is that, so far as the President's expenses are concerned, if there are any—and I doubt whether there will be any material expenses on his part—they should be paid out of the $25,000 which will be appropriated and is carried in the sundry civil bill now pending in the Senate. We have a great deal of difficulty in getting little appropriations for very practical and important work in our State in connection with the development of its agricultural resources. We want an appropriation of $5,000, or it may be of $2,000 or $3,000, for experiment work along the lines to which the Government has committed itself—the investigation of the arid belt for the purpose of determining new grasses that can be grown there successfully. We have a great deal of difficulty in doing that. We have not been able to secure an appropriation for the experts of the Agricultural Department to study some cheap and practicable method, which has not been found so far, by which denatured alcohol can be produced from the waste of the fruit farms and from other waste agricultural products. It is well understood that means can be devised by which this fuel and element of power can be economically produced, and there are efforts being made to secure a small appropriation for the purpose of investigating that. If you will reduce this $160,000, which is extravagant and unnecessary, by half and save out of it $80,000, and devote the $80,000 to the practical work of aiding in the development of the new sections of our country and solving the difficult problems with which those who are doing the heavy work of pioneering are confronted, it will be a very important saving and a very useful amendment to this bill.

I do not desire to delay the Senate; but, as I said, I heard the debate the other day and the questions asked of the chairman of the committee as to how they were going to spend $160,000 on this trip, and he was not able to answer them. Nobody has stated to the Senate why it was necessary to have this amount of money. The reduction of it to $80,000 is not going to interfere with the trip or with the entertainment of diplomatic representatives of other countries. There is not any set program, there is not any necessary cut-and-dried arrangement which can not be adapted to a reduced expenditure. The affair can be arranged to conform to a reasonable appropriation. No embarrassment will be occasioned to anybody or to the Government by reducing it.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield, and to whom?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just complained because the committee was not able to give a detailed statement of the items which would make up the $160,000. I assume, in view of the fact that the Senator has asked that the expense be limited to $80,000, that he can give the reasons why that will be sufficient and what the items are which will make up the $80,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I can do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington now yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I prefer to answer the question before yielding.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not ask the Senator to yield. I thought he had yielded the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was about to yield the floor when the Senator from Ohio asked me the question, and I am going to answer it.

The purpose of this appropriation is to enable the President to arrange and execute some appropriate ceremony at the opening of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. It has been stated here that as a part of that he would invite representatives of foreign countries. It is obvious to me—and I think it is to the Senator from Ohio—that $80,000 will pay the traveling expenses, and far more than pay them, if the plan which has been talked about of taking the party on ships through the canal is carried out. I suppose there will be hotel expenses. There will probably be expenses for a banquet, one or more. Those are some of the items. I shall not undertake to give a bill of the exact nature of the entertainment, and it is not necessary to do that in order to understand that the great sum of $80,000 will be sufficient to cover it; but the general nature of it I think I have described.

Mr. POMERENE. Does it not occur to the Senator that his statement about the probable expenses is about as indefinite as the statement of which he complains?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not think it is as indefinite.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is more definite than anything I have heard heretofore.

Mr. POMERENE. I think it is about as indefinite as it can be. Let me ask the Senator a further question. Does the Senator really believe that the President is going to be extravagant in these expenditures, or that he is going to expend any more than is really necessary, consistently with his ideas as to what would be appropriate in the entertainment of guests in connection with this trip?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think the President is going to have very much to do with it. I have not the slightest idea that the President of the United States, with the problems to which he ought to be giving his attention, is going to pay any attention to the details of the entertainment of these guests at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. It is going to be directed by subordinate officials, and the ordinary experience is that they will spend all the money that is available. Whether they do that or not, it ought to be limited to a reasonable sum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I want to say one word before the motion is put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to withhold his motion temporarily.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator is very courteous and very kind, and I appreciate it. I think there is not any Senator in this body who was brought up with more frugal ideas and frugal tastes and, of necessity, frugal habits than myself. I do not believe in squandering money or squandering anything. I believe in making the best use of the blessings God has given us. I believe that this great Panama Canal is one of the stupendous works of the age or of ages. Its opening will be a great event not only in our history but a great event in the world's history, and will prove a blessing untold, I believe, to ages yet to come. We are the principal parties to it.

I do not want to squander a dollar of the people's money. I believe it is our duty to be frugal and to be prudent and careful, but I do not believe the people of this great country with its hundred million of people demand that we shall be mean, narrow, or niggardly. Instead of cutting the proposition down I would rather make it $200,000 than cut it down to $80,000.

I believe there should be a dignified and splendid demonstration at the connection of the two oceans and particularly by American enterprise. I believe we can safely trust the President of the United States. Heaven knows, if there has been any man who has been brought up in frugal ways and with frugal tastes it has been President Woodrow Wilson, the President of the United States. I feel that we can safely trust him. Because he has at his disposal $160,000, that is no reason why he will lavish it or waste it. I want to see this a dignified, grand, and imposing opening.

Something was said here yesterday about inviting ex-President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt. I do not share in the little witticism when it was asked whether they were both to go on the same ship. I do not care how in the name of heaven they get there, but I would invite both of them. I believe it would be fitting and proper to invite ex-President Taft and to invite ex-President Roosevelt. The people will not condone us for being narrow and contemptible in hoping to get the plaudits of the people, but the people will honor us for being dignified, fair, just, and liberal in opening this affair on the completion of the most glorious feat of engineering work that the pages of history have ever recorded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Myers	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Hughes	Nelson	Sterling
Bryan	James	Newlands	Stone
Burleigh	Johnson	Norris	Swanson
Burton	Jones	Overman	Thomas
Camden	Kenyon	Owen	Tillman
Catron	Lane	Page	Warren
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Poindexter	Weeks

Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Ransdell	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Root
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence, I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I desire to announce the general pair of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LIPPITT. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "nay."

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—40.

Ashurst	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Hardwick	Myers	Smith, Md.

So Mr. POINDEXTER's motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on page 2, line 16, between the words "Senate" and "including," I move to insert the words "James M. Baker"; on line 20, the same page, after the words "Chief Clerk," to insert "Peter M. Wilson"; on line 21, after the words "financial clerk," to insert "R. B. Nixon"; in line 22, to strike out the words "the present incumbent" and insert "him"; line 23, after the words "principal clerk," to insert "Thomas H. Tulley"; in the same line, after the words "reading clerk," to insert "John C. Crockett"; in the same line, after the words "enrolling clerk," to insert "Benjamin S. Platt"; in line 24, after the words "executive clerk," insert "Thomas F. Dawson"; after the words "assistant financial clerk," in the same line, insert the words "Charles F. Pace"; in line 25, after the word "librarian," insert "Edward C. Goodwin"; in the same line, after the words "file clerk," insert "Harry J. Overman"; after the words "chief bookkeeper," line 25, insert the name "Eugene Colwell"; on page 3, line 1, after the words "assistant Journal clerk," insert "J. L. Aston"; and after the words "printing clerk" insert "Ansel Wold," so that the sentence as amended will read:

Office of Secretary: Secretary of the Senate, James M. Baker, including compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators and of the contingent fund of the Senate, $6,500; hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office, $420; Assistant Secretary, Henry M. Rose, $5,000; Chief Clerk, Peter M. Wilson, $3,250; financial clerk, R. B. Nixon, $3,000 and $1,250 additional while the office is held by him; minute and Journal clerk, principal clerk, Thomas H. Tulley, reading clerk, John C. Crockett, and enrolling clerk, Benjamin S. Platt, at $3,000 each——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Platt has just died.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, let us honor him—executive clerk, Thomas F. Dawson, and assistant financial clerk, Charles F. Pace, at $2,750 each; librarian, Edward C. Goodwin, file clerk, Harry J. Overman, chief bookkeeper, Eugene Colwell, assistant Journal clerk, J. L. Aston, printing clerk, Ansel Wold—

And so forth.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the amendment be laid on the table .

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate any longer upon this motion except to make a statement. During the discussion of the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] it seemed to be assumed by those opposing the motion, or some of them, that striking out the name of Mr. Rose from the bill would operate as a removal of Mr. Rose from his office, or in some other manner affect the proper discharge of his duties. Speaking for myself, such was not the intention, and I do not believe it was the intention of anyone here. Yet the argument, if I may so term it, based upon the fact that the office was one specially created and filled by Mr. Rose at the time of its creation, could have led to no other conclusion.

Mr. President, it was my purpose, in the event this motion was defeated, to take the time of the Senate and insist upon the insertion of every name of every clerk that was available to me. I do not intend, however, to trespass upon the time of the Senate, brief as it is, for that purpose; but I think it is fair to give notice that I will, if I am living and a bill of this kind is introduced specifying the names of individuals, I shall take the time, at least, to insist to the best of my ability upon a similar course with reference to all of the congressional and departmental employees who are provided for.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 135, which I think has quite an important bearing upon our international commerce. The South American countries have agreed that they will take certain manufactured products of our country, such as cement, paints, oils, textiles, paper, et cetera, provided there was a certificate from our Bureau of Standards that such materials were up to the quality required by the United States Government and fixed by the Bureau of Standards. Upon the representation made by the Bureau of Standards, a very large order of cement was sent to Argentina. The French Government recently bought 4,000,000 yards of cloth upon the basis that the quality would be certified by the Bureau of Standards. They have no special fund for that, and I wanted to ask, at the bottom of page 134, the insertion of a small amount sufficient to start this matter and then let the business be supported by the fees that will be fixed by the Department of Commerce upon certification of materials for foreign shipment. I ask permission to read it. It is only a few lines.

For the special certification of commercial products intended for export, including the necessary inspection and tests connected therewith: Provided, That such certification shall be limited to classes of materials being examined by the Bureau of Standards for the Government, and shall be made only upon request of manufacturers concerned and upon the payment of an adequate fee, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, to be immediately available, $10,000.

I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. POMERENE. I notice that the amendment speaks of an adequate fee.

Mr. OWEN. That will be fixed.

Mr. POMERENE. Is there anything to specify who shall determine the adequate fee?

Mr. OWEN. The Department of Commerce does that.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well; if that is made clear by the amendment, it is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. OWEN. I think it is quite clear.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this amendment was considered by the committee and rejected. I will say that I have very little hope of finishing the appropriation bills before the 4th of March. I know we will not finish them unless we have night sessions. If this matter is discussed it will consume a great deal of time. So, without giving my assent to it, to save time I am willing that it shall go to conference to be considered there. The committee rejected it, and I am not in favor of it, but I do not wish to consume time by a discussion here. Is that course agreeable to the Senator?

Mr. OWEN. It is agreeable to me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The amendment may be adopted, as far as I am concerned, and then let the conferees take it up.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the House has already passed upon this. Why put it into this bill now and have it come back in a conference report? I shall, for that reason, make the point of order on it that it has not been reported by a committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has been duly estimated for.

Mr. OWEN. If it was estimated for I will say to the Senator that that brings it without the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not said it had not been estimated for. I said that it had not been reported to the Senate by a standing committee of the Senate, and upon that I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Will the Senator please read the rule to which he refers?

Mr. OWEN. I shall not insist on the amendment if the Senator makes the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we have been in the habit during all of the years that I have been in the Senate, with the exception of the last two years, of appropriating one month's extra salary to each one of the employees of the Senate and also of the several committees. That has been granted in lieu of mileage, as nearly all of these employees come from the States of the Senators whose employees they are, who employ them either as their own private secretaries or for the use and benefit of the several committees. For the last two years we have abandoned that practice. We have abandoned it, I assume, because we have been in almost continuous session, so that very few of these secretaries have had an opportunity to return to their homes. We all hope that on March 4, 1915, we shall be able to adjourn, and for the first time, I think, in seven years we shall not have either a long session or an extraordinary session. The services of most of these secretaries will be required in their home States; there is work for them all the time, and they ought to have either a mileage allowance or this extra month's compensation.

I have offered an amendment to allow each one mileage at the rate of 5 cents a mile, if he shall be required to go to the State from which he has been appointed. If he remains here, of course there will be nothing whatever paid. The sum I propose will scarcely pay, of course, the expenses of the trip. The amendment, I will say to the Senator having the bill in charge, would undoubtedly be open to the point of order that it has not been reported from a committee nor has there been any estimate made of it. If the Senator should see fit to make the point of order, of course it would prevail.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask, at least, that the amendment may first be read, so that the Senator may see the justice of it. Then the Senator can make the point of order if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask if the Senator from North Dakota has estimated what this would cost—what it will amount to?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it would amount to between $30,000 and $40,000.

Mr. KENYON. That could easily be saved on the proposed trip to the Panama Exposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 4, on page 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to those employees of the Senate who may be required to return to their respective places of appointment mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile each way for going to and returning from each regular session of Congress, including the third session of the Sixty-third Congress, to be estimated by the nearest route of common travel, such mileage to be paid on vouchers containing the certificate showing the necessity for such travel, approved by the Senators appointing such employees. And the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make the point of order against the amendment. The Senator from North Dakota, I understand, admits that the amendment is subject to a point of order. If he is desirous, I will read the rule covering the case.

Mr. McCUMBER. I admit that the amendment is subject to a point of order. I only appeal to the generosity of the Senator from Virginia not to make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk. I wish to say that I am doing this at the request of my colleague, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON], who is ill. I am very sorry that he can not be here to present this amendment himself, as he is quite interested in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana for his colleague will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 129, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$35,000" and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$35,900," so that it will read:

Clerk hire: For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce, not to exceed $1,600 per annum for each person, of clerks in the offices of shipping commissioners, $35,900.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to say——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make the same point of order as to this amendment that I did as to the last amendment offered. It is, under the same rule, plainly out of order.

Mr. RANSDELL. What is the point of order? The amendment has been estimated for.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The rule to which I refer is as follows:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation—

And so forth.

The amendment is plainly in contravention of that rule.

Mr. RANSDELL. This amendment is to carry out an existing law. It is to provide pay for the clerks in the office of the shipping commissioners, and there is certainly a law creating the shipping commissioners and providing clerks for them. This is merely to provide for one additional clerk.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to have the amendment again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, this merely adds $900 to the appropriation. Its purpose is to provide for an additional clerk in this office. The Secretary of Commerce has asked for it, and the committee has taken testimony in regard to the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply want to withdraw the point of order. I think, on reading the remainder of the rule, the point I made was not well taken, and I do not wish to press it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator. I think the point of order was clearly wrong, and I hope the Senate will agree to the proposed appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana on behalf of his colleague.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the committee to an item found on page 67 of the bill, line 7. It relates to the salary of the clerk of the assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak. The amount provided for in the bill is $1,000, while the amount of compensation for the clerk of every other assay office runs from $1,200 to $1,400. I do not see why there should be this discrimination. I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a statement made by the clerk of the Deadwood office himself. I read from a letter addressed to Representative BURKE, of South Dakota, by the present clerk of the Deadwood assay office, Mr. Jesse Simmons. Mr. Simmons, after referring to the salaries paid the clerks at Carson, Boise, Helena, and Deadwood, says:

This interests me very much, as I am the clerk in this office; doing the same work and having the same responsibilities as these other men. I would esteem it a very great personal favor if you will fix it for me to get an increase to $1,200—the amount this salary stood at for 14 or 15 years. I feel that I am being discriminated against—but probably not intentionally.

The duties of the office of the clerk at Deadwood are quite as onerous, I think, as they are at any of the other assay offices, and there is no other clerk who does not receive a salary of from $1,200 to $1,400.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will the Senator let me know whether this increase was estimated for? In looking at the Book of Estimates I find that $1,000 has been estimated for the pay of that office, and I know of no reason for increasing it, except that the clerk asks that it be done.

Mr. STERLING. I am aware of the fact, as I said to the chairman of the committee the other day, that the estimate was for only $1,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment. I am compelled to do so, because we can not continue——

Mr. STERLING. I hope the Senator will see that this is a discrimination against this clerk, although, as the clerk himself says, he thinks it was unintentionally done. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not invoke the point of order against the proposed amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I feel compelled by a sense of duty to raise the point of order against these sums that we know nothing on earth about, except that the clerks want the increase. This clerk can wait for another year; and, if his case is meritorius, let the department in which he works investigate the matter and make a recommendation in regard to it. I am compelled to ask that this piling up of appropriations on this bill be stopped. I must, therefore, make the point of order and insist upon it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will first make the motion to amend. I have not yet made the motion. I was merely making a preliminary statement, thinking that in consideration of the statement the chairman of the committee might not make the point of order.

I move that, in line 7, page 67, the figures "$1,000" be stricken out and that the figures "$1,200" be inserted in lieu thereof, so that it will read for the item "$1,200."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make the point of order that the item has not been estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia makes the point of order that the proposed appropriation has not been estimated for.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, while I am on my feet, I desire to offer two other amendments, which I send to the desk in order that they may be considered together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order as to the Senator's first amendment. Now, the Senator from South Dakota offers a further amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000," so that the line will read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Well, Mr. President, in order to save time, let the amendment go in the bill and let it be investigated by the conference committee, if that suits the Senator from South Dakota. I do not know whether or not it has any merit in it. The committee turned it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his motion to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. STERLING. Did I understand the Senator to say that he would consent to let the amendment go in the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let the amendment be adopted, with the understanding that it will have careful investigation; and if it is thought to be meritorious, I will try to hold it; but if I can not find any merit in it, I can not make a fight for it.

Mr. STERLING. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota submits a further amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,400," so as to read:

For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,400.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will say that this amendment is of the same nature as the other. It relates to the expense of operating the assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let it take the same course as the last amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAMES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 22, after the words "Official Reporters," it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,400," so as to read:

Clerk on Journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be selected by the Official Reporters, $2,400.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, line 10, before the word "clerks," it is proposed to insert "two translators, at $1,800 each," and on page 73, line 11, after the word "three," to strike out "twenty-six" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, let me just say a word in explanation of the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if that has been estimated for? I can find no estimate for it whatever, and I make the point of order that it has not been estimated for.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will allow me one moment, this is an amendment which I submitted to the Senator yesterday, and the clerk of the committee found that it had been estimated for the year before.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Exactly; but it is not estimated for now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And I understood the Senator to say that if the Senate cared to put the amendment on the bill he would not oppose it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I recall that there was such a conversation between the Senator and myself, and I withdraw the point of order. The Senate can do as it pleases with the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All I ask, Mr. President, is that it shall be considered in conference. I will not press it if it is not found to be meritorious and if the department does not explain it satisfactorily.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. With that understanding, it can go into the bill, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 144, line 17, after the words "Chief justice," it is proposed to insert "$6,500."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 144, line 17, after the words "Chief justice," it is proposed to insert "$6,500," so as to read:

Supreme Court, District of Columbia: Chief justice, $6,500, and five associate justices, at $6,000 each.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if this increase has been estimated for?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the amendment proposes to increase the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from $6,000 to $6,500, the other justices to receive the amount at present paid them of $6,000 each. It is customary for the chief justice of a court to receive a slightly additional compensation to that received by the associate justices.

Mr. BRYAN. My question was, Has this increase been estimated for?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It has not.

Mr. BRYAN. I raise the point of order that it has not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. When the sundry civil bill is laid before the Senate, if the Senator has a matter that will not occasion debate, I will yield to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21318) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

CHANNEL OF CALUMET RIVER, ILL.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will yield temporarily if it will not displace the sundry civil appropriation bill and if the matter which the Senator from Illinois desires to bring to the attention of the Senate does not lead to debate.

Mr. LEWIS. If debate shall ensue upon the matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate, I will withdraw it. I would not like to interfere with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 18745) in relation to the location of a navigable channel in the Calumet River in Illinois.

I will say that this is a bill which has passed the House and which has been recommended by the Committee on Commerce of this body. It merely authorizes the occupation of an old channel which has been abandoned by the Government. I am not aware of any opposition to it, but some formal authorization is required.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I will inquire if there is a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. LEWIS. There is, but I can state the facts to the Senator as I understand them.

Mr. President, the old channel of the Calumet River ran in a zigzag manner, so that it became necessary to straighten the channel. The property owners gave up their land in order that the work might be done and in consideration of the old channel being subject to occupation.

Now, the new channel has been completed; the old channel has been abandoned, and it is desired by the people of this little locality to occupy the old channel. As will be noticed, the bill merely authorizes the use of the old channel in lieu of the land given to make the new channel.

I must say that I am doing this as an accommodation to Representative MANN. I do not profess complete knowledge of the matter, and I am merely quoting from Mr. MANN. I would not like to state that I have personal knowledge of the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Whereas by deeds dated May 4, 1887, and recorded in the recorder's office of Cook County, Ill., on April 6, 1889, in book 2497 of records, at page 219, and on April 8, 1889, in book 2481 of records, at page 271, respectively, the owners of the north quarter of fractional section 7, township 37 north, range 15 east of the third principal meridian, south of the Indian boundary line in Cook County, Ill., gave and granted unto the United States of America free and unobstructed right of way in and through the above-described ground 200 feet in width for purposes of a channel for the Calumet River, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and in order to enable the United States to straighten the channel of the said Calumet River and conform to a survey and realignment of the channel lines of said river as adopted, established, and shown by plat approved by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and filed for record in the office of the recorder of deeds of Cook County, Ill., on the 17th day of May, 1889, as document No. 1102284, entitled "Map of the Calumet River, Ill., from Lake Michigan to Calumet Lake, to accompany report of W. G. Ewing, United States attorney, to the Attorney General, respecting cession of right of way for improvement of said river, under act of Congress approved July 5, 1884" (report dated January 24, 1888, and report dated February 12, 1889. William G. Ewing, United States attorney, northern district of Illinois); and

Whereas it is provided in the said deeds above referred to that "the shore or dock lines of said river as so established and shown on said plat shall hereafter for all purposes be taken as the true meandered lines of said stream"; and

Whereas a navigable channel has been cut through said north quarter of said fractional section 7 within the new channel lines of the Calumet River as shown on said map: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the portion of the old channel of the Calumet River in the north quarter of fractional section 7, township 37 north, range 15 east of the third principal meridian, south of the Indian boundary line, in Cook County, Ill., which lies outside of the new channel lines, as established by the United States and shown on "Map of the Calumet River, Ill., from Lake Michigan to Calumet Lake, to accompany report of W. G. Ewing, United States attorney, to the Attorney General, respecting cession of right of way for improvement of said river, under act of Congress approved July 5, 1884," is hereby abandoned as navigable water.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ANNA MILLER.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming. I understand that he desires to ask consideration for a House bill which will take but a few moments. If it does not lead to any discussion, I have no objection.

Mr. WARREN. It is a House bill of only 10 lines, and I will withdraw it if it leads to debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is agreeable, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 15557) for the relief of Anna Miller.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Anna Miller, of Glencoe, Wyo., $116, as full reimbursement for sums paid by her for carrying the United States mail between the railroad station and the post office at Glencoe, Wyo., from December 20, 1906, to January 6, 1908.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21318) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Public buildings, constructions, and sites," on page 4, after line 5, to insert:

Boise, Idaho, rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to insert:

Charlotte, N. C., rent of buildings: Additional for rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

Concord, N. H., rent of buildings: Additional for rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 13, to insert:

Danville, Va., post office and courthouse: For completion of tower and installation of clock therein, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 18, to insert:

Harrisburg, Pa., rent of buildings: Additional for rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $4,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 5, to insert:

Lincoln, Nebr., rent of buildings: Additional for rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 14, to insert:

Madison, Wis., rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 24, after the word "For," to strike out "completion, $400,000," and insert "continuation, $550,000"; so as to make the clause read:

New Haven, Conn., post office: For continuation, $550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 6, to insert:

Newport, R. I., rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 14, to insert:

Oakland, Cal., post office and customhouse: For site, in accordance with value ascertained in condemnation proceedings, $51,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 12, to insert:

Portland, Ind., post office: For completion, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 13, to insert:

Portland, Oreg., post office: For continuation, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, eliminate the installation of vacuum-cleaning and air-washing machinery, intercommunicating telephones and clock systems, etc., as set forth in section 6 of the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, but that the building shall, within the limit of cost as fixed, namely, $1,000,000, be completed with all the necessary and usual mechanical equipment and mail-conveying machinery, together with any other labor-saving devices, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and desirable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 2, to insert:

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 13, to insert:

Reading, Pa., rent of buildings: Additional for rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 19, to insert:

Sandusky, Ohio, rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 19, to insert:

Toledo, Ohio, rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 1, after the word "commencement," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$21,000," so as to make the clause read:

Waynesville, N. C., post office: For commencement, $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 16, after the word "continuation," to strike out "$220,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

Wilmington, N. C., customhouse and appraisers' stores: For continuation, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 9, to insert:

Connecting parkway between Rock Creek and Potomac Parks: That the commission created by section 22 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, for the purpose of acquiring land for a connecting parkway between Potomac Park and Zoological Park shall have power, in its discretion, so to amend the map on file in the office of the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, dated May 17, 1911, as to exclude lands not needed and to include lands needed for the execution of a plan for the said parkway approved by the Commission of Fine Arts: Provided, That the total area of lands finally to be acquired for said parkway shall not exceed the area authorized to be acquired by said act: Provided further, That the said commission is hereby authorized to settle and compromise all questions and controversies between the United States and adverse claimants of titles to lands within or adjacent to the area desired for said parkway, subject to the approval of the Attorney General of the United States, who may, in such settlement and compromise, or in any condemnation proceedings requested by said commission, exercise the power in him conferred by sections 363, 364, and 365 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That any changes herein authorized shall first be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, repairs, equipment, and general expenses," on page 26, line 4, after the word "thereto," to insert "and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, to dispose of said wharf and warehouse upon such terms and conditions as may be for the best interests of the United States," so as to read:

Repairs and preservation: For repairs and preservation of all completed and occupied public buildings and the grounds thereof, under the control of the Treasury Department, and for wire partitions and fly screens therefor, Government wharves and piers under the control of the Treasury Department, together with the necessary dredging adjacent thereto, buildings and wharf at Sitka, Alaska, and the Secretary of the Treasury may, in renting said wharf, require that the lessee shall make all necessary repairs thereto, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, to dispose of said wharf and warehouse upon such terms and conditions as may be for the best interests of the United States, for care of vacant sites under the control of the Treasury Department, such as necessary fences, filling dangerous holes, cutting grass and weeds, but not for any permanent improvements thereon; for repairs and preservation of buildings not reserved by vendors on sites under the control of the Treasury Department acquired for public buildings or the enlargement of public buildings, the expenditures on this account for the current fiscal year not to exceed 15 per cent of the annual rentals of such buildings.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I think there should be a semicolon added after "United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "United States," on line 7, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert a semicolon.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast Guard," on page 35, line 14, after the word "fuel," to insert "and water," so as to make the clause read:

For fuel and water for vessels, stations, and houses of refuge, $277,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 13, to insert:

Ten per cent of the foregoing amounts shall be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects named, but no more than 10 per cent shall be added to any one item of appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 23, to insert:

To purchase or construct a harbor boat for the Coast Guard to replace the Hartley at San Francisco, Cal., $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engraving and Printing," on page 37, line 4, before the word "million," to strike out "seventy-four" and insert "ninety"; and in line 9, after the word "stamps," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "two hundred and thirty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

For the work of engraving and printing, exclusive of repay work, during the fiscal year 1916 of not exceeding 90,000,000 delivered sheets of United States currency, 13,500,000 delivered sheets of national-bank notes and Federal reserve currency, 90,000,000 delivered sheets of internal-revenue stamps, 8,000,000 delivered sheets of emergency-revenue stamps, 239,000 delivered sheets of customs stamps, 4,225,000 delivered sheets of opium orders and special tax stamps required under act of December 17, 1914, and 1,600,500 delivered sheets of checks, drafts, and miscellaneous work, as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 17, after the word "assistants," to strike out "$1,300,000" and insert "$1,521,600"; and in line 19, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "including $8,400 for custody of dies, rolls, and plates," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of all necessary employees, other than plate printers and plate printers' assistants, $1,521,600, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired, except in so far as such printing may be necessary in executing the requirements of the act "To refine and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 7, after the word "employed," to strike out "$1,561,421" and insert "$1,801,059," so as to make the clause read:

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, when employed, $1,801,059, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 22, after the words "horse-drawn," to strike out "passenger-carrying," and in line 23, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "$615,526" and insert "$657,526," so as to make the clause read:

For engravers' and printers' materials and other materials except distinctive paper, miscellaneous expenses, including paper for internal-revenue stamps, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of necessary motor-propelled and horse-drawn vehicles, when, in writing, ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury, $657,526, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," on page 40, after line 9, to insert:

Expenses of refunding United States bonds under section 18 of Federal reserve act: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare for the refunding provided by section 18 of the Federal reserve act of 2 per cent bonds of the United States into one-year 3 per cent Treasury notes or 30-year 3 per cent United States bonds, and to make such conversions as may be authorized during the fiscal year 1916, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 24, before the word "million," to strike out "seventy-three" and insert "ninety," and on page 42, line 5, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "$415,000" and insert "$488,950," so as to make the clause read:

Distinctive paper for United States securities: For distinctive paper for United States currency, not less than 90,500,000 sheets, and for national-bank currency and Federal reserve bank currency, not less than 13,500,000 sheets, including transportation, traveling, mill, and other necessary expenses, salaries of not exceeding 1 register, 2 assistant registers, 5 counters, 5 watchmen, and 1 skilled laborer, and expenses of officer detailed from the Treasury, $488,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

In all, $394,034.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 8, after the word "Soldiers," to strike out "$3,831,009.50" and insert "$3,862,843.50," so as to make the clause read:

In all, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $3,862,843.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," subhead "Public buildings," on page 91, line 18, before the word "Building," to strike out "old Post Office Department" and insert "General Land Office," so as to make the clause read:

Repairs of buildings, Interior Department: For repairs of Interior Department and Pension Buildings, and of the General Land Office Building, occupied by the Interior Department, including preservation and repair of steam-heating and electric-lighting plants and elevators, $40,000, of which sum not exceeding $7,500 may be expended for day labor, except for work done by contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Expenses in Alaska," on page 114, after line 4, to insert:

Medical relief in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, with the advice and cooperation of the Public Health Service, to provide for the medical and sanitary relief of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; erection, purchase, repair, rental, and equipment of hospital buildings; books and surgical apparatus; pay and necessary traveling expenses of physicians, nurses, and other employees, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, to be immediately available, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment just adopted I ask permission to insert in the RECORD an extract from a letter of the United States district judge, Hon. Fred M. Brown, of Valdez, Alaska; also an extract from the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1913; also a brief extract marked here from an address by Mr. M. K. Sniffen before the Lake Mohonk conference, and also extracts from pages 15, 16, 17, and 36 of the report of the governor of Alaska for 1914, what I have marked with reference to it.

I wish to express the hope that the conferees will be able to retain this amendment in their report, because I think an examination of the reports and records will show that our treatment of the natives of Alaska is little short of shameful. In a paragraph on the same page we have provided $20,000 for the protection of game in Alaska, and we certainly ought to provide some medical service for the natives there. I ask that what I have sent to the desk may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Extracts from letter from Hon. Fred M. Brown, United States district judge, Valdez, Alaska, to the Secretary of the Interior, December 1, 1914.]

In charge of the "floating court" aboard the U. S. revenue cutter McCulloch during the past summer, I visited many places along the westerly coast of Alaska remote from ordinary routes of travel and found such deplorable conditions existing among the natives in many places that I conceive it to be my duty to call attention to it in the hope that such conditions may be bettered.

Many are dying from tuberculosis and other diseases, no doubt largely the result of exposure to cold and wet and insufficient food and clothing, as well as places of habitation. In some places their condition is so utterly abject and wretched that it is a disgrace to humanity that it should be permitted; even animals would not be permitted to suffer and die as these poor wretches are doing.

The Department of Education, under whose charge these natives are placed, have no doubt done all that has been possible with the very limited appropriations made available for such use.

* * * * * * *

It would take too long to describe these conditions in detail, but they are such as shock every sense of decency and right, and I earnestly hope that measures may be at once taken to relieve this situation.

I respectfully urge that an appropriation be made to relieve the immediate physical necessities of these natives without delay.

Very respectfully,

FRED M. BROWN,
United States District Judge.

[From Report of Commissioner of Education, 1913, vol. 1, p. 638.]

RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. Medical relief: Adequate and special provisions for the medical and sanitary relief of the Eskimos, Indians, Aleuts, and other natives of Alaska is imperative. Most of these natives live in villages far away from any white settlement in which there is a practicing physician, and must depend on Government physicians, nurses, and teachers for ordinary medical attention and care. The use of part of the educational appropriation for medical relief is an emergency measure dictated by the absolute necessity for action. The entire appropriation is urgently needed for the support of the schools and to promote the industrial development of the natives. Under a decision of the comptroller this appropriation can not be used in erecting hospitals. Without hospitals for the segregation and proper care of natives afflicted with tuberculosis, trachoma, and other communicable diseases it is impossible to reduce their prevalency. An appropriation of at least $125,000 is needed to establish medical service among the natives of Alaska with an efficient organization. This is a matter of vital importance not only to the natives but also to white settlers in Alaska.

CONDITIONS AMONG CERTAIN NATIVE TRIBES OF ALASKA.

[Address by Mr. M. K. Sniffen, recording secretary Indian Rights Association.]

* * * * * * *

The Alaska Division of the Bureau of Education exercises jurisdiction over the natives of the Territory. It is a pleasure for me to bear testimony to the splendid work that bureau is attempting to do for the 30,000 Indians and Eskimos under very adverse circumstances. Over 70 schools are maintained, and several hospitals have been established. In order that the extent of the bureau's work may be understood, let me remind you that Alaska is one-fifth as large as the United States, and that the entire coast line is probably a matter of 20,000 miles, for which vast field the bureau has but $200,000 annually. For a country where extravagant prices are charged for everything it is necessary to economize even to paying some of the teachers eight or nine months for a year's work. The Army gives its soldiers extra pay and additional allowance for Alaska service, but many of the bureau's employees do not receive normal wages. To do the work required in Alaska the appropriation should be at least $500,000.

The Public Health Service loaned Dr. Krulish, one of its physicians, to the Alaska bureau to go over the Territory. He made a thorough investigation and a report on health conditions of the natives, showing a deplorable situation calling for urgent action. Congress was asked for an appropriation to enable the bureau to do effective medical work, but not a dollar was granted. If the ravages of tuberculosis, trachoma, and kindred diseases are to be effectively checked or eradicated, favorable action should be promptly taken by Congress on the recommendations of Dr. Krulish. Otherwise the number of natives of Alaska in need of education and Christianity will be a diminishing quantity.

5. The establishment of a number of small hospitals in charge of competent physicians.

[From the Report of Governor of Alaska, 1914.]

PUBLIC HEALTH AND HEALTH CONDITIONS.

Among the native population, however, diseases of various kinds are widespread, this being especially true in remote sections, in some parts of southwestern Alaska and the eastern shore of Bering Sea, where such things as sanitation and hygiene are unknown. Tuberculosis is the principal disease, and there is no doubt that if not eradicated in the near future it will exterminate the natives well within the present century. According to the 1913 report of Dr. Emil Krulish, United States Public Health Service, detailed for service in Alaska under the Commissioner of Education, 15 per cent of the native population is affected with tuberculosis, including all forms, and both the active and latent type, while in 7 per cent it is present in the active stage. The home conditions are responsible for this infection, says Dr. Krulish, for in the crowded, unventilated rooms "all eat from the same dish, drink from the spout of the same teapot, use the same towel, and expectorate upon the same floor." It is there that the principal danger of contagion exists, and it is there that tuberculosis, trachoma, and other diseases are frequently contracted.

During the present summer Rev. J. H. Condit, an Alaskan missionary of many more years residence, visited many native villages of southwestern Alaska and the eastern coast of Bering Sea. He describes conditions among the natives in those sections as little short of horrible. Disease, suffering, and death are everywhere apparent, neither age nor sex being exempt. Sanitation and hygiene in any form are absolutely unknown; little medical relief can be obtained, nor are there hospitals to care for the sick and diseased. Crippled children are numerous and death stalks everywhere. A devoted physician is found here and there at wide intervals who endeavors to alleviate the suffering that he finds, but handicapped as he is, he can render but insufficient relief. Dr. Condit found children 4 and 5 years old who had never learned to walk; they were the victims of disease and neglect, of hunger, dirt, and cold. Missionary societies can not cope with these conditions, notwithstanding the fact that missionaries, teachers, and physicians show painstaking devotion to the welfare of the native people among whom they are stationed. Medical relief is necessary and urgent, the present medical service being entirely inadequate. Hospitals are indispensable for the proper treatment of cases. Those now in use are few and unsuited for the treatment of the sick. Their number should be materially increased and they should be located at points where they will serve the needs of the greatest number of the native people throughout the Territory.

The natives of Alaska have at all times received but scant consideration from the Government, except in the matter of appropriations by Congress for their education. They are, as a rule, self-supporting; they have to be or they would inevitably die of starvation. The Government provides schools for them, in which good work is being done, the teachers of these schools giving attention to sanitation and hygiene in the schools as also in the native villages where schools are maintained, but necessarily their efforts in the latter direction are limited by existing conditions which they are unable to control. The only way by which the medical problem can be solved is, therefore, by the establishment of well-equipped hospitals, the employment of physicians and nurses, the isolation of the infected, and the thorough education of the natives in hygiene and sanitation. The establishment of a number of hospitals along the Pacific coast of Alaska and the Bering Sea coast and on the Yukon River, at convenient points, is indispensable if these people are to have the medical care and attention to which they are entitled from a humanitarian standpoint. The case of the native is not yet hopeless, nor will it be if prompt steps be taken to save him from the ravages of the many diseases to which he seems to be heir. The peopling of the Territory by white men, while it has given the native some new avenues of employment, can not be said to have increased his means of making a livelihood; each succeeding year the old native finds it more difficult to provide for himself, and while the Government has provided schools for the education of the natives, and reindeer herds in some sections for their sustenance, much that is vital to their welfare, even their very existence, remains to be done. They are just as much in need of medical treatment as they are of education, perhaps more so; at any rate, education and medical treatment are inseparable and are essential factors to their welfare. If the natives are taught to live under sanitary and hygienic conditions, a long step forward will have been made, and with sound bodies the natives will then profit much more largely by education and will be more thoroughly equipped to become self-supporting, self-respecting citizens.

* * * * * * *

NATIVE INHABITANTS.

The health conditions existing among the native inhabitants in some sections of southwestern Alaska and along the southern and eastern shores of Bering Sea have been referred to elsewhere in this report. These conditions are such as call for immediate remedy. In southern Alaska, in the central Pacific region, and in the interior conditions among the natives physically and from a health standpoint are better than in the districts named above. This is particularly true of the natives of southeastern Alaska, who are generally industrious and self-supporting, and some of them are advancing rapidly in the ways of civilization. Many of them occupy fairly comfortable homes, and the sanitary conditions of houses and villages show improvement. This improved condition is due to the work of teachers and physicians who are under the direction of the Bureau of Education and the missions which are maintained by a number of religious denominations. There is, however, still much need for effective work along sanitary and hygienic lines. Hospitals for the care of diseased natives should be provided and maintained by the Federal Government at central points, where those needing medical and surgical attention could be conveniently assembled at a minimum expense. Some provision should also be made for furnishing aid to the aged natives, some of whom are found in nearly every native community and who are unable to earn a livelihood. The necessity for the construction, equipment, and maintenance of hospitals and for the proper care of indigent natives is urgent.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National parks," on page 115, line 21, after the date "1914," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to read:

Glacier National Park, Mont.: For administration and improvement, construction of roads, trails, bridges, and telephone lines and the repair thereof, including necessary repairs to the road from the old town of St. Marys through that part of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation east of lower St. Marys Lake to a point in or near section 35, township 36 north, range 15 west, on the boundary line between the Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, authorized by the sundry civil act of August 1, 1914, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 12, on page 117.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the bill at present?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not until the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The reading was continued. The next amendment was, on page 118, after line 21, to insert:

HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

For maintenance, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, ice and stationery, the balance of which shall be paid from donations and other sources, of which sum not less than $1,500 shall be used for normal instruction, $65,000;

For tools, materials, fuel, wages of instructors, and other necessary expenses of the department of manual arts, $12,000;

For books, shelving, furniture, and fixtures for the libraries, $1,500;

For improvement of grounds and repairs of buildings, to be immediately available, $10,000;

Medical department: For part cost of needed equipment, laboratory supplies, apparatus, and repair of laboratories and buildings, $7,000;

For material and apparatus for chemical, physical, and natural-history studies and use in laboratories of the new science hall, including cases and shelving, $2,000;

For fuel and light: For part payment for fuel and light, Freedmen's Hospital and Howard University, including necessary labor to care for and operate the same, $3,500;

In all, $101,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, in behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber on account of illness, I desire to make a point of order against this amendment. It is that this legislation is obnoxious under the rule because not authorized by law, and also that the appropriation is not estimated for.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is estimated for. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely state what was stated to me by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that it is estimated for, and the same appropriations have been made for years and years.

Mr. HARDWICK. That would not affect the whole point of order. I think it may be there is another answer to the point of order, but that is not it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The point of order the Senator makes is that it has not been estimated for. I can assure him——

Mr. HARDWICK. I was mistaken.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the proposition is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That does not make it out of order. It has been duly estimated for. Very few of the appropriations are provided for by existing law—not one in a hundred.

Mr. HARDWICK. The answer suggested by the Senator from Utah——

Mr. SMOOT. It was simply stated as an argument.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely, at the request of the Senator from Mississippi, submit the point of order. I promised to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. HARDWICK. That it is obnoxious to the rules in that it is not authorized by existing law. I state it in the language he requested me to use.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has some difficulty in hearing the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will state it over again, and as requested by the Senator from Mississippi. I made the point of order that this appropriation for Howard University is obnoxious to the rule in that it was not estimated for, but the Senator from Virginia relieved that part of it, because he said that is a mistake, that it is estimated for; and I make the further point of order that it is obnoxious to the rule in that it is not authorized by existing law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any such rule.

Mr. HARDWICK. Still I make it at the request of the Senator from Mississippi, who is absent, and in the form that he wanted to have it presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no such rule, so the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, on the merits of the proposition I wish to make some observations. I wish to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill the reason for this appropriation? Have we maintained in the District of Columbia a policy of making appropriations for any colleges except this one?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not remember about appropriations for colleges. I know this one has been appropriated for for many years.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is there any other one maintained here by the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not recall another one. This, as the Senator knows, is for colored people.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. A helpless class of our population, those whose necessities have appealed to philanthropic people all over the United States. The National Government undertook to do something for the education of the colored race by establishing this institution of learning here, and Congress has been appropriating for it every year for many years. As a southern man, living all my life with the colored people, I will say there is nothing which appeals more strongly to me than this appropriation. I think it ought to be maintained, and I am sure the Senate will maintain it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I suppose in a way I have gotten the information I asked for. I want to be accurate in what I am about to say. My objection to this appropriation is based on the proposition that although we have a number of higher educational institutions in this city for the white race, the Government makes no appropriation for any one of them. If I am wrong about that I want to be corrected.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me for interjecting just a few words here, I do not know of an appropriation made for an institution for white people in the city of Washington, but we appropriate for the cause of education to white people throughout the United States hundreds of times more than we do for the colored people. We have made this little appropriation for the colored people in the city of Washington, which is a mere pittance as compared with the appropriations we make throughout the United States for institutions where the colored people are not admitted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator is accurate in that statement or not. If we make any appropriations for educational purposes throughout the United States from the Federal Treasury, I am not apprised of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We do, for the agricultural and mechanical colleges in every State in the Union.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; we have land-grant colleges.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. And the colored people are not admitted to them.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think they are.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They are not in my State.

Mr. HARDWICK. They are not in my State, but I suppose in a majority of the States they are admitted.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They may be theoretically admitted in some of the northern States, but practically they do not enter those institutions anywhere. I trust the Senator from Georgia can see his way clear to permit this little pittance to go to the colored people for their education and betterment, when it is a mere bagatelle as compared with the amount appropriated out of the public money in different parts of the United States for institutions for the whites.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator from Virginia state about how much money we appropriate for agricultural colleges for the whites?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sorry, but I do not carry those figures in my head.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not some millions of dollars?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; many millions of dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. Many millions.

Mr. RANSDELL. A good many millions.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Under existing laws agricultural colleges in each State get $50,000 a year. They originally got $25,000. Some years ago on my motion that was increased at the rate of $5,000 a year until it reached the sum of $50,000 in all. In addition to that, there is $50,000 appropriated to every State for experimental stations, so that to-day under State laws each State gets for experimental stations and for agricultural colleges $100,000 from the Federal Government. That is the existing law and it has been so for years. Originally the appropriation for experimental stations was $25,000. Some years ago, at the instance of a Representative in the other House from Wisconsin, whose name I can not recall, that was increased $25,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, the Representative was Congressman Adams, of Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. Representative Adams. That is correct. The other law, the law giving agricultural colleges $25,000 a year, was increased some years ago under an amendment offered by myself in the Senate, so that each State now gets for these two purposes $100,000 a year.

Mr. HARDWICK. Still, the proposition I had in my mind to start on is not changed by any of these observations. These agricultural colleges—these land-grant colleges—throughout the States, at least in most of the States, are open to both races. There is certainly no racial question involved in those appropriations. I do not seek to raise any by the question I raise now, except in this way: I do not see why and I have not yet heard a reason advanced——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to make a further statement?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. In addition to that, many years ago—I do not recall the date—a land grant of 30,000 acres was given for each Member of Congress. Those States that had public lands in their midst located the land and got it; those that did not got land scrip as an equivalent for it. Thirty thousand acres, as I recall it, were given for each Member of Congress.

Mr. HARDWICK. I referred just now to the land-grant colleges. Of course they are aided from the Federal Treasury or from the proceeds of the public domain. But this is what is bothering me about this appropriation: We have a number of institutions for the higher education of the white race in the District of Columbia, and, unless the Senator from Virginia is lacking in information, we appropriate not one cent for their maintenance.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure that is right. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. We appropriate not one cent for their maintenance or support. Of course it is a part of the duty of the Federal Government—it is the sole duty at present of the Federal Government—to make appropriations for the various forms of education in the District of Columbia. Therefore these appropriations might well be justified if other appropriations were granted to the people of the white race for their education in the higher branches of study in Washington and the District of Columbia. But I have not yet heard the reason for this appropriation being made purely, entirely, solely, and exclusively for the people of one race, and to a college that is maintained only for that race.

The suggestion made by the Senator from Virginia that it is necessary to educate these people and therefore the corollary that might be drawn from it that they are benefited by the kind of education they get at Howard University might open a very wide and interesting field of debate. I do not know whether it is to their best interest to have this sort of education or not. In fact, I have always doubted it. I do not know what the Senator's views are upon that question.

While I have no disposition to hold up the Senate at this time and no desire to do anything except to record my own dissent, certainly I am opposed to this appropriation, greatly opposed to it, unless at least the same thing is done for our own race in the District of Columbia. I believe we ought to have impartial treatment about this matter, to say the least of it. If I were to express in the Senate frankly my own view, I would say that this money appropriated to this colored university is worse than wasted, in my judgment. I do not believe it does any good. I am inclined to think it does harm. Be that as it may, other Senators may not agree to that view of the question, but I do not see how any Senator on either side of the Chamber can seriously contend that we ought to make this appropriation while denying it to others. For that reason I am opposed to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice," on page 121, after line 16, to strike out:

Defending suits in claims against the United States: For necessary expenses incurred in the examination of witnesses and procuring of evidence in the matter of claims against the United States and such other expenses as may be necessary in defending suits in the Court of Claims, including not exceeding $500 for law books, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $17,000.

Defense in Indian depredation claims: For salaries and expenses in defense of the Indian depredation claims, including not exceeding $6,000 for salaries of necessary employees in Washington, D. C., to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $13,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Defending suits in claims against the United States: For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in the examination of witnesses and procuring of evidence in the matter of claims against the United States and such other expenditures as may be necessary in defending suits in the Court of Claims, including the defense in Indian depredation claims, not exceeding $1,000 of which may be expended for law books, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $32,000: Provided, That said appropriation need not be apportioned as required by the provisions of section 3679, Revised Statutes, as amended February 27, 1906 (34 Stats. L., 49): Provided further, That not exceeding $8,250 of said appropriation shall be available for the payment of salaries of necessary employees in Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, line 7, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

Protecting interests of the United States in suits affecting Pacific railroads: To enable the Attorney General to represent and protect the interests of the United States in matters and suits affecting the Pacific railroads, and for expenses in connection therewith, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial," on page 126, after line 8, to insert:

To pay the widow of Horace H. Lurton, late a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, $14,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Commerce," subhead "Coast and Geodetic Survey," on page 141, line 12, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$355,400" and insert "$380,400," so as to make the clause read:

In all, field expenses, $380,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Fisheries," in the item of appropriation for the commissioner's office, on page 144, line 22, before the words "assistant architect," to insert "civil engineer, $2,000," and in line 24, after "$1,600," to insert "clerk to deputy commissioner, $1,200," so as to read:

Commissioner's office: Commissioner, $6,000; deputy commissioner, $3,500; assistants in charge of divisions—fish culture $2,700, inquiry respecting food fishes $2,700, statistics and methods of fisheries $2,500; assistants—one in charge of office $2,500, one $2,500, one $1,800, one $1,600, two at $1,200 each, two at $900 each; fish pathologist (to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce), $2,500; architect and engineer, $2,200; civil engineer, $2,000; assistant architect, $1,600; draftsman, $1,200; accountant, $2,100; librarian, $1,500; superintendent of car and messenger service, $1,600; clerk to deputy commissioner, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the commissioner's office, on page 145, line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$100,380" and insert "$103,580," so as to read:

Five janitors and messengers, at $720 each; janitress, $480; messenger boy, $360; four charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $103,580.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 12, on page 151, the last clause read being as follows:

For officers and crew of vessel for Alaska fisheries service, $16,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to accept an amendment at that point to make the $16,000 appropriated immediately available. The Bureau of Fisheries has bought and paid for a vessel——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I trust the Senator from Washington will wait until we get through with the committee amendments, and he can then offer his amendment. I do not feel at liberty to accept the amendment which he now proposes, as the committee did not recommend it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I had overlooked the fact that we are now only considering committee amendments. I will bring up the matter again.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 152, line 15, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$75,000, $5,000 of which to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

Maintenance of vessels: For maintenance of vessels and launches, including purchase and repair of boats, apparatus, machinery, and other facilities required for use with the same, hire of vessels, and all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, $75,000, $5,000 of which to be immediately available.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On page 152, line 15, before the words "of which," I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," so that it will read "$10,000 of which to be immediately available."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 153, line 20, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$65,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

Alaska, general service: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the furnishing of food, fuel, clothing, and other necessities of life to the natives of the Pribilof Islands of Alaska, transportation of supplies to and from the islands, expenses of travel of agents and other employees and subsistence while on said islands, hire and maintenance of vessels, and for all expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1910, entitled "An act to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes," and for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, including travel, hire of boats, employment of temporary labor, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 159, after line 4, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 159, after line 9, to insert:

For furniture for the Senate Office Building and for labor and material incident thereto and repairs thereof, window shades, awnings, carpets, glass for windows and bookcases, desk lamps, window ventilators, etc., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 159, after line 13, to insert:

For the Capitol: For repairs, improvements, and equipment for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "The Panama Canal," on page 170, line 24, after the word "reference," to strike out "$1,000," so as to read "law books not exceeding $500, textbooks and books of reference."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Panama Canal," on page 175, line 19, after the word "Government," to strike out "as follows: From" and insert "from," so as to read:

In addition to the foregoing sums, there is appropriated, for the fiscal year 1916, for expenditure and reinvestment under the several heads of appropriation aforesaid without being covered into the Treasury of the United States, all moneys received by the Panama Canal from services rendered or materials and supplies furnished to the United States, the Panama Railroad Co., the Canal Zone government, or to their employees, respectively, or to the Panama Government from hotel and hospital supplies and services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be authorized to change the totals wherever necessary to conform to the particular items of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 117, line 12, after "$8,000," it is proposed to insert: "All funds derived from concessions, privileges, or other sources within the park shall be expended therein," so as to read:

Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo.: For protection and improvement, $8,000. All funds derived from concessions, privileges, or other sources within the park shall be expended therein.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that clause was in the original bill for the creation of the park, but was stricken out by the House. It appears, as I am informed, in the law creating all other national parks. It seems to me that such funds as are derived from within the parks should be expended within the parks themselves, and I therefore ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that he is mistaken in the statement that that clause appears in all the acts relating to national parks.

Mr. THOMAS. I may be in error, but such is my information.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there are only three acts creating parks that contain that language. I wish to say further to the Senator that if it were undertaken now to pass those original acts, those words would not be allowed to be put into the law.

Mr. THOMAS. I think they ought to be in all of them, and especially——

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I think I can show the Senator that they should not be. The parks established are maintained by the Government. The question as to what the charges shall be should be decided by the Government, and whatever may come from the parks ought to go directly to the Treasury of the United States and should not be in the hands of a local man. I know of one case of a national park—and that is what brought this question so forcibly to the attention of the country—where it became a money-making proposition, and since that time it has been the policy not to allow this to be done. I hope, therefore, the Senator will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, we are allowed only $8,000 for the improvement and care of this park. The sum is extremely small. I think it is smaller than that appropriated for any other national park. It is $2,000 less than the sum provided in this bill for the Mesa Verde Park, which is scarcely 1 per cent of its size. Under the circumstances we certainly should have this added sum. It is needed, and I do not believe it is going to be expended improperly. Every cent of it will have to be accounted for to the Interior Department.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the bill creating this park passed just a month or so ago.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that the $8,000 is all that was estimated for, all that was asked for by the department; and next year there will be an increase, and next year an increase over that, and I do not know to what extent the amount ultimately will go.

Mr. THOMAS. But, Mr. President, the department also recommended this identical clause as a part of the bill creating the park.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly would rather increase the amount than have that amendment there.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator did not object to it before when the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I did not notice it at the time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator from Utah that this being a new park it is necessary to have hundreds of miles of road constructed, and obviously it is impossible to make any considerable improvements with a little appropriation of $8,000. These concessions may not be large, but the people who came there would naturally like to patronize the concessions if they knew the amount was going to the improvement of the park, instead of going to the National Government. It seems to me, therefore, the point of order ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make the point of order that the item is not estimated for, and that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the point of order is made I wish to say that I hope the Senator will not do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did not the Chair understand that the bill creating this park provided that the proceeds of these concessions should be turned over in this way?

Mr. THOMAS. It passed the Senate with that clause in the bill. The House struck it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then it is not in the law. The Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following as a separate paragraph:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to have made all needed dredging, repairs, and other improvements at the United States quarantine station near the city of Savannah, Ga., at a cost not to exceed $30,000, which said sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and made immediately available for the purposes stated herein.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I make the point of order——

Mr. HARDWICK. I have the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will reserve the point of order, then.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me make the statement, and then the Senator can make it. Of course I concede in advance that a point of order, if insisted upon, is good. I want to make a short statement to the Senate, however, in the hope that it may appeal to the committee to withhold the point of order. I believe that if I had been able to appear before the Senate committee and present this matter to them this amendment would have been included in the bill as reported; but the bill came up in the committee at a time when our attention was demanded here on the floor of the Senate, and I therefore lost that opportunity. I did not even know when the committee met to consider the bill, and I did not have a chance to appear before them.

The quarantine station at Savannah is in such a condition that it would be real economy to make this appropriation now, without waiting for another session of Congress to pass. I want briefly to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon, in the hope that it may appeal to his judgment, and the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the state of facts connected with it.

I read first from a letter addressed to a Member of the other House of Congress from this city and district. It reads as follows:

The undersigned firms, composing the Savannah Maritime Association, who are engaged in the foreign steamship business, are very much concerned about the conditions prevailing at the Savannah quarantine station. Numerous complaints are made by the masters of steamers as to the utter lack of facilities to take care of their crews during fumigation. The pilots complain that there is no suitable place at or near the station to moor a vessel, the wharf at the station being decayed and dangerous and the dolphins about 3 miles above the station having rotted away. At the quarantine station the channel is about the narrowest place in the river, so to anchor vessels in this vicinity, and their swinging with the incoming or outgoing tide, seriously endangers navigation.

We particularly call attention to the report of Capt. F. W. Spencer, of the Savannah Pilots' Association. With the enormous foreign business done out of this port, she is certainly entitled to the desired improvements, and we earnestly urge the passage of House bill 21069 for relief from the conditions now prevailing.

Respectfully,

A. F. CHURCHILL.

The House bill referred to is identical with the amendment I have offered. Now I want to read Capt. Spencer's letter. It is brief. It is as follows:

RE SAVANNAH QUARANTINE STATION.

SAVANNAH, GA., January 27, 1915.

This matter has been under discussion for some considerable time, and it is my purpose to submit the actual facts now prevailing at the station.

First of all, there is an extremely narrow channel at this point, and all vessels arriving at the station and receiving orders to undergo fumigation are compelled to anchor directly in the fair way of other vessels passing in or out. The channel width, to be exact, is 425 feet, and many of the vessels detained for quarantine purposes require the full width to swing to the tides, thereby creating a source of danger to the port's commerce. The Savannah River, with all of its importance, is without a single point at which vessels may be accommodated when undergoing quarantine.

Loaded vessels of deep draft have been compelled to proceed to a point about 3 miles above the quarantine station in order to find a suitable mooring, but the fact that these moorings have now rotted away finds the port without any accommodations whatever for deep-draft vessels subject to quarantine detention.

Even light-draft vessels at anchor at the Savannah Quarantine Station have come to sustain losses through grounding, and it is extremely difficult to prevent some harm to these vessels when so anchored, due to the many shoals on the edge of the channel. It is not possible to reach the quarantine station proper, as the dock is of extremely light construction and would not stand up under a vessel's weight and strain.

When fumigation takes place at the Savannah Quarantine Station, the entire crew of a vessel has no alternative but to camp out on deck for several hours, no matter what the weather conditions may be, as there is absolutely no shelter provided for the men.

It is evident that the European war will prove to be the cause of an increased number of vessels detained at the quarantine station, and this only adds to the necessity of the improvements which all maritime interests at the port of Savannah hope to see established at this station. If facilities are secured, so will the health of the people be safeguarded, and this should appeal to the citizens in general.

It will be necessary to have increased width in the channel at the quarantine station; a new dock built for the accommodation of the vessels undergoing quarantine and additional dolphins built near the station for vessels which may not be able to find sufficient space at the dock proper, dredging, of course, being necessary in order that these structures may be accessible to all classes of vessels, and, finally, there should be suitable buildings provided for the accommodation of the men who make up the crews of the vessels undergoing quarantine.

The above facts are expressed by one who has full knowledge of the conditions as they now exist, and it is hoped that the remedies herein suggested and advocated may be favorably acted upon without delay.

Respectfully,

FRANK W. SPENCER,
Savannah Pilots' Association.

Mr. President, only one word more. It will be real economy to do this now. It has been recommended, not once but twice, by the department of the Government that has charge of this matter, the Public Health and Quarantine Bureau. While it is not included in the estimates for this year, and is therefore subject to the point of order, if the Senators in charge of the bill feel compelled to make it I hope that at some future time we will be able to induce the committee to provide for this meritorious case; and I earnestly ask those Senators, if they possibly can do so, not to make this point of order now. I know it is good if they do make it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I was called from the Chamber, and for that reason did not hear the debate. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has charge of this matter on behalf of the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not feel obliged to insist upon the point of order. The expenditure is small. It has been twice recommended by the public quarantine bureau, and if we delay making the appropriation it is going to cost a great deal more in the long run.

Let me say just one word more. I intended to present this matter to the committee, but the committee took up the bill, so I am informed—I certainly did not know it—at a time when the Senate was very much employed with another important and pressing matter and when my whole attention was demanded here on the floor of the Senate. Therefore I did not have the opportunity, which I otherwise should have availed myself of, to argue this matter out before the committee. Still, the case is so meritorious and the necessity is so pressing that I earnestly hope the Senator from Oregon will not feel obliged to insist on the point of order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to refuse to gratify the wish of the Senator, but there has been no estimate whatsoever made for this item.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, there has been an estimate, although not this year. It is technically subject to a point of order. They have recommended it in the past.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Oregon to insist on the point of order?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the point of order is sustained.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. I send to the desk an amendment which I propose, on page 45.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

For 12 additional assistant surgeons, $25,000.

And on page 46, line 16, it is proposed to change the total to conform to the increase, so that it will read: "$1,983,106."

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, this is an item which would, if adopted, add 12 assistant surgeons to the force of the Public Health Service. The item was estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury. It was not, however, included in the appropriation. I do not think it is subject to a point of order. The committee did add $25,000 on page 48, line 9, to the item of "Field investigations: For investigations of diseases of man, * * * including sanitation and sewage," and so forth.

I have talked over this matter with the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and he assures me that these physicians are very badly needed. Demands are being made upon that service from all over the country. I know that recently, in my own State, there was an outbreak of bubonic plague in the city of New Orleans. The Public Health Service was required to send a number of its best men there, and did magnificent work. I think it has completely stamped out that outbreak. There may be a very little of the disease among vermin and rats there yet; but certainly the disease itself among human beings is stamped out. He also assures me that very vigorous investigations are being carried on throughout the country in attacking trachoma in Kentucky, pellagra and malaria in the South, spotted fever in Montana and other Western States, and typhoid fever in the rural communities of many portions of the country. Indeed, he assures me that these physicians are very, very much needed; and as we are so liberal in making appropriations for many things, I believe we ought not to economize on the question of conserving our own health.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no one in this body feels more interested in the Public Health Service than myself. I want to see it grow and develop and become all that any American citizen could anticipate, but I do not believe this ought to be done at this time. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill carries thousands and thousands of dollars for the very purposes named by him. It was only just a little while ago that we increased our assistant surgeons general in this department by some 20, I think. I do not remember the exact number. I think there is no real necessity at this time for this increase in the number of assistant surgeons.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I am presenting this amendment as chairman of the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine. If I were not thoroughly convinced that it is needed, I assure the Senator I would not ask the Senate to adopt it. I have no interest on earth in it, but I firmly believe that we need these doctors. I have great confidence in Surg. Gen. Blue, and he has assured me that we need them now. He tells me that the Public Health Service honestly has more money than it has doctors to dispense the money. I would rather see some of these funds reduced and the additional doctors given to him in order that he may carry out the work effectively; and if that has to be done, I will not say a word; but he needs these doctors. He needs them in my section of the country. We have malaria down there. There is pellagra in many parts of the South. There is trachoma in Kentucky that has to be investigated. There is typhoid fever all over the United States, and in my country the efficiency of this service is remarkable.

Just one word about the yellow-fever outbreak that occurred there in 1905. We were almost in the slough of despond until we sent to this service, and they sent Dr. White down there, and he took charge; and if ever a general marshaled an army in magnificent manner, Dr. White, of the Public Health Service, did; and long before the cold weather came on we had eradicated that awful disease—yellow fever. The people of my section have the greatest confidence in this service. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all that the Senator says of the accomplishments of the Public Health Service is absolutely true, not only with the yellow fever in his own State but with other contagious diseases in other parts of the United States. The bubonic plague of California was handled in the same way. The Senate of the United States has never at any time hesitated to make liberal appropriations for this service; but this is the first time I have heard, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, that they are willing to reduce the appropriation in order that further assistant surgeons may be appointed. That proposition never was presented to the Appropriations Committee.

I will say to the Senator that this same proposition was presented to the House, and the House turned it down. It came over to us, and the subcommittee having the bill in charge decided not to put it into the bill. When the question was presented to the whole committee they voted against putting it into the bill, and I do not think it ought to be put into the bill at this time. Therefore I make the point of order that the amendment is obnoxious to the following rule:

No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

Mr. RANSDELL. Why, Mr. President, this was estimated for. The Secretary of the Treasury estimated it.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, it can not be existing law when it creates new positions.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not understand how it can be out of order. We have the service. We have this work going on, and we need these additional doctors. If we were creating some new service, of course it could not be done in this appropriation bill; but we have the service, and it is simply making effective the appropriations that we are already making in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the very amendment the Senator offers is for the creation of 12 new offices.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to have been proposed, in accordance with a statement in pursuance of an estimate of the head of the Treasury Department.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer the following amendment and I ask the attention of the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 13, insert:

Arkadelphia, Ark., post office, for completion, $55,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief explanation of this amendment, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to my amendment.

In 1910 the Treasury Department was authorized to procure a site for a post-office building at this place, Arkadelphia, Ark. A public-spirited citizen of that town donated the site, and the $5,000 authorized for that purpose reverted to the Treasury.

Subsequently, in order to advance the building, there being great necessity for it, an agreement or an understanding was entered into between the citizens of Arkadelphia and the Treasury Department whereby the plans for the proposed building were donated. These plans are ready and the work of construction may be commenced as soon as the necessary funds are available.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am, I think, familiar with this item. It is clearly an estimate, and I have no objection to its being put in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator from Virginia. I will not continue the statement unless some one indicates a disposition to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 17, strike out "$65,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$83,000."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the purpose for which I offer the amendment is to pay the architects of the Boston customhouse $18,000 in addition to the amount which has already been paid them for their services in constructing the customhouse. The architects, Messrs. Peabody and Stearns, have a contract with the Treasury Department to pay them 6 per cent of the cost of the construction of the building. The original appropriation was $1,800,000, of which $300,000 was set aside to pay for transferring the quarters and the operations of the customshouse to another building and for the rental of that building while the construction was under way. But the million and a half which was left of the original appropriation was not sufficient to construct the building, and therefore an additional appropriation of $300,000 was made for that purpose. The contract is perfectly plain that they are entitled to 6 per cent of the total cost of the construction of the building. The testimony before the House Committee on Appropriations is conclusive as to this understanding.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question? Has this been estimated for by the head of the department?

Mr. WEEKS. It has been estimated for in this way. Before the Committee on Appropriations of the House the supervising architect appeared and answered questions relating to this appropriation. He was asked this question by the chairman:

He asks for a commission on the amount above $1,500,000.

Mr. WENDEROTH. He is asking a commission on the difference between $1,500,000 and the actual expenditure. The latter will amount to about $1,725,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any recommendation to make?

Mr. WENDEROTH. I think it should be paid. You do not desire us to accept gratuitous personal services, but you are forcing us to do it in this case.

There is not any question about——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In the hope of saving time, if the Senator will excuse me, so that I may get it clearly in my mind, the architect had a contract for a 6 per cent commission.

Mr. WEEKS. Six per cent on the total.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. And there was an increase of cost in the building of $300,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. And they got the commission only on the original contract.

Mr. WEEKS. On the original contract.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This is to pay 6 per cent on the excess over the original appropriation.

Mr. WEEKS. That is it exactly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is not estimated for and it is not in order, but it is meritorious, and I shall not make a point of order against it, because I think the architects are entitled under their contract to the $18,000. So far as I am concerned I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 107, line 10, strike out the figures "$725,000" and insert "$934,000," so that if amended it will read:

Yuma project, Arizona-California: For maintenance, operation, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $934,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senate while I give the facts in this case. The irrigation fund is not a part of the general fund of the Treasury. It is set aside as a specific fund dedicated to a specific purpose. In order to get the extension of time for the payment under the irrigation project we were forced to accede to a House amendment requiring the irrigation fund to go before the regular Appropriation Committees of the House and Senate. I tried to defeat it; it ought never to have gone there; and this is a striking illustration of what it means to the western country as to the irrigation fund.

The estimate sent down is $934,000. I received a telegram to-day from the Water Users' Association of Yuma, telling me that a letter would follow immediately giving their reasons for the use of every dollar estimated for, and yet the House without any reason, as far as I can see in the debates, have cut it down to $725,000. In addition to that, there have never been such floods known since the white man has been in that country as have occurred this year. The Colorado River is now about to break its banks, and at this usually low season of the river sweep down across the city of Yuma and absolutely submerge the irrigation project.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, since he has offered the amendment I have looked up the matter with some accuracy and I find that the estimate was $934,000. The House committee cut it to $725,000, no doubt in the interest of economy, but I am perfectly willing to allow the amendment making it $934,000 to be adopted and let it go to conference; and unless there is some reason why it can not be retained, I will be glad to see it remain in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have often gotten into conference with these amendments, and I have found the chairman of the committee a friend to every measure that was proper; but I have always found him overruled when it goes to conference. I wish to know if it goes to conference, whether I can be permitted to appear before the conferees?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will guarantee that the Senator shall have that opportunity; but I speak guardedly as I do because Senators ought not to expect an item of this sort, if the issue is presented, to jeopardize or defeat the bill, when already the very liberal sum of $725,000 is provided.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am not going to delay the Senator a minute in passing the bill, but this shows the impropriety of ever putting in the ordinary Committee on Appropriations in either House the question of a specific fund for a specific purpose. It has nothing to do with general appropriations, it is not in the general fund, and men who never saw an irrigation ditch in their lives cut down the estimates $250,000 on the statement of some gentlemen who happened to come before the committee.

But I will close with this statement to the Senator. If I find from the letters I get, which are promised in the telegram received to-day, that I can not convince the Senator and the conference committee that the additional appropriation is needed, if I find it is not needed, I shall be very glad to consent to a reduction.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that I know of no reason why the full amount of $934,000 should not be appropriated; but I speak guardedly, because I know the difficulties encountered in conferences are frequently almost insurmountable. Senators do not understand that. We can not afford when as large a sum as $725,000 is appropriated to defeat a bill carrying $125,000,000 if such an ultimatum is presented to us. I will do my best in conference to retain it, and I am willing to have the amendment adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In answer, I will say that I see the allowance of $1,650,000 is given for an Idaho project. That is not cut very much; and $1,265,000 in a Texas project is not cut much; but this particular item was cut $250,000 or $300,000 without rhyme or reason.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I think nearly all those items have been cut more or less. I agree with the chairman of the committee that the amendment may go to conference and there be looked into.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is what I suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has just given $200,000 in view of the speech of the Senator from Arizona. I am willing to refrain from making a speech for a good deal less than that amount.

On page 103, line 25, I move to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$70,000." It is the appropriation for inquiries and investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of petroleum and natural gas, with a view to economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste, and to inquire into the economic conditions affecting the industry.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the estimate is only $50,000. If he will make it $50,000, I shall have no objection to the amendment. I can not agree that he shall exceed the estimate.

Mr. GORE. I appreciate the propriety and the wisdom of the Senator's position, and I will accept $50,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 103, line 25, strike out "$35,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

For inquiries and investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of petroleum and natural gas, with a view to economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting the industry, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 23, following line 16, I move to insert:

Willow, Cal.: For commencement, $20,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that that item is just like the one the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] presented a little while ago. The amount is under the estimate, and I see no reason why the amendment should not go in the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The estimate is $75,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am perfectly willing to have the amendment adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 71, at the end of line 22, insert as a new paragraph the following:

To begin the construction of two public bathing houses and the work of converting portions of the tidal basin in the Potomac Park into public bathing beaches, as outlined in Senate Document No. 593, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $50,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee, I think, has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Perhaps it is a little irregular, but I consider it so absolutely meritorious that, while I can not speak for the committee, I think the amendment is a good one, and I do not object to having it adopted, so far as I am concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading the letter of the Secretary of War, being the document referred to in the amendment which has just been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 5, 1914.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In compliance with Senate resolution of August 25 (calendar day, September 2), 1914, instructing the Secretary of War to report to the Senate regarding the practicability and cost of converting the tidal basin in Potomac Park into a public bathing beach, I have the honor to make the following report:

The establishment of bathing beaches in the tidal basin in Potomac Park is considered both practicable and desirable. It is a convenient and logical site, being located in Potomac Park, the improvement of the interior of which is being prosecuted by the office of public buildings and grounds, which office has under way extensive plans for the providing of recreation facilities for the use of the general public.

About one-third of the volume of water in the tidal basin is changed twice each day by the automatic operation of the tidal gates at the inlet and outlet to the basin, and the water in the Potomac River is believed to be of sufficient purity to prevent any injurious results following its use for bathing purposes.

It is proposed by the office of public buildings and grounds to erect two attractive permanent buildings, having tile walls, covered with stucco, and to be provided with tile roofs, to accommodate bathers, and also to be used as boathouses and refectories, and to construct sand beaches in front of these houses to provide bathing facilities for all ages and classes of bathers.

The estimated cost of the above-outlined project is as follows:

Beach for white bathers:
One building containing approximately 400,000 cubic feet	$100,000
Constructing beach 400 by 250 feet	10,000
Removing 400 feet of sea wall	3,000
Piers	15,000
Floats and equipment	5,000
Contingencies	6,650
Total	139,650
Beach for colored bathers:
One building containing approximately 140,000 cubic feet	35,000
Constructing beach 200 by 250 feet	5,000
Removing 200 feet of sea wall	7,500
Floats and equipment	2,500
Contingencies	2,500
Total	52,500

The buildings proposed to be erected will be substantial fireproof structures in keeping with the high standard of future projected park improvements, and the whole scheme can be so designed that its construction could cover a period of several years, making the part completed each year available for the use of bathers when completed.

Tentative plans and sketches are now being prepared in the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds covering the whole project, and will be submitted upon completion.

Very respectfully,
LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 17, page 5, insert the following:

Cleveland, Ohio, public building: For the installation of mail chutes, $800.

Mr. BURTON. That, Mr. President, is in pursuance of a statute passed on the 15th of September last. I think there can be no possible question in regard to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This seems to be a very small item, $800, I understand, for some mail chutes. It is not estimated for and it is irregular and such items ought not to be adopted, but as it is only $800 the Senate can dispose of it as it sees fit. I can not agree to it.

Mr. BURTON. This is not only in pursuance of the estimate, but there is an absolute statute passed here on the 15th of September last. I will read the statute:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to contract for and to have installed in the public building at Cleveland, Ohio, suitable mail chutes, and a sum not exceeding $800 is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Did the Senator read a statute?

Mr. BURTON. It is a bill reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The bill has simply been reported?

Mr. BURTON. And it passed both Houses.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator read from a statute of the United States?

Mr. BURTON Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will he please read it again?

Mr. BURTON. I want to explain that this has been pending two or three years. There is a great office building costing $3,230,000 containing the post office, the United States courts, the office of the United States district attorney, the United States marshal's office, and a number of other public offices, and they have no mail chutes in the building. The delay about it has been something very exasperating. The bill was introduced, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and reported favorably by that committee. After it passed the Senate it was taken to the House and reported there and passed. That is the statute:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to contract for and to have installed in the public building at Cleveland, Ohio, suitable mail chutes, and a sum not exceeding $800 is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

That sounds as if it were an appropriation, but it is necessary to carry it in the sundry civil appropriation bill in order to make it effective.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to put in the mail chutes at a cost not exceeding $800.

Mr. BURTON. Not exceeding $800.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Is there any evidence here or any estimate indicating that he did contract for them?

Mr. BURTON. I do not know whether there is an estimate or not. There is a statute of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will adhere to my former statement. I do not know that any harm will be done by the adoption of the amendment; but it is entirely irregular and out of order. The Senate can put it in if it sees fit. I have no sort of concern about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 45 after line 6.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, after line 6, insert the following:

Provided, That hereafter the Director of the Hygienic Laboratory shall receive the pay and allowance of an assistant surgeon general.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I merely want to say a few words in support of the amendment. It seems to me that in some of our appropriations and adjustments of salaries we have lost all sense of proportion. We have no trouble in appropriating to pay an assistant clerk of this body $5,000 a year, and yet we pay only $4,500 a year to the Director of the Hygienic Laboratory, which requires an eminent man, a man of great learning as a physician, as a scientist, as a pharmacist, and as a chemist. In this particular case we have a man who has made a national reputation and who is handling that great institution with wonderful ability. I was amazed when I heard that he got only $4,500 a year, while we pay the assistant surgeon general of the Public Health Service $5,000. This proposes an increase of only $500 a year, and it seems to me it is disgraceful for this Government not to allow it.

I happen to have personal knowledge that the man who now holds that position could get twice and, I believe, three times the salary from private institutions. Colleges want him; great institutions of learning want him; he has offers to go into private practice, where he could make twice or three times the amount of his present salary; but he prefers to stay with the Government, and probably will stay with the Government as a matter of duty for this niggardly salary of $4,500.

Merely as a recognition of this man, as a matter of justice, and in order to show that Congress has advanced a little and has some idea of proportion in fixing salaries, I hope there will be no objection to the amendment and that it will be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am compelled to make the point of order against this amendment that it is not estimated for. We can not go into the raising of salaries on the judgment which Senators may entertain as to the superiority of these distinguished men. If this man can earn ten or fifteen thousand dollars somewhere else, he is too big a man for this place, and he ought to give it up. We can get plenty of men for $4,500 who can conduct the business of this laboratory; but, be that as it may, this is a case not estimated for, and I think it would be a dangerous habit for us to get into to raise salaries in this way. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not estimated for.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, before the Chair decides upon the point of order, I wish to say that the Senator from Virginia is everything, in my judgment, that a Senator ought to be. He has had experience, he has the confidence of the people of his State, of this country, and of this body, and yet we find even a man of his experience and his judgment getting up here and making such an argument as he has made upon a proposition of this kind. You can get a man at $4,500 probably to begin with, but here is a man who has had the experience, here is a man of recognized ability, here is a man the Government needs. We ought to be proud to have such a man as he, who is versed in technical knowledge to such an extent as to make an honorable reputation for the great institution of which he is in charge.

Mr. President, this amendment is proposed for the purpose of carrying out existing law, for this position is already provided for. It is merely a question of fixing the salary. Whether or not it has been estimated for makes no difference. The law requires this officer, and the question is merely what his salary shall be. I do not think the point of order made by the Senator from Virginia is good.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to read the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to disagree with the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SHIVELY. Regular order!

Mr. CHILTON. One moment, Mr. President. The rule says:

> And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill * * * to add a new item of appropriation unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

As I understand the law, you must have this official, and you can not carry the law out without fixing the salary or without making the appropriation for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to disagree with the Senator from West Virginia. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, Mr. President, I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I will reserve the matter until some other time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Virginia, to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 15, it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

> For the construction of a permanent wagon-and-foot bridge across the creek at International Avenue, Nogales, Ariz., on land reserved by the United States for customs purposes, $10,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have offered this amendment under the head of "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," at the request of the mayor of Nogales, Ariz. In order to explain the necessity for this appropriation I desire to say that in order to facilitate the collection of customs duties in 1892 the International Boundary Commission made the following recommendation respecting the boundary at Nogales:

> That a reservation of not less than 50 feet in width be declared by the United States to extend along the entire length of the boundary on the American side, and that the Republic of Mexico be asked to declare a like reservation on the Mexican side, and that the erection of buildings on either side of the line within these limits be prohibited by law: Provided, however, That such reservation might be used for public streets or highways.

In 1897 the President, by proclamation, reserved a strip of land 60 feet wide by 2 miles long on the American side of the international boundary, a part of which was at that time covered with buildings. The buildings were torn down by direction of the Government in all cases where the occupants of the land did not remove them. I might add in this connection that the citizens of the United States who owned these buildings have never been compensated for the damages they sustained. They were occupying this ground under what everybody considered to be perfect title derived from a grant made by the Mexican Government. However, that has nothing to do with this appropriation, except to show that the United States has not been liberal in its treatment of the people of Nogales.

The mayor of Nogales writes as follows in regard to the necessity for this bridge:

> The Government has never spent one solitary dollar for improvements of any kind whatsoever upon said international strip. The town has kept up the streets and bridges of one sort or another upon said strip and the principal use of said bridge is for the benefit of the Customs Service, which is strictly a United States institution.
> The necessity for the bridge is very apparent, for the reason that there is a 16-foot wall the entire distance from the international boundary line to the first bridge, which the town erected in 1913, a distance of over 500 feet down the stream. You have proof of this through the recommendation of the collector at this port, showing the advantages of said bridge, who approved our petition.

The international strip was created for the convenience of the Customs Service in order that smuggling might better be prevented. A creek that heads in old Mexico crosses this strip at an angle, and when the creek is in flood it is impossible to pass from one part of the boundary strip to the other. For this reason the people of Nogales believe that there ought to be a bridge not only for their convenience, but in order to properly carry out the duties of the Customs Service at that port of entry. For these reasons I offer this amendment.

An estimate of cost has been prepared by the mayor of Nogales, who is an engineer by profession, for the construction of a bridge about 50 feet wide, including the necessary stone or concrete work to protect the banks of the creek from being washed away. Owing to a curve in the creek the bridge will be at an angle which makes the construction more expensive than it otherwise would be. I am satisfied, however, that everything that is necessary to be done can be accomplished within the sum that I have named in this amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is very painful to me to intervene and disappoint my friends in matters of this sort which so deeply concern them, but I must observe some equality in such cases. I have been making points of order wherever amendments were obnoxious to the rule, and I hope the Senator from Arizona will realize that I am responsible in such a way that I can not fail to interpose the point of order against his amendment. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, to follow line 13, on page 91.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

> To authorize the Secretary of the Senate to pay those officers and employees of the Senate borne on the roll known as the soldiers' roll, in accordance with the provisions of Senate resolution of July 14, 1911, and continue such persons on said roll who are now designated as "mail carriers," "folders," "skilled laborers," "policemen," or by other designation, but who are now serving as messengers in and about the doors of the Senate and performing service exactly similar to those performed by messengers whose compensation is $1,440 each per annum, a sum sufficient to make their compensation at the rate of $1,440 each per annum for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, $10,459, which amount shall be immediately available.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a few words in explanation of the amendment. A year ago I offered an amendment to an appropriation bill then pending to provide for the salary of these employees for that year. The Senate agreed to the amendment, but it went out in conference.

In 1893 there was appointed by the Senate a committee consisting of 15 Senators, Republicans and Democrats, for the purpose of considering the question of a soldiers' roll. That committee agreed upon the roll, and there were 13 employees put upon it. I learn now, Mr. President, that there are only four old soldiers who would really be affected by this amendment, as the four Democratic soldiers on the roll have not been reduced, while the salaries of the four Republican soldiers have been reduced to $840. The amendment simply provides that those employees shall receive $1,440, which is the amount they originally received when they were placed upon this special roll of the Senate. That is all there is to the amendment. I hope the Senator from Virginia will accept it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is impossible for me to accept the amendment. We can not give way to our feelings of generosity and appropriate money regardless of anything but our sympathies. I should like to see these old soldiers well cared for. They are all getting pensions, and they are all on the pay roll, being employees of the Senate and receiving salaries as such. Now comes the proposition that their salaries shall be increased and that we shall legislate them on a permanent roll. It is obnoxious to the rule in that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and it is obnoxious to the rule in that it proposes to increase an appropriation without a report from any committee at all. This matter has not been brought before the Senate from any standing committee of the Senate, and is plainly out of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that the amendment was offered and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; but I do not claim that it is in order if the Senator is going to make a point of order against it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I regret exceedingly to do so; it is very painful for me; but I feel in duty bound to make the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator does that, I wish to say that the same can be said of the four Democratic employees on this roll, who each receive $1,440, that can be said of the four Republican employees, who are only drawing $840 each per annum, and that is that they are all drawing pensions from the Government. So that the two classes are not differentiated in any way upon that ground.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It appeals to me very strongly; I feel as great an anxiety to provide for these old soldiers as does the Senator from Utah; but I feel bound, in the exercise of my duty as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had another amendment which I intended to offer, but I will not do so now, because I am fully aware that a point of order will lie against it. The amendment is for the relief of Prof. William H. H. Hart, and covers a claim which has been presented to Congress many times.

Mr. President, I have no doubt in the world that this poor man has been wronged and that there should be something given to him in the way of recompense. I am fully aware that perhaps the matter should go to the Committee on Claims and be acted upon there; but it has been referred to that committee a number of times and no action has been taken upon it. I will say further——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. Is there a bill in relation to the matter pending before the Committee on Claims now?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at this session of Congress.

Mr. BRYAN. Has one been introduced during the present Congress and sent to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think that such a bill has been referred to the Committee on Claims during the present Congress. I will say to the Senator, however, that on July 13, 1914, I introduced a resolution, being Senate resolution 416, directing the Committee on the District of Columbia "to investigate the statement of Prof. William H. H. Hart, principal of the Hart Farm School, and accompanying papers." With that resolution I submitted the papers to the committee for investigation. I have not heard anything from that resolution, and it was for that reason that I intended to offer the amendment to the appropriation bill; but, as I have said, I shall not now offer the amendment, because I know that it would only take the time of the Senate to make a point of order against it, and the point of order, I am quite sure, would lie.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 109, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

North canal unit of the Deschutes project, Oregon, as designated by the Secretary of the Interior, $450,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in reference to this proposed appropriation. It has been estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Reclamation Service, and, further than that, after the estimates were made, the Secretary of the Interior addressed a letter, first, to the committee of the House and then to the committee of the Senate, recommending the granting of the amount estimated for the carrying on of a vast reclamation project in Oregon.

Mr. President, Oregon has done as much as—and I should not hesitate to say more than—any State in the Union, with the possible exception of New York, in the way of cooperating in the plan of public improvements, not only in river and harbor work but in reclamation work as well. Within the past two years Oregon and the United States, by a joint agreement, each appropriated $50,000 for the purpose of investigating certain projects for reclamation work in that State. It was quite a task; it took a good while to do it. The two bodies were acting in conjunction and all of the money was spent, and yet it took some time afterwards to ascertain just what projects ought to be entered upon in the State.

The Legislature of Oregon two years ago appropriated $450,000 for reclamation work. It was supposed at that time that that would be used in cooperation with the General Government, and I believe that the State authorities believed in the bottom of their hearts that it was used cooperatively with the Government of the United States. At all events, it was used in reclamation work, and a splendid project which had been practically abandoned under the Carey Act was carried to completion at a reasonable expense.

Of late the State, through its public bodies, has insisted that the United States ought to appropriate $450,000 more, to be used in cooperation or in conjunction with the work which was done by the State, and which cost, as above stated, $450,000.

The Government officials, however, have insisted that, inasmuch as the money which was expended by the State was not expended for cooperative work, the State ought to appropriate $450,000 more, and then a recommendation would be made to the Congress of the United States to appropriate $450,000 more.

Mr. President, I want to say with reference to the amendment which I have suggested and which carries $450,000 for cooperative work that long ago, possibly six or eight months ago, before the taking effect of the act of Congress which required all future appropriations for reclamation work to be made by Congress—long before that law was put into effect the Secretary of the Interior appropriated that amount. In other words, he set aside $450,000 with which to carry on reclamation work in the State of Oregon in cooperation with the State. That appropriation was made by the Secretary of the Interior, and does not expire until the 30th day of June next. In view of that, we feel that the Congress will not be appropriating any money, as a matter of fact, but that the money has already been appropriated by the Secretary of the Interior, because he had full power to appropriate it when he took that action, and the money might remain in its present condition until the 30th of June; but under the new act it will be necessary to appropriate money after the 30th of June, and then it will be too late for Congress to act on the proposition now under consideration.

So much by way of a brief outline of the matter. I simply want to call the attention of Congress to the liberality with which all of these States have been treated at this session of Congress. Oregon is the second largest in the United States for appropriations to the reclamation fund. I do not like to take the time of the Senate to read what I am going to ask to have put in the RECORD—a statement of the amounts of money that have been received by each of the several public-land States and the moneys that have gone into the reclamation fund, including the estimated receipts by the Treasury of the United States on the 30th of June, 1914, not yet audited, the total estimated receipts to June 30, 1914, the allotments to June 30, 1914, for reclamation work, and finally the net investment to June 30, 1914. I take this table from page 218 of the hearings before the Appropriations Committee.

The table referred to is as follows:

RECEIPTS, ALLOTMENTS, AND INVESTMENT BY STATES.

The table following gives a statement of additions to the reclamation fund from the sale of public lands, by States, and also shows the amounts allotted and the net investment of the Government for irrigation work in each of the reclamation States:

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It appears from this table that Oregon, while it has been the second largest contributor to this fund of any of the States, has not received by any manner of means as much as has been received by States that contributed much less to the fund; and I hope the Congress will see fit to appropriate this money. It is possible that it might go out in conference; but I think we ought to have an opportunity to present it in conference. The appropriation was not allowed in the House of Representatives, as I understand, because the Secretary of the Interior had not adopted for Oregon any project, and the Secretary of the Interior had not at that time designated a practical irrigation project. He has since done so, however; and in the communication to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee a project has been adopted and selected by the Secretary of the Interior for work in case the appropriation is made. I do hope the Senate will allow this appropriation to stand.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the State of Oregon has been very liberally dealt with. There are two irrigation projects that have been provided for. For one of them this bill appropriates $366,000, and for the other one it appropriates $317,000. There is about $700,000 already appropriated by this bill for irrigation projects in the State of Oregon. The committee felt that in these times of an almost empty Treasury the State of Oregon could afford to wait a little while before it got its hand deeper into the Treasury.

I am very sorry that the Senator feels that he is bound to press the matter at this time. This is not the last Congress that we are going to have. There will be other opportunities. Really, the Treasury can not afford to take out these vast sums that do not seem to be very urgent or immediately necessary. The committee concluded that this $450,000 ought not to be appropriated at this time. If the Senate wants to appropriate it, it is within its province to do so, but I do not think it wise legislation. I do not think it ought to be done. I think we have done a great deal for the State of Oregon when we have given it about $700,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, as I said a while ago, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Oregon is not putting her hand into the Treasury. Oregon is only taking out a part of what she has put in, and a small part at that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has not Oregon refused to make the appropriation necessary in order to get this?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not yet.

Mr. OVERMAN. She did two years ago, did she not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No. I will tell the Senator what she did. The State of Oregon appropriated $450,000 and expended it under a mistaken apprehension that it was for cooperative work.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know; but did not they refuse to appropriate the money for this project, and have they appropriated the money necessary to get this money now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Have they appropriated it?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not any fear but that they will, as Oregon always does her duty fairly and squarely.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand she does her duty; but her legislature is in session now, and yet they have not responded to this, and unless they pass the bill we can not make the appropriation here.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator, in answer to that, that Oregon has been buncoed so often by the Congress of the United States that she is afraid to act until the Congress does something.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not know anything about Oregon; but your legislature having this very matter before it, and not having passed it, why should we put it in here now? When your legislature does pass it, I am in favor of the proposition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator need not have any fears about that. But the Senator diverted me from what I wanted to say. I was speaking of the liberality of the Congress to the various States; and I am not "knocking" any of these projects. I believe that all of them ought to be carried on, and upon a much larger scale than they are being carried on. It is the last remaining land for the homesteader in this country—the arid land of Oregon and other Western States.

Speaking of the liberality of Congress to Oregon, let me say to the chairman of the committee that here in the pending bill is a project, the Yakima project in Washington, for which you have appropriated $1,250,000, while you have been appropriating a few hundred thousand dollars for Oregon. For the Shoshone project in Wyoming there is $478,000 appropriated. For the Rio Grande project in this appropriation bill there is $1,265,000. In Arizona there has been appropriated more money than has ever been paid by that State from the sale of the public lands.

While I am not criticizing the committee for being liberal to these other projects, and I think they ought to be carried on, I do not want the Senator to say that Oregon, which has contributed more money to the reclamation fund than any State in the Union except one, is asking more than she ought to have when she is allowed a paltry three or four hundred thousand dollars in this bill. As I said, the Congress of the United States could well afford to appropriate the $450,000 I am asking for, for the simple reason that it is already appropriated, and if Congress wants to be square with us it will make the appropriation available because of the law which took effect at the last session of Congress, which now makes these appropriations necessary by Congress itself.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. When this matter was before the committee, as I understood the proposition, it was that the Government of the United States should appropriate half and the State of Oregon the other half. Is this item the same as the one that was presented there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is the same item.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator's amendment provide that this shall take effect only in the event that the State of Oregon makes an appropriation of a similar amount?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not believe the amendment I have suggested does.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will put that in I shall be very glad to support it, as I was glad to support it in the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall certainly be glad to do that, because if we do not do it in cooperation I feel that there is a disposition upon the part of Congress not to make the appropriation. As I said a while ago, Oregon has already expended $450,000 under the belief that it was expending it on a cooperative proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator whether that amount was not expended by the State of Oregon for the improvement of lands privately owned by its own people?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No, sir; and very little of this land that the Secretary of the Interior now proposes to irrigate is in private hands.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Oregon is spending all these millions of money, then, for lands owned by the United States Government?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no. The Senator is doubtless familiar with the Carey Act, which applies to lands in private ownership within projects where the State or the Government has large holdings. Some of it might be in private ownership.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is owned, then, either by the State or by private citizens? The United States owns very little land that will be benefited by these improvements?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does own much in this project.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was my information—that it was to a very slight extent beneficial to the lands in which the Government holds any interest. That is all the information I have.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that that is hardly correct. In some instances we have appropriated money for reclamation where there were lands in private ownership within the project, and much that was owned by the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But we have been told all along that the State of Oregon stood ready to put up a like sum, $450,000. Let her do that, and then let the Senator come here with his proposal.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think the Senator ought to insist on that, particularly——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is what the Senator has been telling me. His colleague appeared before the committee and said that the act might be passed any day; that they were going to do it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, it may be. The legislature will be in session for 30 days longer.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I would be willing to vote to appropriate $450,000 to equalize a similar amount appropriated by the State.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word at this point. I suggest to my colleague that he make the appropriation contingent upon the fact that the State of Oregon appropriates dollar for dollar.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suggest to the Senator that he make his appropriation contingent upon the United States making a similar one. Let him act first. He is the man that is asking for this.

Mr. LANE. I am not a member of the Oregon Legislature, but I am a Member of this body. I should like to do my share of it in this body.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have found that the State of Oregon gets very liberal treatment from this Congress. You can not take up any bill where there are any appropriations going where the activity and the ability of the Oregon Senators does not get all that is coming to them. It reminds me of the man that was on the witness stand, and the judge asked him if he was sure he had told the whole truth. He said, "Yes, Judge; and a leetle more." [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senators have always treated Oregon on that very basis.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. You will find that is so if you look at any of these bills. If you look at the river and harbor bill, you will see one item of $2,000,000. Take any bill that appropriates money, and the activity and the watchfulness and the zeal of the Senators from Oregon always secure for that State all that it is entitled to, and "a leetle more."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me ask the Senator this question, in all fairness: He and I are members of the Commerce Committee. I will ask the Senator if there is a single State in this Union that has put up as much money for river and harbor improvements as has the State of Oregon?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. She has been very liberal. She does very well, and she asks the Government of the United States to do a little better.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, she ought to, because the Columbia River carries the commerce of the world.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not criticizing or complaining. I voted for it, and I think it is right. I simply mean to say that Oregon has all that is coming to her and a little bit more; and we have given her, not two or three hundred thousand dollars, as the Senator stated just now, but over $700,000, in this bill. I suggest to the Senator that he should wait for another time and get it then. Do not get it all at once.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me ask the Senator, in all fairness, this question: The Senator says Oregon ought to go back and appropriate money for cooperative work. Has the Senator imposed that requirement upon a single other State in the Union?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think we have imposed it upon Oregon. Oregon imposed it upon herself. She came here with this proposition. Nobody asked her to make it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oregon imposed it upon herself, and she has always stood ready to carry it out.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Because she is the chief beneficiary; and the United States is being very liberal when, for the slight interest she has, she puts up half the money, when the State of Oregon and the people of Oregon own a great deal more than half the lands that are being irrigated.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am going to appeal to the generosity of the Senate in this matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is for the Senate to determine. I have no interest in it and no desire except simply to see that the matter is treated justly and equitably. I think Oregon can wait until next time; and in the meantime you can have the appropriation of $450,000 made by your own legislature.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask to modify my amendment so as to make it contingent, as has been suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that respect I want to say to the Senator from Oregon that if these are not private lands Oregon should not be compelled to pay a dollar.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know that; but they have always asked Oregon to do that, and she has never declined to do it, either.

Mr. SMOOT. I have never known any case where the State paid one-half of the amount for reclamation, unless there were private lands embraced in the project.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; that is true. I am going to say to the Senator that if this rule is applied to my State I am going to make the best fight that is in me to see that it is applied to every semiarid State in the Union. Why should it not be?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that if Oregon has paid half of the amount that has been spent in reclamation projects in the State of Oregon, she is the only State in the Union that has done so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. She did pay about $500,000.

Mr. LANE. She did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator is going to put the amendment in contingent form, dependent upon the action of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, so that I can vote for it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have just asked that that be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as now proposed.

The SECRETARY (reading)—

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended until the State of Oregon shall have appropriated a like sum for the like purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. "For the same purpose." It might be an appropriation for some other purpose.

The SECRETARY (reading)—

For the same purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those in favor of the amendment will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is adopted.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk an amendment which appropriates no additional money, and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 22, page 115, after the numerals "$75,000," it is proposed to insert:

Also, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expend out of the appropriation herein authorized for the repair of the road known as the Two Medicine Road from the main automobile road to the boundary line between the Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, $1,000; and also $1,000 for the repair of the Cut Bank Road from the main automobile road to the boundary line between the Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 102, line 20, after the word "use," it is proposed to insert:

And to recommend to the various departments such changes in selection and use of fuel as may result in greater economy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senate, and especially to the Senator from Virginia, that this provides for no addition to the appropriation. It is a suggestion that comes to me from the Bureau of Mines. They are making investigations with respect to economies in fuel, and I am informed that if they can convey their recommendations to the heads of departments it will work out a very great saving to the Government. I am assured that in the War Department alone it will result in a saving of $100,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is legislation on an appropriation bill and a plain violation of the rule; but I will not make any objection, in the interest of getting through with the bill. It can go to conference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It will be justified in conference if the conferees will listen to experts on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill by inserting, on page 128, after line 11, the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the Federal building at Billings, Mont., to be remodeled, altered, and improved so as to better fit said building for the accommodation of other branches of the public service, including the United States courts and the officials thereof; and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated therefor and made available out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MYERS. I want to explain that amendment very briefly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order that it is general legislation and has not been estimated for. I hope the Senator will not insist upon making an argument about a matter that can not possibly go on this bill if the rules of the Senate are to be respected. I make the point of order, and the Chair can dispose of it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, perhaps I should have stated why I desired to offer the amendment first and offered the amendment later. As long as I have the floor, I will simply say that in hope of getting the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the committee, to withdraw his point of order I——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I respectfully submit that I have a right to have the point of order ruled on. If this amendment is not in order, it ought not to be debated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must sustain the point of order, of course, if the statement of the Senator from Virginia is correct.

Mr. MYERS. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair, if the Chair please, and I wish to be heard for a few seconds on that appeal.

The Government has erected an adequate and very substantial public building at Billings, Mont., at a cost, I believe, of about $150,000. The third floor has never been completed, and it is eminently adapted to holding the Federal court. The Federal court for one division of the Montana business is held in Billings, Mont. As I say, this space is adequate for court purposes, but it has never been finished up for courts or for anything else. It is simply standing there vacant and idle, and the United States Government has to rent court quarters outside of the building, in other buildings in another part of the town. I do not see any economy in renting court quarters in other buildings when there is plenty of room here in our own building. In regard to that the Department of Justice wrote me a letter, in which it said:

> This building was authorized for post-office purposes only, and when the matter of permitting the court to occupy a portion thereof during its sittings was taken up with the Treasury Department it was ascertained that no appropriation was available for the expense of installing permanent benches, railings, etc., necessary for the average courtroom. Apparently it will take an act of Congress to furnish the necessary authority for using this building for court purposes, and possibly a special appropriation to cover the expense of fitting up the third floor.

The department recommends that I ask for legislation for that purpose. I consulted personally with the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and he said that $15,000 would be sufficient. I have a letter from the United States marshal of Montana advising me that the building could easily be fitted up for court purposes. I assure the chairman of the committee and Senators that some place is badly needed, and I am assured by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury that $15,000 will be sufficient.

I may say that I could not find the time to go before the Committee on Appropriations when it was considering the bill. I did not know when the committee was sitting, I had no notice of its meetings, and I failed to have an opportunity to appear before it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the decision of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the ruling of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in the absence of my colleague [Mr. PITTMAN] I wish to offer an amendment which he presented yesterday to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 109, line 3, strike out "$236,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$336,000," so as to read:

> Truckee-Carson project, Nevada: For maintenance, operation, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $336,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make a point of order against the amendment that there has been no estimate for it whatever. The only information we have is from the Senator. It has not been reported from any committee and there is no authority anywhere for it whatsoever, and no estimate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the point of order is sustained.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair, and would like to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is now debatable on an appeal.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the sundry civil appropriation bill contains appropriations for various reclamation projects payable out of the reclamation fund and not out of the General Treasury. Among the items is the following:

> Truckee-Carson project, Nevada: For maintenance, operation, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $236,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will the Senator excuse me just to call attention to the fact that the estimate here was $236,000 and the committee has given every dollar that was estimated?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that; but I state that any recommendation made by a department as to amount can be increased in amount or diminished by the Senate. Otherwise we change the department itself into the legislative body and make its estimates final and conclusive.

Recollect, there is no additional purpose for this appropriation put into the bill by this amendment, there is no additional subject matter, there is no change at all in the item. The question is simply as to the amount, and I propose to show that an increase of an amount estimated for by any department is the subject of an amendment, and that this increase ought to be granted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada to get an estimate, and when the deficiency bill is reported here next week, if he has the estimate, we can put it on. I ask him not to delay this bill by trying to put it on now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I stand here representing temporarily my colleague [Mr. PITTMAN], who is just informed that the Senate is considering this bill. He has presented this amendment, and he wishes to have an opportunity of presenting it. He is on his way to the Senate now, but I am afraid he may not get here before the conclusion of the bill.

Now, what is the fact with reference to this matter? The Interior Department is now considering it, and will by Monday determine whether it will recommend it.

I understand that the Reclamation Service has written a letter to the Secretary of the Interior recommending an increase of $100,000. The Secretary of the Interior is absent, and the matter is to be determined by the Assistant Secretary, and he is to render his decision on Monday upon the subject.

I hope to be able to convince the Senator that this amendment should not be ruled out.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let me suggest to the Senator that if this amendment is a meritorious one and ought to be provided for, it can easily be done on the deficiency appropriation bill. This is not the last appropriation bill that is coming before Congress. We are asked now to legislate on a letter from the United States marshal. That is the only statement which has come to us. Nobody knows what is necessary or how much will be required or anything about it, but if this is a meritorious proposition, as I told the Senator when he approached me first about it or in one of the conversations, he should get the amendment in shape and get it estimated for by the proper authority and get before the Senate the information that will enable it to legislate intelligently and justly, and if it is just it can be put on the deficiency appropriation bill. But the Senator is asking us to legislate here without any basis whatever to go on except the opinion of the United States marshal that this work ought to be done. That is the only document that has been referred to. We have given every dollar that the officers of the Government charged with this duty have asked us to give, and if it is a meritorious project, all the Senator has got to do is to get his material in shape and we will see that he has fair treatment, so far as the committee can give it, and I am sure the Senate will do the same on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am put under some embarrassment by the appeal made by the Senator from Virginia. I have received by telephone a request from my colleague that this matter should be held up until he can arrive. He will arrive very shortly and I am desirous of complying with his request. I believe this amendment is not subject to a point of order, and I hope that the Senate will, after discussion, reverse the ruling of the Chair. The point of order is made that this amount, the sum of $336,000, is not estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Nevada read the rules of the Senate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not very recently.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Vice President refer me to the rule?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule provides that—

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session;

or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The Senator from Virginia has given the estimate of the department. This is an appropriation to increase the amount in the bill. It has not been estimated for heretofore, it has never gone to a committee, and there can not be a doubt about the ruling of the Senate upon the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, Mr. President, I do hope that the Senator from Virginia will withdraw his point of order, because if this matter goes into conference and it is not followed up by an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior, we will not urge its retention in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is impossible for me to withdraw the point of order. I have pointed out to the Senator the only channel for him to pursue. If there is any merit in this proposition, he ought to be willing to have it presented with the proper fortification behind it from some department of the Government, and when the committee takes up the deficiency bill it can be considered. If he can not do that, it can certainly never have my support.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Chair in reading the rule has convinced me that the point of order was properly sustained. I made an appeal to the Senator from Virginia to withdraw the point of order and let this amendment go in, subject, of course, to its being backed up hereafter by an estimate, but he declines. I feel that I have done my full duty to my colleague in the matter and I withdraw my appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The appeal is withdrawn. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 20347, the Army appropriation bill, and then it can be laid aside until Monday morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. HARDY, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, and Mr. HINDS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6980) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7213) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7402) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2518. An act granting to the town of Nevadaville, Colo., the right to purchase certain lands for the protection of water supply;

S. 5629. An act for the relief of certain persons who made entry under the provisions of section 6, act of May 29, 1908; and

H. R. 20562. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PERKINS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of San Dimas, Cal., remonstrating against the exclusion of certain matter from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota and keeper of the great seal thereof, hereby certify that the attached is a true and correct copy of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, and the whole of such resolution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at the capitol, in the city of Bismarck, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

A concurrent resolution (McClellan).

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring), That—

Whereas there are now in the western part of North Dakota about 673,000 acres of rough, broken, and nonirrigable vacant Government land more suitable for grazing and stock raising than for any other purpose; and

Whereas the steady development of the West has been dependent upon and built up by actual settlers and homesteaders who came West for the purpose of finding homes for the support and maintenance of themselves and families; and

Whereas the occupation and settlement of these vacant lands will in time, through taxation and other sources, inure to the benefit of the counties and whole country in which said lands are located; and

Whereas practically all the agricultural lands in the third congressional district of the State of North Dakota have been selected and are now occupied by actual settlers; and

Whereas the balance of the unoccupied lands are quite rough and broken and consist mostly of what are commonly known as the Bad Lands, and principally valuable for stock raising; and

Whereas there is a shortage of beef throughout the land as a result of stock raising having been neglected for agricultural pursuits; and

Whereas the balance of this land, if assigned in proper quantities, will yet support hundreds of families; and

Whereas we believe an act can and should be passed by Congress which will grant each settler a sufficient acreage of said lands as will comfortably support a family by mixed farming and stock raising thereon, and which act might be drafted along the line of the 640-acre stock-raising homestead bill No. 15799, which was introduced during the second session of the Sixty-third Congress of the United States, and in which there is incorporated a classification clause which would leave absolutely no grounds for the act to monopolize lands coming under the 160-acre or 320-acre acts; and

Whereas it has come to our notice that a movement was on foot to have Congress pass a law to have said Government lands granted to the State for leasing purposes, and to also pass a national leasehold bill; and

Whereas we believe that such an act would be a crime and an outrage perpetrated upon the counties in which said lands are situated, and would deprive them of the actual settlers and families which they would otherwise get and would further deprive such counties of the assessable valuations and taxable property which they are entitled to and from which said counties would eventually realize an abundance of revenue by virtue of entrymen having their lands patented and homes built thereon for themselves and families and their children's children; and

Whereas there is not the incentive for families to build up valuable and permanent homes on rented land that there is on land they can call their own, and from which they would not have to be separated by virtue of the expiration of a lease; and

Whereas there are a number of the counties in which this land is located that are already too small in the area of their agricultural lands without robbing them of what is left, and this is especially true of Billings County, which has not any more taxable real estate than it needs for the running of their county government; and

Whereas we do not believe in heaping the burdens of taxation on the few who happen to own the agricultural land in such localities when the same can be reduced with the settlement of these vacant Government lands by homesteaders who are willing to share the burden of taxation in their community for the purpose of getting homes; and

Whereas we are heartily in favor of some act that will tend to improve said district and bring settlers who will make permanent homes therein, but that we are bitterly opposed to the submission of a national leasehold bill, or any act that will shut the lands out from actual homesteading, thereby curtailing and handicapping the development and upbuilding of said district: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring), That we transmit a copy of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in the National Congress, requesting and urging them to use all honorable means to see that the spirit of this resolution be put into execution as far as possible, and that any act which would tend to prevent the actual settlement of the lands above referred to, and which would deprive any county in said third congressional district of the full benefit of its lands through taxation or otherwise, be prevented: It is further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby authorized to transmit the foregoing resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of North Dakota.

A. P. HANSON,
Speaker of the House.
ALBERT N. WOLD,
Chief Clerk of the House.
J. H. FRAINE,
President of the Senate.
M. J. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,838.36 to pay Simon S. Preston, of Seattle, Wash., being the amount of the defalcation of D. C. Kearns, deputy collector of internal revenue, and which was repaid to the United States Government by Simon S. Preston, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 21546), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6980) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 5, 6, 7, 10, and 13, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 8, 9, and 12.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$24"; and the House agree to the same.

LANDS IN UTAH.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 7362) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain lands to the State of Utah and to accept relinquishment from the State of Utah of certain other lands in lieu thereof, and I submit a report (No. 1015) thereon. It is purely a local bill and a similar one has been reported in the House. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, at the end of the bill, to strike out the proviso and insert the following in lieu thereof:

Provided, That said patent shall not issue until the State of Utah shall have filed an unconditional relinquishment of all the lands covered by Utah segregation list No. 2, as well as a proper release of any interest or claim which the State of Utah may have or assert in or to the lands offered in exchange for those herein proposed to be patented.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior which is embodied in the report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 11, 1915.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to a request from the Committee on Public Lands I have the honor to submit the following report on S. 7362: The legislation proposes to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to patent to the State of Utah 4,197.31 acres of public lands which were segregated to the State under the Carey Act as a portion of Utah segregation list No. 2, comprising 48,226 acres, on February 1, 1908, in exchange for a like quantity of school lands, most of which is unsurveyed and within the limits of certain national forests.

Briefly stated, the facts pertinent to this matter, as shown by the records of the General Land Office, are as follows:

July 16, 1907, the State of Utah applied, under the Carey Act, for the segregation of 48,750.07 acres of public land. February 1, 1908, the then Secretary of the Interior approved said list for 48,226.74 acres. The waters relied upon for the reclamation of these lands were certain appropriations from the Beaver River. Subsequent to the segregation the State of Utah entered into a contract with the Beaver Irrigation, Land & Power Co. for the reclamation of said lands.

June 18, 1912, the State land board canceled its contract with the Beaver Irrigation Land & Power Co. because of the nonconstruction of the system, and subsequently said company failed and its equities were sold under the hammer for $500.

August 21, 1912, a Carey Act inspector of this department, reporting upon the project, stated that in his opinion the water applicable thereto was only sufficient for the proper irrigation of about 17,000 acres gross, which would be in the neighborhood of 12,000 to 14,000 net acres. Upon receipt of this report the department notified the State of Utah of the probable shortage of water for the project, and suggested the relinquishment thereof in view of the facts. April 9, 1913, the governor of Utah, in answer to said suggestion, notified the department that the State land board was considering other means of reclaiming the lands segregated and, by inference, indicated that the State would stand upon its legal rights pending a trial of the proposed new system.

On April 30, 1913, the Beaver County Irrigation Co. was incorporated with a capital stock of 15,000 shares, par value $1 per share, for the expressed purpose of irrigating certain lands, aggregating 15,000 acres, one share of stock being set aside for each acre of irrigable land, such project being known as the Milford project. Something over 4,000 acres of the lands segregated under the segregation list No. 2, supra, were included within the limits of the Milford project, leaving 11,000 acres of the project in private ownership or held under desert or homestead claims. Under date of January 13 and January 19, 1915, Mineral Inspector Julius Hornbein, of this department, rendered two very full reports upon said project, in connection with certain desert-land entries which relied for their water upon the Milford system. In brief, his reports showed that the Beaver County Irrigation Co. had proceeded in good faith to construct the Milford project and had completed its system in a good and workmanlike manner, at an estimated cost of $750,000; that in such construction no bonds were issued, the system being constructed entirely from the funds of the company; and that, so far as he was able to ascertain, all outstanding bills had been promptly paid. It appears from these reports that the company has obtained by purchase various water-right priorities in addition to the appropriations made for the benefit of the Carey Act segregation, which, all together, will furnish sufficient water to raise remunerative crops upon the 15,000 acres of land included in the project, although he expresses doubt as to the sufficiency of said water to raise diversified crops when the entire 15,000 acres is under cultivation.

It appears, therefore, that the State of Utah is in a position to request patent under the Carey Act for the 4,100 acres mentioned in the bill, and while in view of Mr. Hornbein's reports some question might be raised as to the sufficiency of the water as a basis for patent under the Carey Act, other data on file in the General Land Office in connection with the water supply would seem to indicate that Mr. Hornbein's report was perhaps a little too conservative, and that upon fuller consideration of the question a less duty of water than that recommended by Mr. Hornbein might be considered sufficient.

It is the contention of the Beaver County Irrigation Co., however, that it has fully completed its system with its own funds; that it has sold nearly all of the water appurtenant to the 11,000 acres of privately owned land, and that it has entered into contracts for the sale of the Carey Act land; that it did not enter into such contracts until it had been assured by the State land board that the State of Utah could and would relinquish the 4,000 acres of Carey Act lands and select them as State indemnity; that the company, fully relying upon such statements, proceeded in good faith to contract for the sale of water appurtenant to the 4,000 acres of Carey Act land mentioned in the bill; that subsequently the State did file indemnity school selection lists, accompanied by Carey Act relinquishments, for said lands, which lists were rejected by the General Land Office upon the ground that a relinquishment from a Carey Act segregation did not take effect until its acceptance and approval by the department, and hence that until such acceptance the land remained as effectually segregated as though the relinquishment had not been filed and was not subject to selection by the State as indemnity school land or to any other form of appropriation.

Under the former practice of the department it was usual to accept relinquishments by the State of lands within Carey Act projects as a matter of course, and to direct the acceptance of applications filed with such relinquishments. The present practice upon receipt of such relinquishments is to accept them and restore the lands to settlement 28 days after the date of the receipt of the letter of acceptance in the local office and to entry 56 days subsequent to such receipt, thus giving public notice of the restoration and equal opportunity to all.

The contention of the company is corroborated by the State land board. The rejected State lists are now on appeal before the department. As to the lands for which the bill proposes to direct a patent to issue, it may be said that they are all included in Utah segregation list No. 2 and appear to be subject to the disposition proposed by the bill. As to the base land, it is unsurveyed and lies within the boundaries of a national forest. Much land in like circumstances has been used in the past as basis for indemnity school land selections without question as to its validity.

In view of the decisions in Hibberd v. Slack (84 Fed., 571), State v. Whitney et ux. (120 Pac., 116), Balderston v. Bradey et al. (107 Pac., 493, and 108 Pac., 742) and Deseret Water and Irrigating Cos. (138 Pac., 891) this department is, for the time being, abstaining from action for the approval and certification of all lists of State school land indemnity selections based, as are these here considered, on the exchange provisions of the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat., 796), amending sections 2275 and 2276, United States Revised Statutes, the provisions of said act having been made applicable to the State of Utah by the act of May 3, 1902 (32 Stat., 188).

The object of this is to permit a full and adequate inquiry relative to the state of the law bearing on the validity of such selections, as that law may be established or influenced by the decisions above cited and by the statutory and constitutional provisions in force in the several States by which said selections have been made and upon which these decisions are supposed to rest. It is not by any means certain, however, that anything involved in that inquiry necessarily questions the validity of selections made by Utah. The purpose has been and is rather to ascertain and define what legislation, if any, may be essential or advisable to provide adequate security for the titles secured by the States by means of these selections, and also proper protection for the title of the United States to lands surrendered as bases for these selections.

From the best information obtainable the following financial statement of the company's affairs is presented:

	Acres.
Land privately owned	7,000
Desert-land entries	4,000
Carey Act land (mentioned in the bill)	4,000
Total	15,000

Privately owned land, to wit, that owned or controlled by the company, is being sold for $100 per acre, including water rights. Water appurtenant to lands held under desert-land or homestead entry is being sold for $70 per acre. The 4,000 acres of Carey Act land, if patented under the Carey Act and not under this bill, would be subject to such charge for water only as might be agreed upon between the Beaver Co. and the State land board, which, in the light of present contracts with homestead and desert-land entrymen, should not exceed $70 per acre, while if the lands were patented to the State pursuant to the proposed legislation it would sell to the settler, including water rights, for $100 per acre.

The gross income of the company on account of sale of land and water rights if the lands provided for in the bill were patented under the Carey Act, therefore, would appear to be about as follows:

7,000 acres, at $100 per acre	$700,000
8,000 acres, at $70 per acre	560,000
Total gross income	1,260,000

It would appear further that if this bill passes, and the 4,000 acres of Carey Act land is deeded to the State, the company will realize, after paying for its scrip, about $20 per acre more than if it were patented under the Carey Act, viz, $80,000, making the gross receipts $1,340,000. The cost of the project completed, colonized, and disposed of may be summarized as follows:

Cost of construction, including overhead charges	$750,000
Cost of colonization	100,000
Two years' lost interest on the amount invested, at 6 per cent	90,000
Value of privately owned land (7,000 acres) at $5 per acre (rough estimate)	35,000
Incidental expenses	15,000
Total	1,000,000

Assuming, therefore, the total cost of the enterprise when turned over to the settler to be $1,000,000, the apparent profit in case the lands were patented under the Carey Act would be $260,000. In case this bill passes, the profit would be increased to $340,000. Taking into consideration the three or four years' preliminary work by the investors, together with the risks and unforeseen contingent expenses incident to a venture of this character, it does not appear to me that the prospective profit is abnormally large.

Considering all the facts shown by the record, I may, perhaps, summarize the case as follows:

As against the passage of the bill—

It appears to be an attempt to circumvent the provisions of the Carey Act.

It appears that if passed the bill would make it possible for the company to charge the settler about $25 per acre more for the 4,000 acres included in this bill than if it were patented under the Carey Act.

It might be contended that if these lands were patented under the Carey Act the estimated profit as hereinbefore set forth is sufficient.

On the other hand, it may be said in favor of the passage of the bill—

That the Government will receive as indemnity 4,100 acres which it would not receive were the lands patented under the Carey Act.

That the Beaver Co. has actually constructed its system and placed the lands sought to be patented in condition for immediate reclamation.

That nothing in the record shows that they have not proceeded throughout in good faith.

That if the State applies for patent and it is refused, after further consideration of the water supply, the company would probably be the loser.

That unless the questions involved, in case the State applies for patent under the Carey Act, can be settled and patent issued before next spring, the lands involved could not be cultivated and a year's time would thus be lost, involving the proportionate additional interest on the cost of the project, loss of taxable valuation, and crops.

That besides the losses to the company hereinbefore enumerated it would be compelled to abrogate whatever contracts it has for the sale of the lands mentioned in the bill, entailing possible legal consequences resultant to a forfeited contract.

While, as a general rule, I believe that legislation of this character should not be encouraged, yet in view of all the facts and circumstances in this particular case, as hereinbefore set forth, I am unable to conclude that this proposed legislation is not justified, and for that reason will offer no objection.

In any event, if Congress should determine that the legislation is proper, the proviso, beginning on line 6, page 7, should be amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That said patent shall not issue until the State of Utah shall have filed an unconditional relinquishment of all the lands covered by Utah segregation list No. 2, as well as a proper release of any interest or claim which the State of Utah may have or assert in or to the lands offered in exchange for those herein proposed to be patented."

It is deemed proper that the State be required to relinquish its entire segregation list, for the reason that all of the waters upon which the segregation was predicated will be required by and are to be used for the Milford project, leaving no available water for the 44,000 acres which would be left in the segregation after patenting the lands mentioned in this bill. This statement is acquiesced in by the State engineer, the various engineers of the Beaver Co., and the inspectors of this department. There appears, therefore, no excuse for continuing this land in a state of segregation. It should be opened up to homestead entry and other forms of disposal at once.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 20, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, our Father in heaven, in spite of the untoward circumstances of life, its sorrows, disappointments, and the untold miseries growing out of the awful war in Europe, its brutalizing and barbaric effects, strengthen our arm of faith and help us to believe that out of it all shall come to humanity a larger, nobler, grander life, a peace world-wide, that shall unite all peoples of all climes into one great brotherhood that shall make peace stronger than war and good the ruling passion of mankind.

That nothing walks with aimless feet,
That not one life shall be destroyed
Or cast as rubbish to the wind,
When God hath made the pile complete.
Behold, we know not anything;
We can but trust that good shall fall
At last—far off at last—to all,
And every winter change to spring.

For Thou art God, and Thou art good. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, on the day before yesterday I stated that there was a surplus of $7,658,572.87 from the $169,000,000 appropriation for pensions for the current year. This was a slip of the tongue. That surplus was from the $180,000,000 appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914. I ask to make that correction, and to place in the RECORD a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions calling attention to it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman will be granted.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, February 19, 1915.

Hon. CHARLES L. BARTLETT,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BARTLETT: I call your attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, dated February 18, 1915, page 4064, in which you are made to say that there was a surplus of $7,658,572.87 from the $169,000,000 appropriation.

This is an error. That surplus was from the $180,000,000 appropriation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914. The $169,000,000 appropriation is for the current year ending June 30, 1915.

This is an important matter, and I think this correction ought to be presented to Congress and made to appear in the RECORD.

You will notice on page 1 of the hearings before your committee, December 16, 1914, the statement that there was $180,000,000 appropriated, and from that there was a surplus left of $7,658,572.87. At the bottom of that page and at the beginning of the next page is a very careful statement of just how this exact sum was arrived at.

Thanking you for your attention to this matter, I am,

Very respectfully,

G. M. SALTZGABER, Commissioner.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17982. An act to make Nyando, N. Y., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2335. An act to provide for the register and enrollment of vessels built in foreign countries when such vessels have been wrecked on the coasts of the United States or her possessions or adjacent waters and salved by American citizens and repaired in American shipyards.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 6980) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1427).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6980) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 5, 6, 7, 10, and 13, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 8, 9, and 12.

Amendment numbered 11: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$24"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment No. 13: Senate concurs. The rate proposed is justified by the evidence and soldier's rank.

Amendment No. 14: House recedes. The proposed increase of pension is fully justified by soldier's long service and his present physical condition.

Amendment No. 15: House recedes. The circumstances in this case warrant proposed increase.

Amendment No. 16: House recedes. The evidence on file justifies proposed pension.

The conference report was agreed to.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, LAREDO, TEX.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 672.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives all papers or copies thereof and all facts in his possession with reference to the conduct of the collector of customs of the Laredo district, in the State of Texas, as shown by all reports and papers received at the Treasury Department since January 1, 1914; also the number of days said collector has been absent from his duties since said date.

The resolution was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, with Mr. LINTHICUM in the chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, last evening the committee had under discussion the item on page 20 appropriating $493,000 for clerk hire, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was discussing this item, and I gathered from his remarks that he did not entirely approve of it.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is one of the most indefatigable Members that we have in the House. There is hardly anyone who gives us more information or who studies these bills more carefully. And yet I have had just a suspicion that the gentleman from Wisconsin in discussing this item did not fully grasp the Democratic methods of administering the Consular Service. He objects because there is something like $113,000 added to this item, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State. Why should my friend from Wisconsin be astonished at that? Has not the Secretary of State himself announced that it is necessary to find positions for the effective campaign workers? And how, let me ask our friend from Wisconsin, could we better assist him in that laudable enterprise than by adding $113,000 to this item, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, in order that deserving campaign workers can be rewarded?

Mr. ANDERSON. Are we to understand that the gentleman thinks it better to employ these Democrats outside of the United States?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think there might be some benefit in that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In a moment. Does my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] realize, as the Secretary of State has stated, how important it is and how difficult it is to find places for deserving campaign workers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know of any question pending before the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will move to strike out the last word, but I was speaking in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. I suppose the gentleman knows that these employees are all under the civil service——

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. COX. Well, wait, or else get up and make your objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. No; I will not. Does the gentleman object to sending American employees and American clerks abroad, or would he rather the State Department would hire foreign employees to do this work?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was going to suggest how this money might be properly expended by the Secretary of State in order that this extremely desirable purpose might be carried out. Something like a year ago we had in the city of Council Bluffs an election. At the close of the election a number of citizens sought the Democratic headquarters in the town and presented certain slips of paper, which purported to state that they had been working through the day for the benefit of the Democratic Party. Upon the presentation of these certificates they received the sum of $2 each for the day. There were unkind and uncharitable persons in the vicinity who said that they had not been working for the party, but had simply sold their votes; but I do not care to discuss that matter at this time, knowing, as we do, from the distinguished Secretary how valuable the services of party workers may be. If they had been at work for the Democratic Party at the extremely small price of $2 a day, I judge, from the statement of the Secretary of State, that would not be a sufficient reward for them to receive. I would suggest also that a very large reward ought to be obtained out of the sum we are appropriating for the parties who managed to hire them to work for the Democratic Party on that occasion at this rate.

Gentlemen can see how important this is that we should increase these appropriations for the purpose of recompensing the services of party workers and provide money which would be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, no matter if we do face a deficit in the Treasury, no matter if we are short of funds and that the shortage is constantly increasing. The gentleman from Wisconsin can hardly expect under the circumstances that the appropriation will be reduced.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Do I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] offered an amendment to strike out the increase?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I moved to strike out the last figure, which is a cipher.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in reference to this increase I desire to say that the committee deemed it necessary and the department deemed it necessary. I note what the gentleman from Iowa says about the Secretary of State and the letter he wrote to Mr. Vick in reference to deserving Democrats. It but illustrates the weakness of the arguments that the Republican partisans can make against the present administration, particularly the Secretary of State. That is a matter that is continually alluded to in this House by this gentleman. If that is all that can be brought against the Democratic administration or the Secretary of State, if that class of arguments is all the gentleman can suggest to the discredit of this administration, the nominee of the Republican Party in 1916 will carry fewer States even than the nominee carried in 1912. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This item was recommended not only by the Secretary of State, but by an official of the State Department who has been there for at least three or four administrations. The head of the Consular Bureau in the State Department is a gentleman who has been in the service of that department for quite a number of years—I do not recall how many, but certainly he was there under President Roosevelt and under President Taft. He is a Republican in politics, and notwithstanding his political affiliations he is a most efficient official. I want to read to those gentlemen who are trying to make political capital out of the effort of the department to give the country a chance to embrace the splendid opportunities it now has and what this gentleman says about the increase. I refer to Mr. Wilbur J. Carr:

> The demands on the Consular Service even before this war began had very greatly increased. Our business men are taking a great deal more interest in foreign trade and the Department of Commerce is increasing its activities and thereby increasing the demands on our consuls for commercial information and assistance. Almost every session of Congress enacts new legislation which imposes some new duty upon the Consular Service. The last tariff act, for example, imposed upon the Consular Service the duty of doing a lot of statistical work which had not before been required, and all of that necessitates a great deal of clerical work.

I want to say that most of these are Republicans, men who were put into the Consular Service before the consular reorganization act went into effect, and they were covered in as civil-service employees of this Government. Mr. Carr continues:

> When we made our allotments beginning on the 1st of July of the current year we denied requests from our consuls for increased assistance amounting to over $74,000 which we did not have the money to meet. There are other offices that we know of where we would like to get certain work done, which would cost probably $30,000 or $40,000 more. The sum total of our requests and the needs as we see them in the service under normal conditions is about $117,000 for clerical assistance.

Then he goes on to strongly advocate this in the commercial interests of the country, and the Secretary of State did so for the same reason.

I know nothing of the political corruption of the State of the gentleman from Iowa, but if he says it is corrupt I do not take issue with him. I know in our State, which is Democratic, we have no such condition as that. I want to say that if we do want to reward deserving Democrats and undeserving Republicans, we want to get Americans in these offices, men who are American citizens and who will look strictly after the interests of the American people and the American Government, and we want to pay them a decent salary.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether any Member on the other side of the aisle has offered a motion to strike this increase from the bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; I asked the gentleman from Wisconsin if he did and he said no.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moved to strike out the last cipher, which would reduce the amount.

Mr. ADAIR. What I desire to know is if the gentleman from Wisconsin insists on his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdrew his amendment on yesterday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; I did not withdraw my amendment yesterday.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, the point I desire to make is this: I listened yesterday afternoon to my good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. He did not exactly discuss the question. We all understood of course that what he said was for political purposes. I was inclined to believe that the gentleman was not sincere at the time he was discussing the matter, but that the statements he was making were made purely for political purposes. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Wisconsin prefers the employment of Americans rather than foreigners, and that the only purpose he had in saying what he did last evening was to lead the country to believe this administration was seeking to increase the pay roll for the benefit of Democratic workers. Let that be as it may, I think we all agree that it is much better to employ Americans in doing this service for the Government than foreigners, and I am sure before this matter is closed the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw his amendment, which will be sufficient evidence to all of us that his purpose in making the remarks he did was purely political, and that he had really no criticism to make of the merits of the proposition contained in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, whenever anyone on this side of the House proposes to reduce an appropriation some distinguished gentleman, like the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR], who has just addressed the House, says it is for political purposes. The gentleman from Indiana, who has never been noted as an economist, thinks that any proposition to keep us from squandering money out of the Treasury is for political purposes, and I do not doubt it from his viewpoint.

May I ask the gentleman from Virginia a few questions in reference to the item? There is an increase in the item for clerk hire at consulates of more than $100,000.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], in charge of the bill, has indicated first that the purpose is to place American clerks in the consulates instead of clerks of foreign nationalities, and also for the purpose of giving our business interests more advantages in the way of information from abroad. We are maintaining under the Department of Commerce, I will not say an expensive establishment because I do not think it is expensive, but one that has very largely increased in the last few years, for the purpose of maintaining commercial attachés abroad to obtain this very information. How far is it intended to duplicate this work, may I ask? A few years ago it was indicated that the consuls were not intended to do the commercial work abroad, except such as comes within the scope of their work as consuls. There was considerable discussion about that, and there has been more or less rivalry all of the time between the Department of Commerce and the Department of State in reference to this work.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is no purpose on the part of the State Department to duplicate this work, and

I do not believe there is much danger of duplication, because the activities of the Department of Commerce are necessarily limited by the small number of attachés which they have for this work, and those they have will cooperate with the consuls in the places to which they are sent, and the work will not be a duplication, but will be an aid to the consul.

Mr. MANN. Is this increase in the main, as the gentleman understands it, for the purpose of employing American citizens as clerks instead of citizens of foreign nationalities or is it designed also to increase the number of clerks or the salaries of clerks now in the service?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is for all three purposes. It is to eliminate the foreign clerks who get a very much smaller salary than we could get American clerks for, and that will necessitate an increase in the pay of the individual clerks, and also it is designed for the purpose of giving more clerical assistance to the consuls; more than they have now, so that it is for all three purposes—to eliminate foreigners, to increase the salaries of clerks, and to increase the number of clerks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I am not particularly in sympathy with the idea that all of the clerks in consulates abroad shall be American citizens. I have not any doubt at all that in many places a consul can employ a foreigner as a clerk at $600 a year who will be worth three times as much as an American clerk sent from here over there would be worth, to whom we would have to pay twelve or fifteen hundred dollars a year. The foreigner not only talks the language, but he understands the situation locally, which the American clerk sent from here would not, although he may in a way talk the language.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New York. In some cases these clerks act as vice consuls, and in the absence of the consul they act as consul. That makes it imperative, does it not, that they shall be Americans?

Mr. MANN. No; it does not. There are lots of consuls in the United States of foreign countries who are American citizens. It is a purely business proposition. These men have no diplomatic duties to perform.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Still, the gentleman recalls that it has been the policy of Congress, beginning back eight or nine years ago, to have American clerks in the consulates?

Mr. MANN. I think not. I think the very fact that this year you raised the appropriation from $375,000 to $493,000 for this purpose shows that it has not been the policy of Congress heretofore. I know there has been discussion about it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. But they have heretofore raised this very appropriation for that very purpose, and the work has been going on. The foreign clerks have been gotten rid of to some extent and Americans substituted in their places.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And in a number of instances we have increased the appropriations for that purpose. This is to continue that work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What is the motion before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion pending is to strike out the last word, offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That would make this appropriation $49,300 instead of $493,000.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending before the House, to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to this fact, which I think ought to go in the RECORD—that is, that the cost of this Consular Service to the Government is not anything like what you would naturally suppose it to be without having the full information which is given in House Document 1259, and I quote from page 54:

Expended for the maintenance of the Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, $2,083,908.42. Less fees collected and deposited in the Treasury (statement No. 10), $2,040,234.42—

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. Wait until I finish the statement—leaving a balance of $43,674.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. In line with the figures which the gentleman gave, can the gentleman give the total appropriations that are carried in this bill? I notice in some items there is a reappropriation of balances running back to the end of time. Will the gentleman give us the actual amount of appropriations carried in this bill?

Mr. CLINE. I think the gentleman can be furnished with that information if he will designate the particular items.

Mr. STAFFORD. I mean the total appropriations carried in the bill. The report does not give it; the report only gives the total amounts carried, and yet in many items we find appropriations stating that the appropriations available for prior years shall be utilizable for these items. We have nothing presented as to the real amount of appropriations carried in the bill.

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman that that policy has been largely curtailed by the committee at this session, and I think it will be completely curtailed hereafter. For illustration, in the Canadian boundary there was an unexpended balance of $51,000; that, together with $40,000 carried in this present bill, makes $91,000, and the expenditure last year was $93,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. So I understand it is to be the policy of the committee hereafter that they will desist from the practice of making available all the unexpended balances and will appropriate only the various amounts specifically needed.

Mr. CLINE. The policy hereafter, as I understand it, would be to let these unexpended balances go back into the Treasury and appropriate definite amounts.

Mr. STAFFORD. I certainly approve of that policy, because as it is no one knows definitely the amount that is being appropriated.

Mr. CLINE. I desire to call attention to another fact. We are in favor of putting American secretaries with the Consular Service, for the reason that it has been demonstrated by Germany in the South American trade that the most efficient means to build up German trade in South American countries was the employment of trained men exclusively for that service. A competent American secretary who knows our business, our method of manufacture, our resources in manufacture, and has a personal and rational interest in our business, who is able to speak of the quality of our goods is much more efficient in the service than is the foreigner in introducing those goods; and that is particularly true of this kind of service from the fact that we are always reaching out and developing all the industries of this country as largely as possible to increase our foreign trade, and that is one of the efficient ways in which we think we can increase that business.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in opposition to this amendment along the line suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE], who has just taken his seat. Now, if it is true that the employment of American labor will increase our foreign trade, I am in favor of it. I think my distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is mistaken in arguing that there is no necessity for this increased appropriation. The chairman of the committee has told you it is for the purpose of increasing our foreign trade. Well, if there is anything that will increase that trade, we ought to have it. Prior to the time of the war in Europe we were losing our foreign trade at the rate of a million dollars every day. Seven months prior to the war in Europe we lost our foreign trade to the extent of over $248,000,000. Now, if this appropriation is going to increase our foreign trade, then we ought to make the increased appropriation. Gentlemen over on the other side have cited the case of South America. Last October Argentina increased her trade with us over 400 per cent. We have lost in our foreign trade with every nation of the earth under this administration up until the time of the war in Europe, and if this money is to be expended for the purpose of increasing our foreign trade, then everybody ought to be in favor of it.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. Did not the gentleman state upon this floor a few days ago that in the month of December of this year we actually exported more American products than ever before in a month of December?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know whether I did or not, but I think that is true.

Mr. ADAIR. Then our foreign trade is not going to the bad so fast, then?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I said prior to the war. Of course the war increased our exports, but, notwithstanding the war, the imports from England since this war commenced increased during the month of October over 26 per cent. There is no nation on the face of the earth to-day, except those engaged in that great contest, but what our trade has decreased with them, every one of them. It has changed to some extent in our exports since the war came. While we all regret that great contest, yet it has benefited us industrially. As I said awhile ago, I hope my friend from Wisconsin will not object, because if this is going to increase our foreign trade everybody ought to be for it. During the first 10 months the Underwood law was upon the statute books Canada increased her trade with us 15 per cent. We lost in our trade with her 35 per cent. So the increase in 10 months after this present law went upon the statute books, with the best customer we have upon the face of the earth to-day, was 50 per cent in favor of the foreigner; so if this increase in appropriations will increase our foreign trade I think every man ought to vote for it.

As bearing on our foreign trade, I call attention to the following statement taken from the letter of the British secretary of state for foreign affairs to the American ambassador, under date of February 10, 1915:

Taking the figures in millions of dollars, the exports of merchandise from the United States for the seven months of January to July, 1914, inclusive, were 1,201, as compared with 1,327 in the corresponding months of 1913, a drop of $126,000,000.

For the months of August, September, October, and November—that is to say, for the four months of the war preceding the delivery of Your Excellency's note—the figures of the exports of merchandise were—again in millions of dollars—667, as compared with 923 in the corresponding months of 1913, a drop of $246,000,000.

If, however, the single article of cotton be eliminated from the comparison, the figures show a very different result. Thus the exports of all articles of merchandise other than cotton from the United States during the first seven months of 1914 were $966,000,000, as against $1,127,000,000 in 1913, a drop of $161,000,000, or 14½ per cent. On the other hand, the exports of the same articles during the months of August and November amounted to $608,000,000, as compared with $630,000,000 in 1913, a drop of $22,000,000, or less than 4 per cent.

It is therefore clear that, if cotton be excluded, the effect of the war has been not to increase but practically to arrest the decline of American exports which was in progress earlier in the year. In fact, any decrease in American exports which is attributed to the war is essentially due to cotton. Cotton is an article which can not possibly have been affected by the exercise of our belligerent rights, for, as Your Excellency is aware, it has not been declared by His Majesty's Government to be contraband of war, and the rules under which we are at present conducting our belligerent operations give us no power in the absence of a blockade to seize or interfere with it when on its way to a belligerent country in neutral ships. Consequently no cotton has been touched.

Into the causes of the decrease in the exports of cotton I do not feel that there is any need for me to enter, because, whatever may have been the cause, it is not to be found in the exercise of the belligerent rights of visitation, search, and capture, or in our general right when at war to intercept the contraband trade of our enemy. Imports of cotton to the United Kingdom fell as heavily as those to other countries. No place felt the outbreak of war more acutely than the cotton districts of Lancashire, where for a time an immense number of spindles were idle. Though this condition has now to a large extent passed away, the consumption of the raw material in Great Britain was temporarily much diminished. The same is no doubt true of France.

The general result is to show convincingly that the naval operations of Great Britain are not the cause of any diminution in the volume of American exports, and that if the commerce of the United States is in the unfavorable condition which Your Excellency describes, the cause ought in fairness to be sought elsewhere than in the activities of His Majesty's naval forces.

I may add that the circular issued by the Department of Commerce at Washington on the 23d January admits a marked improvement in the foreign trade of the United States of America, which we have noted with great satisfaction. The first paragraph of the circular is worth quoting verbatim:

"A marked improvement in our foreign trade is indicated by the latest reports issued by the Department of Commerce through its Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, sales of foodstuffs and certain lines of manufactures having been unusually large in November, the latest period for which detailed information is at hand. In that month exports aggregated $206,000,000, or double the total for August last, when, by reason of the outbreak of war, our foreign trade fell to the lowest level reached in many years. In December there was further improvement, the month's exports being valued at $246,000,000, compared with $233,000,000 in December, 1913, and within $4,000,000 of the high record established in December, 1912."

A better view of the situation is obtained by looking at these figures month by month. The exports of merchandise for the last five months have been—in millions of dollars: August, 110; September, 156; October, 194; November, 205; December, 246.

The outbreak of war produced in the United States, as it did in all neutral countries, an acute but temporary disturbance of trade. Since that time there seems to have been a steady recovery, for to-day the exports from the United States stand at a higher figure than on the same date last year.

Before passing away from the statistics of trade, and in order to demonstrate still more clearly if necessary that the naval operations of Great Britain and her allies have had no detrimental effect on the volume of trade between the United States and neutral countries, it is worth while to analyze the figures of the exports to Europe since the outbreak of hostilities. For this purpose the European countries ought to be grouped under three heads—Great Britain and those fighting with her, neutral countries, and enemy countries. It is, however, impossible for me to group the countries in this way satisfactorily, as the figures relating to the export trade of the United States with each country have not yet been published. In the preliminary statement of the export trade of the United States with foreign countries, only principal countries are shown and various countries which are tabulated separately in the more detailed monthly summary of commerce and finance are omitted. Those omitted include not only the Scandinavian countries, the exports to which are of peculiar importance in dealing with this question, but also Austria.

So far as it is possible to distribute the figures under the headings which I have indicated above—all the figures being given in thousands of dollars—the results are as follows:

Total exports to Europe from the 1st August to the 30th November, 413,995, as against 597,342. Of these Great Britain and her allies took 285,312, as against 316,805 in 1913. Germany and Belgium took 1,881, as against 177,136 in 1913, whereas neutral countries—among which Austria-Hungary is unavoidably included—took 123,802, as against 103,401 in 1913.

The general complaint in Your Excellency's note was that the action of Great Britain was affecting adversely the trade of the United States with neutral countries. The naval operations of Great Britain certainly do not interfere with commerce from the United States on its way to the United Kingdom and the allied countries, and yet the exports to Great Britain and her allies during those four months diminished to the extent of over $28,000,000, whereas those to neutral countries and Austria increased by over $20,000,000.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will accommodate the gentleman from New York by having it remain a little longer.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to say something in connection with the employment of American clerks in consulates. Recently on the border opposite Buffalo two Americans were shot by Canadian soldiers. At the time that incident occurred the consul at Fort Erie was absent on leave. His assistant, a clerk, was in charge. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] states that consuls do not have to perform diplomatic work. As a matter of fact, this clerk in charge was the American representative at Fort Erie at that time. In Toronto, just a few miles away, the clerk is a Canadian. Now, we would not be in a fortunate position if that circumstance happened at any place where our only representative was a resident and citizen of the country in which our citizens were injured. In other words, a citizen of their country would be representing our country in a matter in which we were deeply concerned and in which we ought to be represented by one of our own citizens. We have no diplomatic representatives in Canada except the consular agents. In their absence, as I have stated before, the clerks are in charge, and that is true in a large degree all over the world. From that point of view alone, we ought to have at every place and in every country American clerks in our consular offices.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there being nobody else who wishes to discuss this important item, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF INTERPRETERS, GUARDS, AND SO FORTH, IN TURKISH DOMINIONS AND SO FORTH.

Interpreters and guards at the consulates in the Turkish dominions, Persia, Morocco, northern Africa, and at Zanzibar, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $30,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I notice in a preceding item, on page 20, lines 20 to 24, inclusive, there are four places selected and an appropriation of $48,700 made for interpreters to be employed in those consulates. On page 21, in the item the reading of which has just been completed by the Clerk, I notice there are five places so named. Why are those nine places selected especially and an appropriation made of $78,700 for the two items? I am asking this purely for information.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is necessary owing to the difficulty of the language at those places to have trained interpreters. The language is hard to learn, and it is difficult to get people who understand it thoroughly.

Mr. GOULDEN. And it applies to no other section of the world in which our consulates are located?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. GOULDEN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words "and so forth," in line 1, and inserting after the word "interpreters," in line 1, the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 21, by striking out in line 1 the words "and so forth," and inserting after the word "interpreters" the word "and."

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman only strikes out the one "and so forth." There are two.

Mr. ROGERS. There is a reason for the second "and so forth," but I think there is no reason for the first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is the amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. To strike out "and so forth," in the first line.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The text of the bill does not carry the words "and so forth."

Mr. ROGERS. You want the headlines to be in accordance with the text of the bill, do you not?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I want to give some idea of what is in it.

Mr. ROGERS. The bill itself says "interpreters and guards." What possible reason can there be for having in the headlines the words "interpreters, guards, and so forth"?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been rejected unless division is asked for.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREIGN HOSPITAL AT CAPE TOWN.

Annual contribution toward the support of the Somerset Hospital (a foreign hospital), at Cape Town, $50, to be paid by the Secretary of State upon the assurance that suffering seamen and citizens of the United States will be admitted to the privileges of said hospital.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to the preceding item of $20,000 for the relief and protection of shipwrecked American seamen in certain territories. How much of that has been expended in the past, if the gentleman knows? I can not see how they spend that sum of money a year for this purpose.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The expenditure for the fiscal year 1914 was $23,849—$3,000 and something more than was appropriated.

Mr. MANN. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, UNITED STATES CONSULATES.

Expenses of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent (allowance for rent not to exceed in any case 30 per cent of the officer's salary), repairs to consular buildings owned by the United States, postage, furniture, including typewriters and exchange of same, statistics, newspapers, freight (foreign and domestic), telegrams, advertising, messenger service, traveling expenses of consular officers and consular assistants, compensation of Chinese writers, loss by exchange, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and consular agencies in the transaction of their business, and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized, $465,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that we pay a very considerable sum of money at various of the embassies out of this item for contingent expenses. I suppose that is largely for rent. At Argentina, for the last fiscal year we paid out $7,300 from this contingent fund; Chile, $12,362; Germany, $14,647; Japan, $10,505; in Mexico, $17,420; in Russia, $15,387; Venezuela, $11,924. Those are rather large sums of money to pay out of the contingent fund. I suppose that has been done for years. Is it mainly for rent?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is for rent, but it is for other things, too, such as stationery and any expense of that character that arises at an embassy. But the gentleman will recall in the last appropriation bill the contingent expenses of the embassies was increased for the purpose of occasioning an equalization of these amounts at the European embassies.

Mr. MANN. These items I speak of, of course, were for the preceding year. They will be larger for this fiscal year.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The statement was made at that time that the Russian embassy got something like $15,000 and the embassies at Berlin and Vienna got less, and the idea was to increase the appropriation so that our embassies in Russia, Germany, France, England, and probably Austria-Hungary, could have $15,000 a year from this sum for the rent and general expenses of the embassies. Italy and Spain had $10,000 a year. We increased it last year for the purpose of equalizing these embassies. I will say to the gentleman that a good part of that fund was used for rent.

Mr. MANN. Is that rent paid for consular offices or the embassy offices?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I was talking about the embassies.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought. As a matter of fact, though, we make an allowance for embassies?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; we do.

Mr. MANN. Of course, we have been told a thousand times here and elsewhere, and mainly elsewhere, that the salary paid to ambassadors is too small—and that may be true—because they are compelled to rent expensive quarters and pay the rent out of their own pockets, and that the Government makes no allowance for rent at all. As I understand it, we do make some allowance for rent.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We certainly do. As I just stated, at some of the big embassies in Europe they get $15,000—not all for rent, but for all the expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire if any part of this item is used for rent of embassies? As I understand it, this particular item is for consulates exclusively.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there is a limitation in the paragraph that allows rent only in an amount not to exceed 30 per cent of the consul's salary?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asked about the embassies during the discussion of this item.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman tell the committee how much of this appropriation is used for rent exclusively?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. One hundred and fifty-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman how much was used in the last fiscal year. It was $77,729.57 for rent of offices.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is only $77,000 used, that would leave about $388,000 available for these miscellaneous expenses.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. One hundred and fifty-seven thousand dollars was used for rent.

Mr. MANN. Well, as reported by the State Department on page 17 of the report on the expenditure of this item, they have "rent of offices" set down as $77,729.50.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. From what does the gentleman read?

Mr. MANN. Page 17.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Appropriations and expenditures of the Department of State, page 17?

Mr. MANN. I was reading from contingent expenses for foreign missions. This is for contingent expenses of consulates?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; and that is $157,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there would be available over twice the amount for contingent expenses. Can the gentleman inform me generally as to how that is used?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, for all sorts of expenses around embassies—water and ice, flag, uniform, repairs to furniture and fixtures, repairs to building, books; miscellaneous expenses that arise in connection with the consulates; and taxes, stamps, stationery, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. What do they total?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The taxes?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I mean all these miscellaneous items that have just been enumerated.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Three hundred and seventy-nine thousand three hundred and forty dollars in 1913.

Mr. STAFFORD. That includes the $157,000 for rent?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; and in 1914 the total was $455,865.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was trying to ascertain the amount that was expended for these miscellaneous items, exclusive of rent.

Mr. MANN. I will furnish the gentleman with the total that I have got here.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. One hundred and fifty-seven thousand dollars was taken from $379,000, leaving $227,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That furnishes the information I was desirous of obtaining.

Mr. MANN. The largest item was cablegrams, and so forth, which was $42,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and repairs, consular premises: For the acquisition of suitable premises or for the purchase of land and the erection thereon of a suitable building or of buildings in which to house the consulate general, the United States court, the jail, the post office, and other offices of the United States at Shanghai, China, including all necessary repairs, $360,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, and at the request of the chairman I ask that it be passed over for the time being. I want to be heard on it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] reserves a point of order on the paragraph, and asks unanimous consent that it be passed over for the time being. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NINETEENTH CONFERENCE, INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION.

The appropriation of $40,000 "For the purpose of defraying the expenses in Washington City incident to the Nineteenth Conference of the Interparliamentary Union, to be held in Washington in 1915, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe. The President is hereby requested to extend an invitation to the members of the Interparliamentary Union," made in the "Act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia and Mr. MOORE rose.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman from Virginia wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I merely wanted to inquire, in the event of no meeting being held in 1915, in view of the European war conditions, what the effect of this appropriation would be?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If no conference could be started in the calendar year 1915, I understand from the Department of State that this money would not lapse into the Treasury on the 1st of July, 1915, because this conference can be held at any time during the calendar year 1916.

Mr. MOORE. Is it the idea to extend this appropriation so that it may be available for 1916 if the convention should be held then?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes. I will say to the gentleman that I conferred with the officials of the State Department with reference to it, and they thought it would be available anyhow.

Mr. MOORE. They thought it would be available in 1916?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; because it does not revert to the Treasury on the 1st of July.

Mr. MOORE. A number of international conferences or conventions of one kind and another called for 1914 and 1915 undoubtedly will not be held. I know of one or two that have been called off, and I assume that, unless there is a cessation of hostilities on the other side, this one also would be called off, because it would be impossible for the belligerent nations to participate.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This is extended to July 1, 1916.

Mr. MOORE. That is done because it is thought that possibly the convention may be held?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 25, line 23, after the word "prescribe," by striking out the period and the words "The President is hereby requested to extend an invitation to the members of the Interparliamentary Union" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma, and on page 26, line 6, at the end of the paragraph, insert the words "The President is hereby requested to extend an invitation to the members of the Interparliamentary Union."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, that amendment brings up the question that I had in mind a little while ago. Is it the idea of the gentleman that the President should invite members of the Interparliamentary Union, notwithstanding the conditions that prevail abroad now?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no. It is only in the event the President should see fit to extend the invitation.

Mr. MOORE. I think it is fair that the gentleman should know of at least one instance that has come to my knowledge. I happen to be very familiar with one of these international congresses. Only during the last month has word come out of Brussels, for instance—and I suppose there are other headquarters for these international bodies abroad—that absolutely nothing could be done, because the papers of the congress had been seized and were under the control of a belligerent power not friendly to the headquarters country. Therefore it would seem to be almost an absurdity for the President of the United States to extend invitations where countries are under the war control of other countries and would be in no position to respond to the invitation.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Of course, he would not do that.

Mr. MOORE. I would not want to put him in the position of doing what would appear to be an absurd thing.

Mr. MANN. This simply extends the authority that he now has. It is in the present law.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is all.

Mr. MANN. That provision is in the existing law.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was intended that the Inter-Parliamentary Union should meet last fall, but on account of the distressing conditions in Europe the President did not extend the invitation. This just gives him the authority that he already has.

Mr. MOORE. I thought there was some obligation imposed on the President.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE. I think he ought to have discretion to do the sensible thing, under the circumstances.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He has.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania feel that it would embarrass the President to extend this invitation?

Mr. MOORE. Not so much that as that we are imposing upon the President the obligation to invite people to come here when they are helpless and unable even to receive their invitations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The duty imposed upon the President must be understood from the context, and the context is that the President is "requested" to extend an invitation.

Mr. MOORE. He is not obligated to do it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He should simply be "authorized" to do it.

Mr. MOORE. Then that would leave him discretion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; that would leave him discretion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIFTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES.

The appropriation of $75,000 "To meet the actual and necessary expenses of the delegates of the United States to the Fifth International Conference of American States, to be held at the city of Santiago, Chile, beginning in September, 1914, and of their clerical assistants, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State," made in the "Act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What was the reason for postponing this congress?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The reason was that in this instance the Chilean Government was not ready to hold the conference at that time.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOOHER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7091. An act to create an additional judge in the district of New Jersey; and

S. J. Res. 205. Joint resolution to convey the thanks of Congress to Capt. Thomas Moore, master of the Alaska Steamship Co.'s steamer Cordova, and to the officers and crew, for the prompt and heroic service rendered by them in rescuing 58 survivors of the U. S. revenue cutter Tahoma.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIFTEENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AGAINST ALCOHOLISM.

The appropriation of $40,000 "For the purpose of defraying the expenses incident to the Fifteenth International Congress Against Alcoholism, to be held in the United States in 1915, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe; the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and requested to extend an invitation to the Governments of the world with which we maintain diplomatic relations to participate in and appoint delegates to said congress: Provided, That an itemized account of all expenditures shall be reported to Congress," made in the "act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the same error exists in this paragraph that existed in the previous paragraph, that the gentleman has just corrected.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, the same amendment that I offered to the other paragraph.

Mr. MANN. It would not be the same amendment. It is to strike out all of line 25 on page 26, and down to and including the word "congress," in line 5 on page 27, and then insert that language at the end of line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of line 25, page 26, and down to and including the word "congress," in line 5 on page 27, and insert, at the end of line 9, the words "The Secretary of State is hereby authorized and requested to extend an invitation to the Governments of the world with which we maintain diplomatic relations to participate in and appoint delegates to said congress: Provided, That an itemized account of all expenditures shall be reported to Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a new paragraph to come in after line 9.

Mr. MANN. To come in after the amendment just agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 27 by inserting after the amendment just agreed to the following:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to invite the several Governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Haiti, and Santo Domingo to send official delegates to the meeting of the Pan American Medical Congress to be held in the city of San Francisco, Cal., Panama-Pacific International Exposition, June 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, anno Domini 1915."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order, at least until you strike out "anno Domini."

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with my colleague on that. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by striking out the words "anno Domini."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that modification will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment, anyhow. I did not understand just what countries the amendment covers.

Mr. FOSTER. It covers the South American countries, including, of course, Mexico. I do not know whether he could now extend an invitation to Mexico or not.

Mr. MANN. Does it cover the South American countries? Let us hear it read.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. I still reserve the point of order. Is there to be any expense?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I shall not ask that there be any expense.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order. I should like to inquire whether this includes an invitation to the Government of Cuba.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. I was about to ask it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it does.

Mr. STAFFORD. Cuba should certainly be included.

Mr. MOORE. Why not the other West Indian Islands?

Mr. FOSTER. I think Cuba ought to go in. The Pan American Union was organized some years ago. We did invite these Latin-American Republics to form the Pan American Union, which was done about 1892, and Congress passed a bill inviting them to come to this country and form this union.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that Congress was Canada included?

Mr. FOSTER. I think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman believe that owing to our close relations with our neighbor on the north we should invite Canada as well?

Mr. MANN. This congress is to consider those diseases which float into us from the torrid countries.

Mr. FOSTER. As my colleague says, this congress is with reference to the diseases that come from the south from the torrid countries.

Mr. STAFFORD. That information would be as valuable to the Dominion Government as to ourselves.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; but the Pan American Union comprises those countries to the south, and the congress is to consider the diseases that come from those countries.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the gentleman has no objection to including Cuba in the list.

Mr. FOSTER. No. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by including Cuba.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment so as to include Cuba. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, one reason that there has been no invitation to the Dominion of Canada is that this invitation was addressed to the sovereignties, only to those independent Governments. It is true that the British have some tropical concessions down there like Jamaica and British Honduras.

Mr. STAFFORD. And British Guiana.

Mr. KAHN. But they are not in the Pan American Union.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois, to whom the President would direct an invitation, to the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know, although this includes the Republic of Mexico; I do not know whether there could be an invitation extended to it or not.

Mr. MOORE. As a matter of etiquette I would like to know whether the invitation would go to Carranza or Villa or Zapata?

Mr. FOSTER. If they were going to invite all the governments it would, but I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. We have some communications which are to be addressed to Mexico anyhow, and I would like to know how it is done.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It would be easy enough; send five invitations.

Mr. MOORE. I observe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois says "republics of Mexico"; it speaks of governments in the plural.

Mr. FOSTER. It says "republics of Mexico" and then goes on with the names of the other republics, so they are all included, and this does not mean "republics of Mexico."

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman interprets his language to mean only one Republic of Mexico?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I have said that I do not know whether we could extend any invitation to Mexico or not; it might be that by that time conditions would be altogether different.

Mr. MOORE. The President was insistent on refusing to confer with Huerta. This should be known before any point of order is raised. I do not want to make the point of order to bar out a friendly country, but how is Mexico to be invited?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say that I can not give the gentleman the information that he asks for.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman regards it more a matter of law than of etiquette.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be determined by the President and the State Department.

Mr. MOORE. It would be left with the State Department?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. And we could fall back upon the Secretary of State to advise us in the emergency?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman think it would be a proper thing to withhold an invitation from the Republic of Mexico?

Mr. MOORE. Not at all. I think that the invitation should be extended if it is possible to give it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would there be any harm in having the invitation potential, so that we might use it if the occasion should arise?

Mr. MOORE. I recognize that the gentleman from Virginia is an authority on matters of etiquette, and since the gentleman from Illinois has not been able to answer my question, I appeal to my Chesterfieldian friend from Virginia to say just how and to whom the invitation should be extended for the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood the invitation to be to the Latin-American Republics, including, of course, Mexico. The word "Republics" applies or includes Mexico and the other countries of South America.

Mr. MOORE. At any rate, in the last analysis we could fall back on the Secretary of State to interpret this delicate situation.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt that the Secretary of State would meet the situation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the question that the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked my colleague from Illinois might have produced a dangerous answer if my colleague had not been cautious and accurate, as he always is. I asked the same question the other day, in the consideration of the sundry civil bill, on an item making an appropriation in reference to the Imperial Valley of the Colorado River, and several gentlemen informed me without any hesitation at all that we would have no trouble in dealing with the home government in Mexico; that we had obtained authority and that we had been doing the work; and, as a matter of fact, some gentleman said we had dealt with Villa or his man. Then, I picked up the report of our Government, made by the officer in charge of the work down there, and found that he said because there was no government in Mexico with which they could deal they had done nothing. I wondered whether the information which is often furnished on the floor on the spur of the moment to relieve somebody who wants information is reliable, because this time I got "accurate" information which undoubtedly was entirely imaginary.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I withdrew the point of order several minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPOSITION IN CITY OF PANAMA.

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept an invitation extended by the Government of Panama to the Government of the United States to participate in an exposition to be held in the city of Panama; and the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable suitable participation in said exposition by this country, $75,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the erection, on land donated to this Government by the Government of Panama, of a suitable building, which may permanently stand as a bureau of information and commercial museum to exhibit and draw attention at all times to the industrial and commercial standing of the United States, and the residue to be expended for an appropriate exhibit of the arts, industries, manufactures, products of the soil and the mines of the United States, and, as far as practicable, of the functions of the General Government, and an exhibit of such other articles as the President may direct, including an exhibit relating to the Panama Canal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. As I understand this proposition, a year ago last November or December the Republic of Panama transmitted an invitation to the United States to take part in this exposition, which was to be held in Panama last November or December. That matter rested with the Department of State for five or six months, or thereabouts, and then they sent a letter, and it was sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, where it again reclined on an easy sofa for several months. In August or September, or thereabouts, this resolution was reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. It was not acted upon. In fact, there was not time within which to construct the building. The exposition has been put off until, I think, April. Is that right?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think it is later than that.

Mr. MANN. It may have been again postponed.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think it is July.

Mr. MANN. When I was in Panama in November last it had been postponed, I think, until April. This exposition, as the gentleman knows, is to be located on grounds out where they want to make a new portion of the city for residence purposes, and it is some distance from the city of Panama—not a great ways—but at a place where a permanent exhibit building for the United States would be just about as valuable as it would be at the bottom of the sea. If we have a Government building down there in connection with the Panama Canal, it seems to me it ought to be easily accessible to the canal and not located out of town.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The information the committee had was that this land was about the most desirable location around Panama city.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is a very pleasant location for an exposition. It is not in a part of the city of Panama at present, but it is out of the city, at a point where they wish to develop it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Then it will probably be a future city?

Mr. MANN. Some people may live out there. That is very likely; but it is quite a ways from the canal. The Panama Canal lies on one side of the city of Panama, and this exposition site is away out on the other side of the city of Panama. A permanent exposition building there, so far as we are concerned, would not be worth anything at all.

If we are to have a Government exhibit there, and I do not know but that we will need one, it ought to be easily accessible to the canal and on the Canal Zone, and not located where we have no control over it at all in a portion of the city where no one will go as a rule without considerable trouble. I doubt very much whether it is possible—I know it is not possible to construct an exposition building after the 4th of March in time for the exposition if it is held at the time it is expected it will be held. It has been postponed, and it may be again postponed. There is nothing there but an exposition building, a very good looking building. It is possible that Spain has put up something of a building there. I am perfectly willing, of course, to have our Government make any sort of an exhibit that is proper at an exposition that the Republic of Panama holds, no matter what is the reason for holding it, but for us to put up a permanent building, and that is the only excuse offered by the Department of State for this item, for United States exhibits at a place where people will not go, instead of putting it alongside the canal on the Canal Zone, seems to me to be the height of folly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What distance is it from the city of Panama, or Balboa, which adjoins Panama?

Mr. MANN. Of course they join, but it is 2 or 3 miles from the canal.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On the opposite side?

Mr. MANN. On the opposite side from where the exposition is to be held.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And there is no town whatever over there where the exposition is to be held?

Mr. MANN. There is no town there now. It is a very pretty part of the surrounding country. There is an effort being made, so I was informed, to develop it as suburban property and get the people to go out there to live.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Where is it located in respect to the Miraflores Lake or Dam?

Mr. MANN. I could not give the gentleman the points of the compass, but it is practically opposite from Balboa.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated the situation correctly. This bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs by the gentleman who now occupies the chair last August. It was thought that the exposition would be held last fall. Since then it has been postponed from time to time, and my understanding is it is to be held in July. The purpose of the appropriation is to have $25,000 available for participation in the exposition, and $75,000 with which to put up a permanent building upon the exposition grounds, upon land that is deemed most desirable for a building of this character, and in a part of the country that it is thought will in the near future build up into a residence part of the city of Panama. I desire to read in this connection a letter which I recently received from the Secretary of State in reference to the matter:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 20, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: I have made inquiries in regard to the Panama Exposition, about which you spoke to me a few days ago, and find that the exposition is to open on July 6, 1915. Its character is to be Latin American and its purpose is to bring under one organization a series of permanent exhibits of products from Latin-American countries so that travelers crossing the Isthmus may have an opportunity to inspect with a minimum of difficulty and expense the products of the various countries of Latin America.

The only exception to the purely Latin-American character of the exposition is the inclusion of Spain as an exhibitor. It is expected that Spain will spend some $80,000 for the erection of a permanent building which, after the close of the exposition, will be used to house the legation and will contain a permanent exhibition of Spanish products and be the center of Spanish trade publicity in the Caribbean region.

It is understood that Cuba and Venezuela will also erect permanent buildings at the exposition. Cuba intends to spend about $60,000 for a building, which will later on become the home of the Cuban Legation and contain a permanent exhibit of Cuban products. It is not known how much will be expended by Venezuela.

It is understood that Guatemala will spend perhaps $25,000 on her exhibit, and Nicaragua, and probably other Latin-American countries, will be represented by displays of merchandise and other articles of their production.

Panama itself has already expended about $650,000 on a permanent exhibit and upon buildings now under construction, which will be used in the future as Government offices.

The distinct Pan American character of the exposition makes it of the highest importance that the United States should take a conspicuous part in the exposition. It is obvious that a permanent exhibit of the United States on the Isthmus of Panama, which will be crossed by so many passengers interested in trade in the near future, could not fail to stimulate interest in articles of American production, and the appropriation for American participation should be ample for the installation of a thoroughly comprehensive display of articles produced in the United States.

In view of the character of the exposition it would seem desirable that as much latitude as practicable be given to the expenditure of the money appropriated for the purpose, and I would suggest that if there should be no objection on the part of Congress the appropriation be made without limitation to any particular year, so that it may be expended during the entire period of the exposition, which conceivably may extend beyond the calendar year of 1915.

I am, my dear Mr. FLOOD,
Very sincerely, yours,
W. J. BRYAN.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice that in the letter most of the items say that they expect that this or that country will do this and that. Now, this exposition was to have been held last November or December. Then it was postponed until April or May. Now, it is again postponed until July. They still say that they expect that this country or that will erect a building and make an exhibit. There never will be an exposition held there, so far as that is concerned, that amounts to anything. There is nothing there, and it is no place at all for a permanent building unless you want to build a legation building down there, which is another proposition. I do not know but what it would be suitable for a summer home or a winter home or a country residence for an American legation. It is no place for an exposition. I went over the ground and looked at it very carefully when I was there, because I knew of this bill; but no American who goes down there would recommend this place. Of course, very naturally people here representing Panama are very anxious to have this Government participate for reasons which I am not going into.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the gentleman is entirely correct, if an exposition building is to be placed at the point the gentleman indicates. I think it should be in Balboa.

Mr. MANN. I went over there and looked at it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think if it would be at Balboa it would be in a better location.

Mr. MOORE. Is it on the road to old Panama?

Mr. MANN. I think it is out in that direction.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Does the gentleman make the point of order against this item?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. May I ask a question before the gentleman from Pennsylvania begins? I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, if he will yield.

Mr. MANN. Surely.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would make a point of order against the item that carried an appropriation for $25,000?

Mr. MANN. I would not.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said by the two distinguished gentlemen who have been carrying on this discussion [Mr. MANN of Illinois and Mr. FLOOD of Virginia], I think probably the adoption of the suggestion that $25,000 be expended to enable the United States to participate in the Panama Exposition would be sufficient for the present. It would be manifestly impossible to erect a building and set up an adequate permanent exposition of American products for the $100,000 mentioned in the bill. For many years I have believed that something ought to be done in the way of a permanent building for an exhibit of American products to promote trade in South American and other countries through the medium of the Panama Canal, and I regret that up to date no definite steps in that direction have been taken.

During the discussion of the Panama Canal government bill a great deal was said about the purpose of the canal. A majority of the House held at that time that the canal was constructed more for military than for commercial purposes. I did not fully subscribe to the military idea. From the beginning of the Panama Canal agitation I have believed that if the canal was to be of any advantage to the United States at all it would not be in keeping a chip on our shoulder and inviting other nations to knock it off, but, in addition to saving the long and dangerous voyages around South America, it would broaden and promote our commercial relations with South American countries, which relations have long been neglected. Mr. Chairman, before the unhappy conflict that now prevails Great Britain and Germany were very industrious in gathering up the trade of these Latin-American countries. It was a matter of great interest and concern to American merchants and manufacturers. The large commercial interests of the United States approved our undertaking at Panama, believing the business and industries of our own country would be the first to obtain advantage from the construction of the canal, and that it would inaugurate closer and friendlier relations with the South American Republics.

In 1911 there was considerable discussion of the methods by which the benefits of the canal were to be reaped by the people of the United States. Expositions were proposed for San Francisco and New Orleans, but neither of these were to be permanent, although, as in the case of the great Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876, some memorial will doubtless remain of the stupendous San Francisco Exposition which is being opened by the President to-day. Having the permanence of our Panama Canal advantages in mind, I introduced a bill in February, 1911, to celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal by establishing a great national headquarters of commerce and industry in the city of Washington, the Capital of the Nation.

For information, I insert that bill at this time:

A bill (H. R. 32536) to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal by the establishment of a permanent memorial to commerce and industry.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, created and dedicated to commerce and industry a national trade bureau, which shall be a permanent memorial of the completion of the Panama Canal, as authorized by the act of June 28, 1902, and of the intent of the Government to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, as contemplated by the act of February 14, 1903, creating the Department of Commerce and Labor. The national trade bureau shall be organized and established in the city of Washington, D. C., under the supervision and control of a board of trustees, to consist of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, severally, ex officio. The board of trustees is hereby authorized and directed to select and purchase land and erect thereon a building or buildings in the city of Washington of sufficient proportions to install a complete collection of sample products of the soil, the forests, the mines, and the sea as grown, manufactured, improved, or prepared for commercial use by human labor or ingenuity in the United States of America or in any foreign country with which the people of the United States may have commercial or industrial relations now or hereafter, and illustrative of the methods and opportunities of creating and distributing wealth. The board of trustees shall further organize and establish a thorough system of acquiring and imparting to the people information of every kind upon commercial and industrial questions at home and abroad, and, for the purpose of making more effective this work, shall consolidate in the national trade bureau such existing bureaus charged by law with the collection and dissemination of statistical information as may be appropriate thereto.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the board of trustees, provided for in section 1 of this act, to time the completion and opening of the national trade bureau to correspond with the formal opening of the Panama Canal and to arrange for such ceremonies at the opening of said bureau as shall include the participation of accredited representatives of the various nations of the world with whom the United States entertains or may hereafter entertain friendly trade relations. Such ceremonies shall be continued for a period not exceeding three months, during which the bureau, under such regulations as the board of trustees may provide, shall be open to public inspection and to such meetings and conferences of trade and commercial bodies of this and foreign countries as may avail themselves of the opportunity to meet or confer therein. At the expiration of the ceremonial period of three months the board of trustees shall cease to exist and the supervision and control of the bureau shall devolve upon the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor in such manner as shall be defined by law.

SEC. 3. That the limit of cost to enable the board of trustees to give effect to and execute the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act shall be the sum of $2,500,000.

Of course I had in mind the establishment at Washington or at any other point that might be agreed upon, at a cost of $2,500,000, more or less, of such a memorial institution as would prove a Mecca, not only for people of the United States who are interested in trade and commerce, but of visiting foreigners who might be induced to trade with us. This country does not now have any such institution, and my thought at the time was that since most visiting foreigners come to Washington, it might be appropriate to set up this great American information bureau at the Capital. The bill attracted much attention from commercial bodies throughout the country, but as Congress decided to approve the Panama Canal Exposition at San Francisco, the permanent institution proposition had very little chance in that Congress. Later on, in June, 1912, when the question of fortifications was up and Congress was considering a bill for that purpose, I offered the following amendment:

And the President is also authorized and directed to create a commission, to consist of one member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, three members of the National Chamber of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, to inquire into and report upon the most approved ways and means of utilizing the Panama Canal and the territory adjacent thereto within the Canal Zone, to foster, promote, and develop the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fisheries industries, the labor interests, and transportation facilities of the United States, and to provide for the commerce and industry of the United States a fair and full return upon the investment made by the United States in the construction of the canal. For the purposes hereof the President is empowered to use so much as may be necessary of the moneys appropriated by this act from the departments of civil administration and law.

The purpose of this amendment was to obtain some recognition, if possible, for the commercial interests through the Department of Commerce and Labor, but it was objected to and ruled out by the Chair.

Subsequently, in support of this general idea, I said:

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the contemplated coordination of the canal and commerce, it would seem as if we ought to provide in some way for the business man who wants to do business on or through the canal. It is patent to anyone who visits the zone and stops overnight at the Tivoli Hotel that foreign nations have their representatives on the ground. It is obvious also that, so far as they have been able to do so, they have made Panama a basis for operations in the contest for the commerce of South America. We are already buying extensively from those foreign agents ourselves.

To what extent have we encouraged American business interests to make business by or through the canal? We know that Germany and Great Britain are already intrenched in the countries south of Panama and that they have been more successful in making friends with the 60,000,000 of people there than we have. What warehouse facilities have we offered Americans? What banking factors or means of exchange? What opportunities to study the language and customs of South Americans or to show our samples? I do not insist that it is the business of the Government to do all these things for the individual business man, but I do believe that by our decision to make the zone a military reservation we are helping to shut the door in his face.

The fortification of the canal having been provided for, without regard to the commercial advantages that might be acquired through our control of the Canal Zone, I introduced another bill, hoping it might be considered, apart from both the San Francisco Exposition, which must necessarily be temporary, and also the fortifications question. This bill contemplated a Panama Canal trade commission to investigate and report upon the possibilities of the canal as a commercial feeder. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has not yet seen fit to act upon it. It is also a fact that many commercial bodies expressed their approval of this bill and urged that something be done on the lines suggested. The bill was as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25779) creating a Panama Canal trade commission, and to enable the commercial, agricultural, and industrial interests of the United States to derive advantages from the Panama Canal.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission to be known as the Panama Canal trade commission, to consist of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, and five representative citizens, members of commercial or industrial organizations of the United States, no two of whom shall be residents of the same State, shall be appointed by the President to inquire into and report upon the possibilities and advantages of the Panama Canal and the territory adjacent thereto within the Panama Zone for the fostering, promotion, and development in Central and South America and in other countries of the commerce and industry of the United States.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Panama Canal trade commission, created in the foregoing section of this act, to report from time to time to the President as to the advantages to be derived by the farmers, the merchants, and the manufacturers of the United States, and by all citizens having to do with the raw or finished products of the soil, the forests, the mines, or the waters of the United States, to the end that the vast expenditures made by the United States in the construction and maintenance of the Panama Canal and the United States territory adjacent thereto may be of advantage and benefit to the people of the United States. And for the information of the people of the United States the said commission shall include in its report to the President all available data as to the use made of the Panama Canal and adjacent territory, including the cities of Panama and Colon, by foreign nations engaged in commercial transactions with Central and South America, in which, by or through the Panama Canal and adjacent United States territory, the commercial relations of the United States might be strengthened and improved.

SEC. 3. That the members of the Panama Canal trade commission, excepting the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, shall receive for their services $1,000 per annum each; that necessary traveling expenses on official business incident to the work of the commission shall be paid to all the members of the commission, and that the commission may employ such expert and clerical assistance as may be necessary to carry on the work provided for in this act.

SEC. 4. That the limit of cost to enable the Panama Canal trade commission to give effect to and to execute the provisions of the foregoing sections of this act shall be the sum of $50,000.

With this hurried statement of well-intentioned efforts to direct public attention to the desirability of acquiring something from the people of the United States in return for their vast expenditure upon the canal, I am naturally pleased to note that the Secretary of State, in his letter to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], under date of January 20, 1915, approves the idea of a permanent exhibit in connection with the approaching exposition of the Government of Panama at Panama City. It indicates that we are gradually coming round to the suggestion of a permanent exposition for the display of American products and wares, no matter whether it is held in Washington, in San Francisco, in New York, or on the Isthmus. Some day it may be found that such a plan as was outlined in my bill of February, 1911, will contribute very largely to our own prosperity and to the peace of nations. We may not yet be ready for it on so large a scale. We certainly could not accomplish it with the appropriations proposed in this bill, nor at the remote location from Panama City which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] indicates is to be the scene of the Government of Panama activities.

We could not erect for $100,000, as proposed in this bill, any such building for exhibition purposes as would be commensurate with the display we should make of our manufactures and farm products, nor would the $25,000 suggested for exhibits only begin to meet the situation. The permanent exposition that ought to be established somewhere as a memorial of the Panama Canal, which is our international trade promoter, should have all the facilities of an international trade bureau as well as floor space for American samples and the vast quantity of exhibits that would come up from the factories and farms as well as from the mines and the seas. We should be able to give the manufacturer in Detroit as much information about trade conditions in Ceylon as the intending Ceylon purchaser would desire to have about the industries of Detroit. There should be the most complete and up-to-date information on rates, tariffs, banking customs, and methods of transportation, and we should provide along with our greatest show place the most accurate and detailed information that we had reason to believe might come to us upon the creation of the Department of Commerce and Labor in 1903. The province of that department as set forth in the act was:

To foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States.

And it is high time the American business men and producers were getting the full benefit of this splendid program.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that one active, well-trained, thoroughly intelligent commercial traveler would do more good in the way of getting trade than an exposition on the Isthmus, even at the expense of $100,000?

Mr. MOORE. No; I would not go that far. One thoroughly trained commercial traveler could do a splendid business for his particular concern. If he should go out to sell American hats or shoes, he could drum up a special trade, but that would be for one concern; it would not have that broad and nation-wide interest we would like to see taken in an enterprise of this kind.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does not the gentleman believe that the various productive enterprises will have their representatives there, or salesmen, soliciting trade and getting it?

Mr. MOORE. Well, my experience as a result of two visits to the canal taught me something with respect to the trade activities of the United States. I noticed very particularly that the representatives of foreign nations were there. I observed that the German representatives were on the Canal Zone, that the French representatives were there, that the British representatives were there, but I saw very few representatives of the United States, or seeking to promote American trade.

Most of the Americans on the canal were sightseers, or were there because they were being paid by the United States to do some work in connection with the canal. They were not taking advantage of the trade opportunities that might come from mixing up with the nationalities that were on the canal, or otherwise ingratiating themselves and the things they had to sell into the confidence of foreigners.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman, with his permission, another question or two. I want to get at the facts. Does not the gentleman believe that those representatives of English, German, and other European commercial houses who were on the Isthmus of Panama were not there to meet the casual visitor or traveler crossing the Isthmus, but were there to sell goods to the merchants residing on the Isthmus at Panama or Colon, or wherever it is?

Mr. MOORE. If their objective was to do business only on the Isthmus of Panama, that might be true. But I presume that was only an incident of their being there. They were coming up from and going back to Ecuador and Chile and Argentina. They were there doing business generally. Panama is a central point and an international meeting place, and I suppose these foreigners were improving upon their opportunities there. The truth is that many of them have become well established in the South American markets, which up to the present time the United States has not attempted to do as it should.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will bear with me, the point I want to make is this: They have gotten themselves well established in the South American trade and Central American trade because they went to the places where the merchants reside. They went to the people where the customers were, and not stopping at a central point and trying to do business through anticipation. The way they do business is to go and visit the various countries and present their goods and their prices?

Mr. MOORE. That may be true wherever they go out specifically for a specific kind of business. They may have produced results, and no doubt they did. They understood the language; they understood Spanish, which the average American traveler does not. They made themselves understood by the people, and they remained in the territory long enough to get the confidence of the people, which the American hustler will not usually wait to do.

The Yankee traveler goes there and does not remain long enough to get acquainted with the trade customs, banking, and so forth. We expected to improve upon these conditions when the Department of Commerce was founded in 1903. Its special function was to be to develop American trade at home and abroad. Here at Panama was the greatest American enterprise ever attempted, and not a dollar spent in any way to help ourselves commercially, and commerce includes mechanics and labor in the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman what has been the success of the Philadelphia exposition, for which he has had appropriations for many years?

Mr. MOORE. To which exposition does the gentleman refer?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The permanent exhibit that was established many years ago.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman refers to the Commercial Museum, I would inform him that it receives no appropriations from the Government. It is maintained by its members and by small appropriations received from the city of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania. It does not receive anything from the United States at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But it did at one time.

Mr. MOORE. It did receive an appropriation when the international exhibits were being brought in and when nations were being invited to conference and a great deal was being done to improve our relations, particularly with the Latin-American countries. The record in connection with that institution is a proud one, and although it serves the people generally, the Government saw fit to shut it off from appropriations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And what have been the results of the museum?

Mr. MOORE. The results have been excellent. So much so that at the exposition building, where information is available in respect to raw materials, tariffs, and so forth, of all countries, when free lectures are given there is not room to accommodate the people who come daily wishing to acquire information in regard to international trade. It is a valuable information bureau for business men desiring to expand their connections and for foreigners seeking to know about American conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of proceeding for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in lieu of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. My amendment proposes, Mr. Chairman, to strike out of the item——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 27, line 15——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is not what I want. If the Clerk will take the bill, I will indicate. I want to strike out all the item on line 18——

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask leave to return to this place later.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It will take but a minute.

Mr. MANN. So that he can have his amendment prepared.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It will take just a minute. Strike out, on line 18, beginning with the figures "$75,000," down to and including the words "to be expended" in line 24. And the rest of it is the amendment I offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 27, by striking out——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And, on line 15, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$25,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that he reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. MANN. Ask leave to return to the paragraph.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Clerk has it there now, if the Chair will permit him to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment. The Chair wishes to say that you can not amend the paragraph. It has been stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am not trying to amend the paragraph. I am offering an amendment in lieu of the paragraph, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 15, page 27, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$25,000"; and on the same page, line 18, strike out all after the word "country" down to and including the word "expended," in line 24.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, let the Clerk read the rest of the paragraph. That is not my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an appropriate exhibit of the arts, industries, manufactures, products of the soil and mines of the United States, and, as far as practicable, of the functions of the General Government, and an exhibit of such other articles as the President may direct, including an exhibit relating to the Panama Canal.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is not my amendment. The Clerk should begin on 11.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman had better adopt my suggestion.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I adopt the gentleman's suggestion and ask unanimous consent to pass over that item for the present and return to it later.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over and returned to later.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President is hereby requested to take such steps as he may deem necessary to have the Republic of Cuba reimburse the United States to the extent of $6,509,511.26, said sum being the amount expended out of the Treasury of the United States from 1907 to 1909 on account of the army of pacification in Cuba.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] makes a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly subject to a point of order. It is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] want to be heard on that?

Mr. MCKENZIE. No. I do not care to be heard on it. It is too important a matter to be put through on a bill of this character. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it is an item requesting the President of the United States to take such steps as he may deem necessary to have the Republic of Cuba reimburse the United States to the extent of $6,509,511.26, which this Government expended in Cuba for the benefit of Cuba.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not maintain that this is not legislation, does he?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have not gotten to that point.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that in 1906, during the disturbed conditions in the island of Cuba, our Government established a provisional government in Cuba, and the Hon. William H. Taft, who was then Secretary of War, acting under instructions of the President, proclaimed, on September 29, 1906, this provisional government. They did it with the assurance to the Government of Cuba that it would be temporary. It was temporary, but it established peace and order there, and in doing so there was expended out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $6,509,511.26, with the understanding that the Cuban Government would reimburse this Government for that amount of money.

This is simply a request to the President to take steps to collect that amount, which he will do if the Cuban Government is able to pay it. If the Cuban Government is not able to pay it, he will not do it. Our bill carries $4,400,000, and this sum is more than $2,000,000 in excess of the entire amount which the bill carries. The Cuban Government owes it to this Government. There is no question on the face of the earth about that. Our Treasury needs this money, and if the Cuban Government is able to pay it I see no reason why it should not be requested to pay it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the President now the power to deal with the Cuban Government on this subject?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think he has that power, but this is a reminder——

Mr. MANN. Would he not have just as much power now as he would have if we passed this item?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This is a reminder to the President, and a congressional sanction or authority for the President to act.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, are we not just now on both sides of the Chamber, in the main—at least those who feel the responsibility—trying to keep Congress from interfering with the President in our foreign relations? And does the gentleman think it is an apt time for Congress to poke its nose into the relations between this country and foreign affairs?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think the gentleman is doing all he can to keep Congress from interfering with the President in our diplomatic relations. Not all of his side are.

Mr. MANN. I am doing that now on this item.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This would in no way cause friction or tend to create trouble. We can trust the President to take care of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman be extended for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire whether the State Department has made any recommendation that this item should be included in the bill or has recommended that it should be passed?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The State Department made no formal recommendation to the committee. A member of the committee, who is the author of this amendment, stated that the State Department—and I do not know with whom he conferred in the State Department—thought it ought to be included in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is purely on the initiative of the committee and has been recommended in the State Department?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was in a bill referred to our committee. The initiative was in Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was the bill referred to the State Department for its approval or disapproval?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not formally.

Mr. GARNER. Was any estimate of it made in the Book of Estimates?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this in relation to the point of order: I am opposed to our Government assuming, in the first place, the rôle of international policeman; but when we do it and interfere with the affairs of the people of other countries, I think it is in bad taste for us then to ask those people to pay us for our meddling, and I am opposed to the President of the United States making this request. Therefore I insist on the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman yielded to me for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman wants unanimous consent, he can get it at any time, no doubt.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Very well; go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN FINANCIERS.

That the President is hereby authorized to extend to the Governments of Central and South America an invitation to be represented by their ministers of finance and leading bankers, not exceeding three in number in each case, to attend a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury in the city of Washington at such date as shall be determined by the President, with a view of establishing closer and more satisfactory financial relations between their countries and the United States of America; and authority is hereby given to the Secretary of the Treasury to invite, in his discretion, representative bankers of the United States to participate in the said conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for just a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will withhold the point of order for a moment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I rose simply for the purpose of suggesting that it would be well to put in Cuba and Santo Domingo if you are going to invite them.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of meeting such actual and necessary expenses as may be incidental to the meeting of said conference, and for the entertainment of the foreign conferees, the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve it or make it?

Mr. MANN. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I concede it is good. I would like to say something, however, about the merits of it, if it is reserved.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that we return to the two items passed over temporarily, on page 18 and page 27.

Mr. MANN. Let the Clerk read the item.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATERWAYS TREATY, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN: INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, including rental of offices at Washington, D. C., expense of printing, and necessary traveling and other expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the international joint commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, as well as for the payment of necessary expenses, not to exceed the sum of $5,000, incurred, and compensation for services rendered under the direction of the Secretary of State in the examination and preparation of cases involving the use, distribution, or division of waters and other questions or matters of difference covered by the treaty of January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain, and in representing this Government and the American interests involved in the presentation of such cases before the international joint commission constituted under that treaty, $40,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this object for the fiscal year 1915, said amounts to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be expended for subsistence of the commission, its attorney and secretary, except the sum of $5 per day when absent from Washington on official business; and no part of it shall be expended for subsistence and traveling expenses from and to their places of residence and Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on these words:

Not to exceed the sum of $5,000, incurred, and compensation for services rendered under the direction of the Secretary of State in the examination and preparation of cases involving the use, distribution, or division of waters and other questions or matters of difference covered by the treaty of January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain, and in representing this Government and the American interests involved in the presentation of such cases before the International Joint Commission constituted under that treaty.

I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether that $5,000 is not at this time being given to a gentleman for the purpose of acting as special counsel, whose title was first "counsel for the International Joint Commission" and then afterwards changed to "counsel for the United States before the commission."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think Mr. Tawney, a member of the commission, told me that there was some letter written to the commission which gave the gentleman a title different from the one that is carried in this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. My information is that this $5,000 is paid to a gentleman by the name of Manton M. Wyvel.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The best man connected with the commission; worth the whole bunch of them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I suppose so, since the personnel has been recently changed; but this gentleman, Mr. Manton M. Wyvel, was private secretary to the Secretary of State.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is true; and Mr. Tawney was chairman of the Appropriations Committee in this House just before he was appointed, and Mr. Busby, who was secretary of the commission, was secretary to Speaker Cannon just before he was appointed on this commission.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; but this gentleman, Mr. Wyvell, is not a member of the commission. He was appointed at the request of Mr. Bryan. On November 11, 1913, he was appointed "counsel for the International Joint Commission" at a salary of $5,000. Now, where does that salary come from?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is coming out of this fund, and he was appointed at the request of this commission. The Hon. James A. Tawney, the chairman of the commission, appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs nearly a year before the gentleman was appointed, and said that the commission was put to great disadvantage because England and English claimants were represented by lawyers familiar with the questions presented to the commission, while the United States was not represented at all, or was represented by some gentleman assigned by the Department of Justice, who was not familiar with the questions the commission was considering, and that therefore American interests suffered; and they suggested that an attorney or counsel should be assigned to familiarize himself with this work and appear before the commission.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, yes; I understand that. The English Government was represented by counsel, but this gentleman was appointed to inform the counsel, and not to represent the United States.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is not a fact at all, as I happen to know. He was appointed to represent the United States. Mr. Tawney informed me that the title first given him was not the title that he ought to have. I do not remember what it was. The wrong title was given him inadvertently, and it was changed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It was not given inadvertently; it was given that way so as to give a shadow of authority for paying him out of the fund appropriated for the commission. Let me give you some of the facts in relation to this appointment. First, I should like to ask what cases this gentleman has prepared, representing the Government of the United States?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He has just been appointed, not very long ago. You ask me what cases he has prepared. I will tell you that I do not think they will be very numerous, because I do not think there is very much for this commission, which was established by the last Republican administration to take care of their lame ducks.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I suppose that is true; and I notice that you managed to get a lame duck on it immediately afterwards, and put off a good Democrat in order to put him there, too.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We are bound by treaty to take care of these cases. The good Democrat whom the gentleman speaks of resigned because he did not care to render service on the commission any longer.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman refers to a very distinguished citizen of my State, and I happen to know something about his case. Does the gentleman want to convey the impression that the distinguished gentleman on this commission—I refer to ex-Senator Turner—was not requested to resign from that commission?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He was given to understand by the Secretary of State directly that he wanted him to get off of that commission, in order that he might give the place to one of his friends.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know what I am talking about on that. The gentleman is talking about a distinguished citizen of my State, a distinguished Democrat and a lawyer of great ability; a man of the highest honor and standing, and my personal friend. And when the gentleman from Virginia makes the statement that this gentleman resigned without an intimation from the Secretary of State that he wanted him to get off that commission the gentleman is not stating what is correct.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am referring to ex-Senator Turner, and I agree with the gentleman about Senator Turner; but the gentleman is mistaken about his resignation being requested.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know about that part of it. I repeat that he was given to understand by the Secretary of State that his resignation was desired. Ask the Secretary of State and see if he will deny it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. Does the gentleman know that Mr. Wyvell was a candidate for Congress from a New York district in 1912 and 1914, and that he is devoting the most of his time to making political speeches around the country?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will give you a little information about Mr. Wyvell. I do not know anything about the particular matter to which the gentleman refers, but I know that Mr. Bryan, on November 11, 1913, appointed Mr. Wyvell under the title of "counsel for the International Joint Commission" at a salary of $5,000. You might just as well appoint one of the page boys of this House to advise the Supreme Court of the United States upon legal questions as to appoint this gentleman to advise a commission composed of great lawyers on legal questions.

Then they made the discovery that that was not the proper thing to do, and so about December 16 the Secretary wrote a supplemental letter and changed the title to "counsel for the United States before the commission." Before that, when we had an important matter the department that was particularly interested in it furnished the counsel. For instance, when we had the case known as the Livingston Channel case the Department of Justice assigned Mr. Strickland from the department to represent it, as I recall. In the Sault Ste. Marie case they sent Mr. Koons, the law officer of the Chief of Engineers, to represent them. Now they have a distinguished gentleman that was a private secretary to the Secretary of State given the place, and the Secretary has directed the commission to pay his friend a salary monthly at the rate of $5,000 a year. Does the Secretary of State under the construction of this law have the right to direct the payment of that money?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He does. We thought it was necessary to give somebody control over the expenditure of this money besides the commission, that has heretofore been too extravagant with it. For instance, although the home of the commission is in Washington, these gentlemen have been allowing themselves $10 a day for subsistence for every day they were away from their homes on the business of the commission, whether they were in Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why does not the gentleman move to abolish the commission?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We can not do it; we are bound by treaty to keep it up. We did cut the appropriation down, and we did put into this bill a provision by which to curtail their extravagance.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But you want to give $5,000 to some one who has not done anything.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We do not do anything of the kind. Mr. Wyvell's salary began only on the day when he assumed the duties of the position indicated in this paragraph. It is only for payment when he is rendering services. Mr. Tawney, who was then chairman of the commission, appeared before the committee and complained of the system which the gentleman from Washington prefers, of assigning attorneys from the Department of Justice to his commission, and said that American interests were put to a great disadvantage before the joint commission in dealing with questions between this country and Great Britain by reason of that fact, and he suggested that counsel ought to be assigned to do this particular work before the commission. Whether there was a mistake in giving the counsel a proper title in the first instance, I have only the information from Mr. Tawney, from whom, I presume, the gentleman got his information.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have never spoken to Mr. Tawney in my life about this matter, either directly or indirectly. Who are the members of the commission?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Hon. James A Tawney, ex-Gov. Glenn, of North Carolina, and ex-Senator Obadiah G. Gardner, of Maine.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In the hearings the other day, when this question arose before the gentleman's committee, did not Mr. Gardner say that he was opposed to this special counsel? And did not Mr. Tawney add also that he wanted to be placed in the same category?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They did not say that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Was not that the substance of what they said?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; because Mr. Tawney had been there before and asked for him, and Senator Gardner backed him up in that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What Senator Gardner did say was, after he became chairman of the commission, he approved of the restriction upon the expenditure of this fund and thought the members of the commission should devote all of their time to the work.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman from Virginia has no objection, I will place in the RECORD the statements of Mr. Tawney and Mr. Gardner before the committee.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have no objection. Mr. Tawney did make this objection, that this money ought not to come out of this fund; that it ought not to reduce the fund that they handle. The committee thought they had too large an appropriation, and we not only required that this payment should come out of that appropriation, but we cut it down $10,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman another question. This special counsel, as he is now called, has a suite of offices in the Woodward Building in this city. I would like to know how those offices are furnished and how the expenses are paid. Does it come out of this fund of $40,000?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Under the direction of the Secretary of State?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It will be in the future.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think I understand the situation. Here is a gentleman appointed by the Secretary of State special counsel of the United States, notwithstanding that heretofore counsel has been assigned by the Department of Justice or some other department where counsel was particularly qualified for the work; that he was appointed by the Secretary of State; that he is being paid by the month at the request of the Secretary of State; and that he has furnished an office, and the rent of that office is paid at the request of the Secretary of State; and, so far, my information is that he has not prepared any case nor done any work for this commission, but is helping the distinguished Secretary of State in getting places for deserving Democrats; and I make the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That has about as much foundation as most of the statements that the gentleman makes. Here is what Mr. Tawney said:

> The difficulty heretofore has been that there was no authority for the appointment of anyone in the State Department, and there was no appropriation out of which to pay for the services, and it was at their request, at the request of the State Department officials, that I consented, as chairman of the United States section of the International Joint Commission, a year ago, that $5,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, should be paid for the services and the expenses incident to appearing before the commission, to be taken out of our appropriation. It was then that they first selected some one to represent the Government of the United States. We regarded it as so essential that we were willing to have it appear that the expenses of the commission were $5,000 more than they actually are. That was the only way out of it, and that was the reason for the appropriation. The expenditure of the appropriation is all under the direction of the Secretary of State anyway, so that I do not see that it makes much difference whether it comes out of one pocket or another.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am unable to follow the gentleman. From just what line was he reading?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I was reading from the statement of Mr. Tawney, on page 71 and page 72, in reference to the employment of Mr. Wyvell as counsel. He did object, in some part of the hearings, I recall, to compensation coming out of this appropriation, but he says here that so essential does he regard it that they have a counsel that they would consent to have their appropriation taxed with this additional $5,000. As to Mr. Wyvell's ability as an attorney, he is an able attorney, a high-class man, a splendid citizen, nominated, as somebody suggested, by one of the great New York districts for Congress, and he is a man who made a very efficient secretary to the Secretary of State, and is amply able to cope with the lawyers who will represent Great Britain before this tribunal.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly satisfied that a gentleman who would accept a position at $5,000 a year must be capable to advise this international commission, and that he must be a great international lawyer. That fact alone is sufficient evidence to prove that he is competent to fill a high position of that character.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, I recall that the gentleman from Washington served here for $5,000 a year, with only the addition of mileage.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And was very willing to do it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But I never posed as a great international lawyer.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman certainly posed as a statesman, and a statesman ought to be worth as much as a lawyer.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, I would not plead guilty to even that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want now to read to the gentleman what I had in mind a little while ago, because I do not want either the gentleman or the House to think that I had no foundation for the statement I made. The Chairman says:

> The counsel for the United States would have to go wherever the commission sits?
> Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; if, in the judgment of the Secretary of State, the interests of the United States Government required that.

I have no objection to a counsel for the United States. The United States ought to be represented, but heretofore the United Sates has been represented by the different departments without any additional salary. They have always taken some one; but here is what was said:

> The CHAIRMAN. Would he pay his own expenses?
> Mr. TAWNEY. No; it would have to be paid out of the $5,000.

Do I understand the gentleman to contend that this gentleman's expenses are paid out of that $5,000?

Mr. SMITH of New York. No.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not under this law.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then I read further from the hearings:

> Mr. GOODWIN. Then the salary and the expenses incident to the appearing of counsel before the commission would have to be paid out of that $5,000?
>
> Mr. TAWNEY. There is a variance of opinion concerning the construction of that provision.
>
> Mr. GARDNER. I would like to say in connection with this matter that Gov. Glenn and myself were opposed to the appointment of an attorney as a part of the American section of the international joint commission.
>
> Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to have you include me in that statement ment also, because that was so.

I thought I was right about that. All of them objected to this special council.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. But the gentleman is not right. They were opposed to the commission having a counsel, to the appointment of an attorney as part of the American section of the commission. They wanted the United States to have a counsel to represent this Government before the commission. They did not want the commission to have a counsel.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is exactly what the gentleman was appointed for.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is not what he is now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And the reason they changed it was because they discovered there would be some difficulty about getting his salary.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no. It was simply the correction of a mistake.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. There was no mistake about it. The change was made so that the Secretary of State, as he thought, might have authority to direct the payment of his salary. I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman to reserve it for a while.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I reserve it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to state, in reference to this gentleman, that I indorse every word the chairman of the committee so tersely said about Mr. Wyvell. I know Mr. Turner is regarded as a first-class lawyer, a good man in every respect, but I know Mr. Wyvell personally very well, that he is the peer of Mr. Turner in every respect, and is a first-class lawyer. He lived in the district that I have the honor to represent for a number of years, and I know him well as a neighbor and a citizen. He is entirely competent in every respect to occupy the position to which he has been named and will reflect credit on the Government in the important position he now occupies.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But he does not take the position of Senator Turner.

Mr. GOULDEN. I consider him just as good a lawyer, and that is quite complimentary to him, as Senator Turner stands deservedly high in his profession.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the aspersions cast upon Mr. Wyvell's ability as a lawyer by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] ought to go unanswered. Of course, if that statement were confined in knowledge to the membership of the House, who know the gentleman from Washington and know the amount of bombasity he unloads on the House almost daily in malicious criticism of the administration or some of its principal administrative officers, it would be a different proposition; but I want to call the attention of the country to some of the men who recommended Mr. Wyvell—men who know him, men who are acquainted with his ability—and place their statements in the balance against the statement of the gentleman from Washington, and let the House and the country know whether there is any foundation for the gentleman's statement. I read from the statement of Secretary Bryan in the hearings:

He is recommended by a large number of persons in New York who are acquainted with his legal ability, among others Hon. Samuel Seabury, recently elected judge of the Court of Appeals of New York State; by Hon John Ford, Hon. Charles L. Guy, Hon. James A. Blanchard, Hon. L. A. Giegerich, Hon. Mitchell L. Erlanger, justices of the supreme court of the first district; and by Hon. John P. Cohalan, surrogate of New York County; by Hon. William F. Schneider, county clerk of New York County; by Hon. Cuthbert W. Pound; Herbert P. Bissell; Harry L. Taylor, justice of the Supreme Court of New York State, eighth judicial district; by Hon. James W. Gerard, ambassador to Germany; Hon. E. R. O'Malley, formerly attorney general of New York State; Hon. Frank Irvine, dean of the Cornell Law School; and E. H. Woodruff, professor of law in the Cornell Law School.

I think that is sufficient indorsement to say whether Mr. Wyvell is competent to occupy this position, and the source of authority is so great and the information is such that it ought to be received by this House and by the Secretary of State, who suggested the appointment of Mr. Wyvell, as sufficient to warrant the appointment. I do not think the statement made by the gentleman from Washington that the appointment was made without regard to qualification ought to go unchallenged. I make this answer in defense of a man who can not answer for himself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of those who do not know the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE], who has just resumed his seat, and as he says for the benefit of the country, I would like to say that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has no superior in this House in the way of ability. He is one of the best working Members of the House, and he thinks and talks clearly. If the gentleman from Indiana would study the gentleman from Washington and emulate his example, he would be a much better Member of the House than he is, and he is not a bad one at that.

An honest confession, it is said, is good for the soul; and I am going to make a little confession and take part of the blame. This commission was created several years ago, ostensibly in accord with the provisions of a treaty. It has been operating for some years and I presume doing some very good work. The former secretary of the commission was Mr. Busby, who used to be the secretary to the Speaker of the House, Mr. Cannon. When the Democratic administration came into power it was reasonable to suppose that the commission would be reconstituted and be made up of two Democrats and one Republican. It was reasonable to suppose that the new reconstituted commission would employ a Democratic secretary. The commission, in fact, was not immediately reconstituted, though it was shortly; but the commission as reconstituted really wanted to keep Mr. Busby in as secretary, and I am frank to say I wanted to keep Mr. Busby in as secretary; but in a moment of temporary mental aberration I suggested that Mr. Klutz, who was then being urged for appointment as secretary of this commission by the Secretary of State, should be appointed as counsel for the commission and that Mr. Busby be allowed to remain as secretary of the commission. Fatal suggestion. As soon as the recommendation was made—and I ought to have known it—that there could be a new place created, the suggestion was accepted. The new place was created and Mr. Busby did not keep his place. Mr. Klutz was appointed secretary of the commission and the new place was filled by another noble Democrat. I do not criticize the department for doing this. I am only sorry that in a moment I suggested this extravagance, though I do not think that extravagance is so much in the counsel as it is in the rest of the membership connected with the commission and their employees. However, I will try to make it up some time and save that $5,000 somewhere else.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it seems to have become a fashion recently with a few certain gentlemen every time I make a remark to get up and reply by something of the character of the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE]. Now, a while ago while I was speaking about Mr. Wyvell I did not reflect upon his character. It was the character of the position which he was holding to which I was objecting, because I do not believe from what I know about it that he has rendered any service. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] immediately rose and made a statement the character of which has been made familiar by these featherweight statesmen who are back scratching the President and the Secretary of State. Now, gentlemen, I am not going to criticize him, because if there is anything I admire about a bootlicker it is his faithfulness. For these gentlemen who stand up here and defend the Secretary of State for patronage received, I have nothing but admiration. But because they receive this compensation I do not want them to think that they can stand up here on this floor every time I make a remark upon any occasion and attack me in the manner they have. Since I have been a Member of this House, and I leave it to the gentlemen on each side, I have never attacked any man personally except when I have first been attacked, never; and in the speeches I made I did not refer to any gentleman in person, and I give notice that this method of some of these would-be statesmen on that side of the House attacking me and villifying me personally every time I speak is going to come to an end, or I am going to have something to say in reply. There is a certain class of individuals so constituted, so narrow brained, that if you let a thing of this kind pass by too long they take it for cowardice or for a degree of good nature which I may not always possess.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Chair does not sustain that point of order; it is based on a treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not made any argument against it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Chair did not give me time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will give the gentleman time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is founded upon a treaty between this country and Great Britain. The only authority we have for making any part of this appropriation is by the fact we have a treaty and that treaty authorizes this Government to appoint, on the part of this Government, the necessary officials to attend the meeting of this joint tribunal.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had occasion some years ago to review that treaty which was entered into between this country and Great Britain, and I do not think the context of the treaty agrees with the statement of the gentleman that there was any authority for the employment of these officials——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The treaty has that provision, and it necessarily follows that the Government could not carry out the provisions of this treaty without the necessary officials. The appropriation is authorized by treaty.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say further, for the benefit of the Chair, if he will permit, when the original authorization was first incorporated in an appropriation bill it was the understanding on this side that it was subject to a point of order. I remember having examined the treaty at that time. Now, I have not had occasion to examine it since.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia (reading)—

This commission was created by authority of the treaty of January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain to pass upon applications approved by either Government for the use, obstruction or diversion of the boundary waters on one side that might affect the level on the other side, the construction of dams or obstructions in the boundary waters; the decision of the commission being final in those cases. The commission may also be called upon to examine and report on other differences between the two Government, involving rights, obligations and interests along the boundary.

Under that treaty this commission was constituted and of course the necessary assistants for the commission are contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not find this includes assistants to the commission. The Chair finds that this counsel is to be employed for the United States before the commission.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the treaty would cover that or carry that?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; because it is necessary to carry out the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. But this counsel is to argue cases before the commission; he is not a counsel to advise the commission at all.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I call attention to the fact that this is a new position, one that has only been created recently, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated. It was not necessary before, because counsel were assigned from the other department.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in the appropriation bill for last year.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But I think that was the first time it was carried.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was in last year's appropriation bill. It was put in there upon the suggestion of the then chairman of the commission, Mr. Tawney, and this is a limitation on the rest of the appropriation. If it is not paid out of this appropriation there will have to be no appropriation made for it. So this is a limitation upon this appropriation, the amount that the commission has to expend.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the question of whether another appropriation would have to be made to pay this counsel should enter into our consideration at all. The provision reads:

As well as for the payment of necessary expenses, not to exceed the sum of $5,000, incurred, and compensation for services rendered under the direction of the Secretary of State in the examination and preparation of cases involving the use, distribution, or division of waters and other questions or matters of difference covered by the treaty of January 11, 1909.

And then goes along:

And in representing this Government and the American interests involved in the presentation of such cases before the International Joint Commission constituted under that treaty.

Now, he is not appointed as counsel for the commission at all. He is employed to prepare the cases of the people—American citizens—to be presented before the Joint High Commission. Now, how it can be claimed that this is covered by a treaty creating a Joint High Commission the Chair can not see.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This is for salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commission on the part of the United States, making an appropriation of $40,000, and here is a limitation on it of $5,000. And on that account it would be in order. It limits the amount to be appropriated to the commissioners and clerks for salaries and things to $35,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that unless there is an authorization you have the right in an appropriation act to limit the expenditure of $5,000 of this money? You can not use a limitation for an authorization.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If it is a limitation, you can. Here is an appropriation of $40,000 and here is a provision in it that takes $5,000 from the commission to pay the counsel for this Government who appear before the commission. It is a limitation on that appropriation. It saves money to the Treasury, and, therefore, it is in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is referring to an authorization for the payment of clerks and employees by the commission. The Chair has pointed out that this official is really to be appointed, not by the commission but by the Secretary of State, and therefore it is not a limitation on the authority of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not view it that this is a limitation at all. It merely uses this wording to show how it should expend $5,000, and is not a limitation but an expenditure of $5,000—and for what? To prepare cases to be presented to the joint high commission, and not to advise the joint high commission.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the treaty that was entered into between the United States and Canada was for the purpose of settling differences that might arise between the two Governments about the boundary waters. Under that treaty it only states that each side shall appoint three commissioners and other officers, but under the act of Congress of 1911 this wording, at least inferentially, would give authority for the employment of a counsellor for the joint high commissioners representing the United States. And I might say in that connection that Canada is represented by counsel. I think it was stated before our committee that they had two counsellors. I am not sure about that, but they at least had one, and the commissioners representing this country thought it was fair to this country to be represented by counsel also. Here is the reading of the act of Congress of March 4, 1911.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly give the page and volume?

Mr. HARRISON. The page is 1364, Sixty-first Congress, 1910–11, United States Statutes at Large.

Mr. STAFFORD. What volume of the statutes?

Mr. HARRISON. Volume 36. It says:

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, including rental and furnishing, after the passage of this act, of offices at Washington, D. C., and necessary traveling expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $75,000, together with the balance unexpended July 1, 1911, of the appropriation made for said joint commission for the fiscal year 1911.

Now, I call the Chairman's attention——

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the appropriation bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but that is the authority of law, because that is the authority of law that gave to the President the right to fix these salaries and which, at least inferentially, would give the right to appoint other officers to carry out the purposes of the treaty between Canada and the United States. It says further:

Provided, That the salaries of the members of said commission on the part of the United States shall be fixed by the President, and the amount appropriated for the payment of salaries and other expenses hereunder shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State; that said commission or any member thereof shall have power to administer oaths—

And so forth.

So I submit the wording of that statute, "the amount appropriated for the payment of salaries and other expenses hereunder shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State," would carry out the purpose of the treaty, for the treaty says that these various officers shall be employed to carry out the terms of the treaty, without limiting the number or character of officers. I submit that there is authority of law for this appropriation for this counsel.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me, I think that, having some familiarity with the procedure before this commission, I may make it clear to the Chair that the treaty should be the basis for the legislation for an official of this sort favored in the bill. Some people from my State were the first who were obliged to appear before this commission, and I assisted them at best I could, so that I have had some familiarity with the work and procedure of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman throw any light on the point of order?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think I can. The Chair will note that under the treaty there can be but two litigants—the United States and Canada. Under the treaty the commission itself is a judicial tribunal. It is the only permanent judicial tribunal between the two nations. There is no other, and the commission has a vast responsibility under the treaty in deciding matters and controversies which may be referred to the commission by the two Governments.

Now, the Chair must remember that before this judicial tribunal only two litigants can appear—the Canadian Government and the American Government—and that each Government must present its own case on matters for judicial determination. Under the treaty these Governments appear in a case. I think those are the words that were used in the treaty case and questions and matters of difference. The Chairman read, I think, correctly from the treaty.

When any citizens of the United States appear to have a matter which should be presented to the commission, as my people have appeared to have, and seek that a matter be submitted to the tribunal, they first go to the Department of State. The department, under the language of the treaty, is then obliged to formulate an application to present a case on matters to the commission. The Secretary of State and the United States as a party to the treaty then assume the responsibility of presenting this case to this judicial tribunal. That application is presented by the United States itself, and that treaty requires that it be done; and this is the official provided in this bill that this treaty requires now to prepare and present the matter for the United States. So that it seems to me it is clearly implied from the requirements of the treaty itself, a necessary provision for the United States making its application and presenting its case to the commission, that there should be proper officials to present the matter to a judicial tribunal.

Now, who are these proper officials? Who prescribes the proper officials? Why, Congress, of course, has plenary authority in such matter to prescribe how the treaty shall be made effective, and Congress has provided this official as one of the proper officials to present this matter. It can call him anything it pleases, but his duty is to make effective the provisions of this treaty and present the case of the United States. No private individual can perform such duty. The law prohibits it. So it must be done by an official provided by Congress, and this is the man. I can not see how the treaty can be made effective unless something like this be done. If so, it must and should be in order in this bill.

Now, incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee itself to the importance of this tribunal, and

I claim to have some information in regard to it, because, as this committee knows, my relations with Mr. Tawney were intimate when he was a Member of this House, and I know that those who knew him and know him now need not be assured that he needs no defense from those who were associated with him on the floor of this House. He was not only able and capable but was always solicitous for the public expense and the observance of the law and proprieties. He was careful of the public funds when he was the guardian of them, and I know he has not changed in this respect. This tribunal is one of the most important and one of the most dignified tribunals of its kind in the world, and gentlemen of the committee underestimate the responsibilities which it has had and the responsibilities that it must have incident to the controversies and cases and matters and differences which may be submitted by the United States to this commission.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think that anything I have said would warrant the conclusion that I underestimate the importance of the commission or the importance of their work. The statement I made was that up to this time they had done very little work and had decided very few cases, and the criticism I had of the commission was that in former times they had made a loose expenditure of this money.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman underestimates the work, both the amount and importance, which has been done and the work that is pending before this commission. The matter that came from my State was the first. It involved the boundary waters, the Lake of the Woods and Rainy Lake, between Minnesota and Canada, with their vast potentialities of manufacturing and its large interests, involving untold millions of dollars for power and navigation and the fisheries. Just west of us there is a very intricate controversy which has been under way for many years, and, if I recall, is expressly covered by the treaty concerning the Milk River, in Montana, capable of irrigating hundreds of thousands of acres of land. That river rises in the United States and flows up into Canada and comes back into the United States and possibly flows back into Canada again. I do not recall the exact geography on the controversy, but it is of great importance. How those waters shall be distributed and allotted has been a matter of controversy for years. The question involves millions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of acres of land and hundreds of thousands of people and will extend through the long future. That is a matter which is now under settlement by the commission.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; I will be glad to yield to the gentleman on that point.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I suggest to the gentleman that the United States Government has appropriated $5,000,000 for irrigation projects on the Milk River, which belongs to this general subject of settling the question of boundary waters.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes. I am glad the gentleman did interrupt me.

The matter of the height of the waters of Lake Superior involves, Mr. Chairman, the commerce on Lake Superior and that passing through the Soo Canal, which this commission has been considering for several years, and this committee knows that that commerce is larger than that in any other waters in the world. The commerce of this canal and of the waters sought to be controlled which these gentlemen have been considering in the last few years is annually larger than the commerce which can ever pass through the Panama Canal. More than 79,000,000 tons of commerce passed through those canals at the Soo last year, while the possible capacity of the Panama Canal, working day and night for 365 days in the year, is only 80,000,000 tons. More canals are being constructed right now connecting the lakes on both sides—the Canadian and the American sides—because the possible increase will be so great. This commission must give its approval and pass on questions affecting the height and control of those waters, and recently by its wise action produced an annual revenue to the United States of $66,000 per annum for 30 years, or about $7,000,000 for the Treasury.

What I wish to point out to the committee is that this commission, which has charge of the controversies concerning the use of that water, the height of the water, and the diversion of the water, is a tremendously important body, and its dignity and authority should be guarded and respected. Those controversies will continually arise between Canada on the one side and the United States on the other as to the use, diversion, height, and pollution of these waters.

I think the commission has been investigating the pollution of the water which is expressly provided by the treaty, which is a most important matter, affecting the welfare of the people of a most important part of this country. Thousands of people pass over these lakes and are obliged to use that water. Millions of people live on the borders of those lakes and must use that water in one way or another. It is of the utmost importance for this country and for Canada to have the right kind of use and disposition of that water, and that must come on our part through careful investigation by the Government of the United States, and then a proper presentation of these important matters to this commission. It is therefore the duty of the United States to be properly represented before this commission, to properly prepare its case as the treaty requires, and this is the official provided by Congress to represent it. It makes no difference who the person may be, but it is important to have the right kind of an official provided by Congress to represent the United States in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I presume that the Chair is desirous of having information as to the authority which the law or the treaty gives for the appointment of this official. I have in my hand the original treaty, and I direct the attention of the Chair to Article VII of that treaty, which is the authority for the appointment of the three commissioners by the respective Governments. It is as follows:

> The high contracting parties agree to establish and maintain an international joint commission of the United States and Canada, composed of six commissioners—three on the part of the United States, appointed by the President thereof, and three on the part of the United Kingdom, appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the Governor in Council of the Dominion of Canada.

I now direct the attention of the Chair to the really pertinent paragraph as to the appointment of assistants, clerks, and secretaries, and providing for their expenses. It is found in the second paragraph of Article XII of the treaty:

> The United States and Canadian sections of the commission may each appoint a secretary, and these shall act as joint secretaries of the commission at its joint sessions; and the commission may employ engineers and clerical assistants from time to time as it may deem advisable. The salaries and personal expenses of the commission and of the secretaries shall be paid by their respective Governments, and all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the commission incurred by it shall be paid in equal moieties by the high contracting parties.

That is warrant for carrying in an appropriation bill items providing for the salaries of the commissioners, the secretaries, and for clerical assistants employed by the commission, and for incidental expenses incurred by it. This paragraph must also be considered in connection with the appropriation law already cited by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which is:

> Provided, That the salaries of the members of the said commission on the part of the United States shall be fixed by the President—

That is not in conflict with the treaty obligation. And further—> and the amount appropriated for the payment of salaries and other expenses hereunder shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Shall be disbursed. It refers to the expenses for clerical assistance and other expenses which the commission is authorized to incur under the treaty, and only the Secretary of State shall be the disbursing officer.

It is a matter of indifference to me who is the person filling this position. I am only presenting this to the Chair for him to determine whether there is any authorization of law for the employment by the Secretary of State of a counsel for the presentation of cases before this commission. Certainly the treaty which I have read to the Chair and also the paragraph cited by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] contains no warrant for the employment by the Secretary of State of any outside officials.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say that on the first reading of that paragraph that the gentleman has cited I was of the same opinion as the gentleman is, because it specifies that they can appoint these secretaries and engineering and clerical forces; but if the gentleman will read that article 12 a little further he will find that the concluding clause of that article is as follows:

> The commission may adopt such rules of procedure as shall be in accordance with justice and equity, and may make such examination in person and through agents or employees as may be deemed advisable.

Mr. STAFFORD. The commission may, not the Secretary of State.

Mr. HARRISON. The commission may do it, and if the commission think it is advisable to employ counsel to make the investigation, certainly under the terms of the treaty they have a right to employ that counsel, who may be either an employee or an agent, to make that examination. It strikes me that the very article the gentleman has cited gives authority of law.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman will see that the commission are not employing the counsel, nor have they prescribed any rules or regulations for the employment of counsel. It is an outside matter for the Secretary of State to employ this counsel.

Mr. HARRISON. This counsel is certainly to aid the commission, and while the appointment is not made directly by the commission, it is made on the recommendation of the commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing on the face to show that.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is a place that ought to be filled, and it is left optional with the Secretary of State to fill it.

Mr. STAFFORD. You can not bring it within this authority by any such statement as that.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to section 817 of the Manual, a note under Rule XXI, which says:

The authorization by existing law required in the rule to justify appropriations may be made also by a treaty, if it has been ratified by both the contracting parties.

I think clearly the treaty covers this situation.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in construing a statute or treaty it seems to me that some weight should be attached to what has been done under it. What has been the course of procedure? I think it has been stated by some of the parties to this controversy that there has been one appropriation made of a like character. I think it is true that since the inception of this treaty and since the organization of this commission there has been a similar official employed under the Republican administration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. The gentleman did not listen to the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The Republican Secretary of State did employ a man from Massachusetts by the name of Bumpus.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that under the Republican administration, and shortly after this commission was created, a similar official was appointed, and this is the first time a point of order has been raised against an appropriation of this character. I think the Chairman ought to take into consideration what the authors of the law had in mind, as clearly defined by a long line of unbroken procedure since 1909, the time of the adoption of the law.

I am glad my distinguished colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington] had nothing to say against the personal character of Mr. Wyvell or his ability to fill the position creditably. I have known Mr. Wyvell for the last 15 years, and I know him to be a man of high character and exceptional legal ability, standing high in his own State and in his own party, and entitled to all the respect that this Congress or any other department of this Government can give him. The fact that he has been the private secretary to the Secretary of State should not sway our action in this matter one iota. He is a man capable of filling the position, and he will do honor to the service in which he is engaged. I trust the Chairman will not sustain the point of order, for I am satisfied that the position which Mr. Wyvell holds is within the contemplation of the act creating the commission, and Mr. Wyvell or some one else will have to be appointed to represent the Government in matters pending before the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has considered all the arguments on this point of order and regrets that he is unable to agree with the gentlemen who desire tc retain this appropriation in the bill. The Chair views it that here is a high court, created for the consideration of cases between Canada and the United States. He views it that this commission have the right to incur expenses for clerical services and matters of that kind and to pay them out of the appropriation, according to the terms of the treaty. But the Chair does not feel that we have the right to limit any item in this appropriation bill except to pay—

For services rendered under the direction of the Secretary of State in the examination and preparation of cases involving the use, distribution, or division of waters and other questions or matters of difference covered by the treaty of January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain, and in representing this Government and the American interests involved in the presentation of such cases before the international joint commission constituted under that treaty.

The distinction the Chair makes is that here is an attempt to employ counsel, not to advise the commission but to act under the direction of the Secretary of State in preparing cases to be presented to this commission, an absolutely different situation. The counsel is not to act under the direction of the commission; he is to act under the direction of the Secretary of State, and his whole duties are to present the suits in which the United States Government and the American interests are involved before the court. It is as distinct as if we should say that the court had a right to employ counsel to present John Smith before it. It looks like an effort to use the treaty and the fund provided for salaries of the commission and other officials in the employment of counsel to present cases involving American interests. The Chair does not know what those interests are which are referred to, but if they need counsel there ought to be another appropriation for that purpose. Hence the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the next item passed over is on line 6, page 23.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and repairs, consular premises: For the acquisition of suitable premises or for the purchase of land and the erection thereon of a suitable building or of buildings in which to house the consulate general, the United States court, the jail, the post office, and other offices of the United States at Shanghai, China, including all necessary repairs, $360,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COX. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COOPER. Will not the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. COX. I will for a reasonable time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I look upon this provision as one of the most important in the bill. It ought to pass. I think that the gentleman who reserved the point of order will withdraw it after he is made familiar with the facts upon which the Department of State bases its very urgent request for this appropriation. And therefore I intend to do no more than make as plain a statement as possible of the indisputable facts.

In 1913 China bought from other countries nearly $430,000,000 worth of their products and sold to them $306,000,000 worth of her own, her total foreign trade thus amounting to nearly $740,000,000. Of this total foreign trade of China, the city of Shanghai alone did more than 42 per cent—nearly one-half. The imports into Shanghai alone were about $180,000,000, and the exports through her port were nearly $130,000,000, an aggregate of more than $300,000,000. The increase in its foreign trade has been very remarkable. In 1880 the city's imports and exports amounted to only $40,000,000; in 1898 they amounted to more than $200,000,000, and in 1913 to more than $300,000,000. The city has a population of about three-quarters of a million, and is by far the greatest commercial center not only in China but in all the Orient. I visited Shanghai a few years ago. I never shall forget our ride up that crowded river, nor the view of the broad, beautiful avenue along its shore, nor the astonishment with which all of our party looked at the Government-owned buildings occupied by the consular offices of Great Britain, Germany, France, and Japan, our chief commercial rivals, and at the hotels, club houses, banks—some of these being branches of great international banks—and at the many other interesting, attractive sights on that remarkable water front. The British Empire has a number of impressive structures there, including a beautiful cathedral and a fine consulate building. Germany also has such a building, Japan has one, France has one, and Russia is about to build a new one. All of the great nations except the United States have their consultes on that water front, with flags flying in plain view of the shipping from all parts of the world. But ours was on a back street in poor, shabby quarters, out of sight.

The representatives of our Government more than once told us that at times they had felt humiliated on hearing the comments made about our Government offices by oriental traders and other people who came to the American consulate to talk business. They assured us that an appearance of thrift, strength, prosperity always has much influence on the oriental mind, and especially when it is associated with the public offices of a foreign Government. And yet, in so far as its consulate and other public offices were concerned, the United States was by far the most poorly housed of any important nation represented at the great city of Shanghai.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I will.

Mr. MANN. I did not raise the point of order, because I would be quite willing to vote for the item; but in the Louden Act which was passed we limited the cost of any embassy building to $150,000, as the gentleman will remember. What special reason is there for this building or buildings to cost $360,000?

Mr. COOPER. The question asked by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the exact question I asked on first hearing of the proposed appropriation. But a careful study of the conditions and possibilities surrounding our consulate general at Shanghai, the chief port of all the Orient, made the answer plain. If the House will pardon a moment's delay, I will have the Doorkeeper bring in a map and a photograph belonging to the State Department, which show the international settlement on the water front of Shanghai. As I have said, I think that all that is needed to induce any gentleman to consent to a consideration of this proposition is that he acquaint himself with the indisputable facts of the case. At first I was opposed to the proposition, but the evidence—what I heard and read and had seen—convinced me that my opposition was wrong. In my judgment the urgent request of the State Department for this greatly needed appropriation ought to be granted at once.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to shut off the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I want to say that I am going to make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I think we should have a short explanation of the matter.

Mr. COOPER. Has the gentleman from Indiana been requested to make this point of order?

Mr. COX. No; I did it of my own accord.

Mr. COOPER. Then I think that the gentleman will withdraw it after he understands all of the facts.

Mr. COX. I will not withdraw it, but I will withhold it.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman know the reason why the State Department asked for this provision?

Mr. COX. I am well acquainted with the Louden law, but my reason for making the point of order is this: When I see the receipts of the Treasury going down at the rate of a million dollars a day, and is now down to $45,000,000, and I find here a provision exceeding the limit of cost by $200,000, I make up my mind that it is not right. With all due deference to the gentleman, I desire to say that there is nothing personal in the matter. I intend to make the point of order, but I shall withhold it for a reasonable time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, that exact point was urged before our committee. The gentleman from Indiana objects because, as he says, this would exceed the limit of cost set by the Louden law. The complete answer to that objection is that the necessities and the possibilities of our situation at Shanghai are wholly exceptional. We have no such consulate problem elsewhere in the world—nothing comparable to it. Moreover, even in the midst of business depression, it is sometimes advisable for a man who sees a rare business opportunity to borrow money to meet it, because the near future will surely bring him fine dividends upon the investment. Twenty-five years ago Fifth Avenue, New York, was almost exclusively a residential street. If at that time, before the Waldorf Astoria was erected, or any other of the great structures that now adorn that splendid thoroughfare, a man had borrowed money to purchase property among those dwelling houses, most people, especially people who had not studied the subject, would have called him very foolish, whereas the record of events now abundantly demonstrates that he would have been very wise.

Mr. COX. I think there is an item in the bill appropriating $2,400 a year rent for that purpose, and that would be much cheaper than any building would ever cost.

Mr. COOPER. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman should remember that that sum is a part of the rent for six houses situated on a part of the premises on the water front we now occupy and propose to purchase. These premises are directly between the consulate building of Germany and that of Japan.

Mr. Chairman, Germany, Great Britain, Japan, France, Russia, our great business competitors, all appreciate the fact that Shanghai is on the Whangpoo River, a stream that, with its tributaries, affords access to practically one-third of China, a country whose vast natural resources have but barely felt the touch of modern industrial methods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, China is our friend. We gave back the Boxer money to China and in other ways have indicated our friendship for her. When an end comes to the war now raging in Europe, our chief commercial rivals will put forth tremendous efforts to capture the trade of China. Her foreign trade, now between $700,000,000 and $800,000,000 a year, is certain to be rapidly and greatly increased. A wonderful change is coming over China. This change is of especial interest to me, because it seems like the fulfillment of a prophecy that I heard made a few years ago in China by a Chinaman. On a train going from Canton he informed me that he was an official of the railroad company and had been educated at Lehigh University, in this country. On my remarking that I had recently visited Japan and had been greatly impressed by the developments and transformations going on there, he said quietly, but with earnestness, "Yes, Mr. COOPER, we Chinamen know what Japan has done and is doing; we Chinamen have studied Japan, and we know why and how she is succeeding." Then, closing his hand in this fashion, he added: "And, I assure you, Mr. COOPER, that China is going to turn over." Coming from him, under such circumstances, that was an extraordinary expression—"China is going to turn over." So I said, "If you mean that China is going to turn over as Japan has turned over in the recent past by adopting modern methods, you have made a statement of startling significance. If, with your 400,000,000 of people, your skilled mechanics, and abundance of common labor, your iron mines, coal mines, and other rich natural resources as yet only a small fraction developed—if with all these you change as Japan has changed, you are to do something of profound concern to the whole world." He closed his hand, and, striking gently on the ledge of the open window, replied in his calm, forceful, Chinese way: "Yes; we know that, Mr. COOPER, and we know also that powerful influences are at work in opposition, but I assure you that China is going to turn over."

That was a strange prophecy. I reported it to some of my fellow travelers and they thought it the most significant utterance heard on the trip. It was a strange prophecy, but how soon it proved true. Only a brief time passed before we witnessed the overthrow of the Empire in China and the establishment of the Republic on its ruins. The vast "turn over" had begun. Mr. Chairman, China intends to turn over also by the adoption of modern industrial methods. She is our friend, as we are hers. China has $700,000,000 worth of foreign trade, of which our share has been less than 10 per cent. That total of seven hundred millions is going to be developed into billions. It is the duty of statesmanship to be provident of the future. It is our duty to lose no opportunity in an honorable way to help put our country in as good a position as possible in the coming world struggle for the trade of China and the other nations of the Far East.

Along the shore of the river is this broad avenue, filled always by people from all over the globe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. COX. Oh, no. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. COOPER. That should make no difference. This is Saturday afternoon.

Mr. COX. But there is another bill to be considered this afternoon.

Mr. COOPER. There is nothing in that bill of more importance than is the proposition I am discussing.

Mr. COX. I understand there is another appropriation bill to come before the House this afternoon.

Mr. COOPER. Give me 15 minutes and there will be no objection.

Mr. COX. I am willing to allow the gentleman to proceed for 5 minutes, but I can not agree to 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Wisconsin proceeding for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Upon this water front [pointing to the map] there is what is called the international settlement, to which are confined by the law of China all foreign resident of Shanghai, including the representatives of foreign Governments. It is a very restricted area. The value of the property within it has gone up with exceeding rapidity during the last 20 years. There is remaining but one site upon this water front which we can buy—only one. We are now occupying it. As I have said, it is located directly between the German Government building and the Japanese Government building. During the course of his examination before our committee I asked Mr. Carr, the Director of the Consular Service of the United States, with whom the Members of the House are very favorably acquainted, if there were any particular reason, aside from the reasons given in the report of the State Department, why we ought to get that property now. He hesitated. I repeated the question, in substance, and he replied that unless we exercise our option and take this splendid location—absolutely the only location left on that water front—and take it now, we are in very serious danger of losing it forever.

I said, "Who is after it?" Then, he gave the name of a steamship company belonging to a nation that is one of our great rivals for the trade of the Orient. So that if that steamship company should buy the property and locate itself between the consulate of Germany and the consulate of Japan, the United States of America will be forever barred from the magnificent water front in Shanghai.

Now, as to the price asked for the property. On this point the Department of State says:

> The department has the assurance of the minister at Peking, the consul general at Shanghai, the American Association of China, and others, as to the reasonableness of the price at which the property has been held. * * *
> As an illustration of the reasonableness of the price asked for the property under option the consul general reports that the British firm of Hall & Holtz (Ltd.) has purchased about one-third of an acre of ground, together with the buildings thereon, on Nanking Road, Shanghai, for approximately $170,000. This property is located about 400 feet from the river front and in what at present may be considered the best retail district of Shanghai. For consular or modern hotel purposes, however, such a location is not as desirable as the water-front location now occupied by the consulate general. The buildings on the Hall & Holtz property are of red brick and may be roughly estimated to be worth $50,000, which, deducted from the total cost, leaves the valuation of the land at $120,000, or approximately $60,000 a mu. Estimated on the same valuation the land only which is now under option to the United States would be worth over $336,000, but, as has already been stated, on the basis of the estimate of the overseer of taxes this land would be worth $392,000.

We are now renting only about one-half of the floor space of all of the buildings on the property. Our option expires on the 4th of March. If that foreign steamship company takes the land, we are forever barred. Who does not know that when the war in Europe is ended the United States is going to meet with tremendous rivalry for the great trade certain to be developed in China? Business prudence—ordinary business prudence—demands that we do not lose this opportunity to own the very superior business site that we now occupy, the only site on that great water front possible for us to own, an opportunity that may be lost forever if we lose it now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make the point of order of no quorum present, and I ask the gentleman to permit the gentleman from Wisconsin to go on. His speech is exceedingly interesting, and I think the gentleman will save time by giving him 15 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be abrupt about this. I have served notice that I am going to make the point of order. The gentleman has had already 15 or 20 minutes, and there are other appropriation bills pressing here. However, if the gentleman from Illinois wants to be instrumental in losing time he must take the responsibility on himself.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will let the gentleman from Wisconsin have the 15 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition in the world to shut off the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. This is clearly subject to a point of order. The gentleman has now had 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. But the statement the gentleman is making now is important.

Mr. COX. But there is another appropriation bill coming in where there will be general debate, and the gentleman can come in on that.

Mr. MADDEN. But it will not be consecutive, and why not yield and permit the gentleman to have 15 minutes? We will not lose any more time by this than if the point of no quorum was made.

Mr. COX. I will withhold the point of order for five minutes, and at the end of that time I will make it. It is five minutes or nothing.

Mr. MADDEN. We want to hear what the gentleman from Wisconsin has to say. I hope the gentleman will do it. I would do as much for him.

Mr. CALDER. Suppose you make it eight minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Make it 10 minutes.

A MEMBER. Let us divide the time and make it seven and a half minutes.

Mr. COX. No; make it five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for seven and a half minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not within the discretion of the Chair to give as much time as he desires to listen——

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair has to rule on the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I will withhold my point of order for 10 minutes. [Applause.] At the end of that time I am going to make the point of order.

Mr. COOPER. I am greatly indebted to the gentleman from Indiana. Here is what the State Department said:

> Unless, therefore, this Government is able to purchase the property the offices of the consulate general, upon the expiration of the present lease, must be removed to other quarters, and there are none on the water front and none near the business portion of the settlement to be found. The department has the assurance of the minister at Peking, the consul general at Shanghai, the American Association of China, and others as to the reasonableness of the price at which the property has been held. In 1907 the United States could have purchased suitable premises in the vicinity of the present consulate general for $216,000. Since that date property in that neighborhood has risen in value. The reasons are two—the growth of the port and the restricted area of the district in which foreigners are permitted to reside.
> The land assessments of 1907 showed an increase in the value of property in the vicinity of the consulate of twenty times that of 1880 and eight and one-half times that of 1890. This indicated to some extent the rate of growth.

This increase in price reminds us of the way in which the value of property has increased in the restricted loop district in Chicago, or along Fifth Avenue, or some of the other great thoroughfares in the city of New York. The circumstances in Shanghai are very exceptional. The city itself is surrounded by a stone wall, pierced by gates. This international settlement has a restricted area which can not be increased. Within this area the great business nations of the world have built business houses—consulates are business houses—diplomatic services are not performed in them; they are business houses. England, Germany, France, Japan, and Russia know the necessity of having government-owned consulates worthy of the dignity of the nation. We, the foremost of republics, destined, we hope, to become the foremost of all nations the wide world around, are going to seek a legitimate share of the foreign trade of the Far East, and therefore we need and ought to have a place on the water front in what is to be the London of the Orient [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for just a second?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman was speaking here, I was talking for a moment with Senator LEWIS, of Illinois, who made a trip to the Orient two or three years ago by direction of the State Department, and he said to me that it was an odd coincidence that while he was sitting over here, which is very rarely, Mr. COOPER was making a speech about a subject on which he had made a report, and he stated that the property that Mr. COOPER was talking about was of inestimable value to the United States.

Mr. COOPER. Did Senator LEWIS say that?

Mr. MANN. That is what he said just now, that he made a report upon it, and that it is worth many times to us what it could possibly cost now. That is what Senator LEWIS said.

Mr. COOPER. I have never, either directly or indirectly, had any communication with Senator LEWIS on the subject of our consulate at Shanghai, nor upon any other subject in anywise relating to the Orient. Until the gentleman from Illinois made his statement a moment ago I was not aware that Senator LEWIS had ever been in Shanghai. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, it is an odd coincidence that the Senator should come to this Chamber at this time. I am very glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois say that the Senator has visited Shanghai and is familiar with the subject I am discussing, and that in a recent report to the State Department the Senator declared that the location of our consulate on that water front in Shanghai is a thing of inestimable importance to the business of the United States.

This is not a proposition to throw away public funds. On the contrary, it is, as I say, a proposal to make a business investment that in the near future will yield profitable dividends. The great international business struggle of the future is to come in the Orient.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. COX. At what is this land assessed?

Mr. COOPER. I just read what the State Department says:

> Estimated on the same valuation, the land which is now under option to the United States would be worth over $336,000, but, as has already been stated, on the basis of the estimate of the overseer of taxes this land would be worth $392,000.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman information as to what this land is actually assessed at for taxation purposes now? I am informed it is assessed at $108,000.

Mr. COOPER. Well, I know nothing about that. It may be, if the assessment is as it is in some cities of this country, at about a third or a quarter of the value. However, here is the estimate of the overseer of taxes that this land is worth $392,000.

Mr. COX. Has he any interest in this property?

Mr. COOPER. None whatever.

Mr. COX. Has he ever testified on that point?

Mr. COOPER. But the China Realty Co.——

Mr. COX. Is he a member of the China Realty Co.?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Carr said, I believe, that none of the people who testified was interested in this property.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any information as to who constitutes the China Realty Co.?

Mr. COOPER. No; nor does that make the slightest difference. I am sure that our minister at Peking is not a member of that company. He strongly favors this proposition. I am sure that our consul general is not a member of that company, and that none of our consular officers is a member of it. All of these men strongly indorse this proposition, as does our Secretary of State and the Director of the United States Consular Service. I do not think that the American association in China are owners in this property. This association also indorses the proposition. And Senator LEWIS, a Democratic Senator, who went to China on a mission for the State Department, came in here a few minutes ago and told the minority leader that as a result of his personal observation he considered it of inestimable importance that the United States Government should not lose this one chance to secure a business location in Shanghai, the greatest business city in all the Orient. This is not a party question. The United States ought not to lose an opportunity to make a wise investment, nor should the gentleman from Indiana if one presents itself to him.

Mr. COX. The "gentleman from Indiana" has no money to make any such investment.

Mr. COOPER. The same is true of the "gentleman from Wisconsin." My time is expiring. Before concluding, permit me to say that I have no knowledge as to who are the owners of this property. No person, directly or indirectly, ever has spoken to or had any communication with me on this subject——

Mr. COX. I think that is absolutely true.

Mr. COOPER. One moment. Except in the committee room, when all the members were present, and except that Mr. Carr and I made brief and mere casual reference to it when we chanced to meet for a moment at a recent reception at the Japanese Embassy.

Mr. COX. I entertain no doubt but that is absolutely true.

Mr. COOPER. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw the point of order. He certainly ought to do so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I send an amendment to the desk, which I will ask the Clerk to report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 27, by inserting in lieu of the paragraph headed "Exposition in city of Panama," the following:

"EXPOSITION IN CITY OF PANAMA.

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept an invitation extended by the Government of Panama to the Government of the United States to participate in an exposition to be held in the city of Panama; and the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable suitable participation in said exposition by this country for an appropriate exhibit of the arts, industries, manufactures, products of the soil and the mines of the United States, and, as far as practicable, of the functions of the General Government, and an exhibit of such other articles as the President may direct, including an exhibit relating to the Panama Canal."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman wants to make a point of order, the point of order is good.

Mr. GOOD. I want to ask the gentleman a few words in regard to it. The naval appropriation bill appropriates $104,000, as I understand, for a naval display at the opening of the canal. There is now pending a legislative appropriation bill that carries an item of $160,000, and that item, if it passes the House as agreed to in the Senate, gives to the President the use of the vessels of the Navy and the transports, and the use of the Panama Railroad, which, I assume, includes the use of the hotels that are owned by the Panama Railroad Co. Here is $264,000, with practically everything paid for by the Government throughout other appropriations for which we could be called upon to pay money. Now, $25,000 is not a large sum, but I only want to inquire if this is to be used in addition to these other sums we have already been appropriating or for which the appropriation bills are pending?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This is for a different purpose. This is to send an exhibit from this country to the Panama Exposition, which opens on the 6th of July. The $160,000 may be partly consumed in going through the canal at that time, partly consumed in taking distinguished Americans up to the San Francisco exposition and the other expositions in California, but this is for an entirely distinct purpose. It is to send an exhibit, and has nothing in it in the nature of an appropriation for trips for anyone.

Mr. GOOD. What is the object of reducing it from $100,000 to $25,000 if we are to make an exhibit that is to be at all——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We never intended to spend more than $25,000 for the exhibit.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that the $100,000 included $75,000 for a permanent exhibition building in the city of Panama on the side of the city opposite to Balboa. I made a point of order on that provision on the ground that we did not need a permanent exposition building there, or that if we did the building ought to be located on the Canal Zone, on our own territory, and not located opposite, across the city, at a point in the opposite direction, where nobody would ever go to it hereafter. That is the reason for the reduction.

Mr. GOOD. My inquiry was whether or not $25,000 would be sufficient to enable the Government to make a suitable exhibition of our arts and sciences in the exposition.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The estimate was made by the State Department for $25,000 for this purpose, and $75,000 for the purpose stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that if we make any exhibit there at all, which may be somewhat doubtful, it is quite probable that the State Department will have the Panama Canal make some exhibition in regard to the Panama Canal, which would be paid out of this fund. I do not think there would be much else done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. May I inquire of the gentleman from Virginia what is to be the nature of this exhibition?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. An exhibit of the arts, industries, manufactures, products of the soil and mines of the United States, and, as far as practicable, of the functions of the General Government, and an exhibit of such other articles as the President may direct, including an exhibit relating to the Panama Canal.

Mr. SIMS. But the Government does not have any of those exhibits, does it?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It would have to get them up.

Mr. SIMS. Could it get them up from private industries and manufactures? Is not that a new departure?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not believe so.

Mr. SIMS. The Government exhibits heretofore have been confined to things in the National Museum and the Smithsonian Institution and things that pertain to the Government business.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Government wants to make an exhibit that people traveling through the canal from all parts of the world may see and therefrom get some idea as to our resources.

Mr. SIMS. As to manufactures as well as other things?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The Government would have to prepare those things?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; from the $25,000 appropriated.

Mr. MOORE. I do not think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia provides for agricultural exhibits, does it?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; for exhibits of products of the soil.

Mr. MOORE. It does not provide for products of the waters—fish and dried fish—which is a very important commodity in the South American countries?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. MOORE. I am going to offer an amendment to cover that point, which I think the gentleman from Virginia will accept.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; I will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment as follows: After the word "soil" insert a comma and strike out the words "and the" and after the word "mines" insert the words "and waters."

Mr. MOORE. That would mean, Mr. Chairman, that exhibits could be made of dried fish and other products of the waters of the United States, which are used very extensively in tropical countries.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a paragraph from the letter of the British secretary of state for foreign affairs to the American ambassador in relation to our foreign trade, following up the statement I made this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LINTHICUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. FERRIS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 6168, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report thereon having been made.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21328, the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. HAY. And pending that, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a moment in which to make a request?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, pending that I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow, Sunday, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, it is now almost 3 o'clock. As I understand, there will probably be in the neighborhood of an hour's debate on the Military Academy bill?

Mr. HAY. About an hour.

Mr. MANN. And I suppose the fewer that are here considering the bill the more easily it will be passed. Is it the intention to adjourn either when we finish the Military Academy bill or after we have had the first reading of the fortification bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman in charge of the fortification bill [Mr. SHERLEY] may want to take it up and have it started, but not to do any work on it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, pending my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be confined to an hour, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the exercises in connection with the opening of the Panama-Pacific Exposition are taking place at the White House at this time. Mr. KAHN, necessarily, has gone to attend those exercises, and while the time may be allotted to him, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] will control it.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] told me he would be away, but asked to have the division of time made in that way, and stated that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] would control it for him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. FOWLER. I rose for the purpose of reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know of the distinguished chairman of the committee if I may have 10 minutes.

Mr. HAY. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman 10 mintues.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire 10 minutes on this bill, and I feel constrained to object unless I have some assurance that it will be allotted to me.

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. HAY was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the pension appropriation bill which passed yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the pension appropriation bill which passed yesterday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, during this and the last session of Congress it has been the custom of the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle to inject into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD daily statements regarding the financial condition of the Treasury of the United States, many of which have been altogether imaginary or based upon false information. It has been repeatedly stated by these statesmen on the floor of the House that the Underwood bill was so unskillfully drawn that it has proven to be a failure as a revenue producer. I desire to call the attention of these gentlemen to a comparison of the revenue produced under the first fiscal year of the Underwood bill with that produced under the last two years of the Payne-Aldrich bill.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the total ordinary receipts in round numbers for the first year of the Underwood bill amounted to $734,000,000; while the total ordinary receipts for the fiscal year 1913 amounted to $724,000,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, the total ordinary receipts amounted to $691,000,000. It will thus be seen from these figures that the revenue for the first fiscal year under the Underwood bill amounted to $10,000,000 more than the revenue for the best year under the Payne-Aldrich bill. If the gentlemen on the other side would give more attention to the reports of the Treasury Department and less attention to the clamor of the special interests and false statements in the subsidized press, their public statements on the floor of this House might be more in harmony with the facts. The public prefers truth instead of falsehoods, and while the people are usually patient, yet, when they find that they have been outraged by deception and falsehood, they become more exacting in their demands for the causes prompting public servants in making misleading statements.

It is well known that all legislation is more or less a compromise. This applies to tariff measures the same as to other measures. I have no doubt but what the Payne-Aldrich bill was not altogether satisfactory to any of the men who voted for it. Mr. Payne himself was much disappointed and probably never recovered from the shock which was produced by the passage of that measure, which was to bear his name, because many changes were made after the first draft of the bill radically increasing the rates; yet he was compelled to submit to the majority sentiment of his party in Congress. It was the highest protective measure of all other tariff laws, and while Mr. Payne was not a radical advocate of a high protective tariff, yet he voted for the bill on its passage.

In the preparation of the Underwood bill the Democrats were divided on the question of tariff rates, and while the bill as it passed did not reflect in all of its parts the wishes of any of us, yet, as a whole, it was a reduction of the high rates carried in the Payne bill and in harmony with the promises which we made the people in advance of our election. I was in favor of retaining a reasonable rate on wool, sugar, and farm products, but the majority of our party decided otherwise, and as a revenue producer, if we may judge from the income of the first year of its life, it will produce under ordinary conditions ample revenue to meet the requirements of the Treasury. After paying all expenses of the Government we had $34,000,000 left. The first year of all new tariff laws is usually the worst year, and it requires time for business conditions to adjust themselves to the new features of the law. The gentlemen who are denouncing the Underwood law as a free-trade measure well know that it was intended to be a revenue measure free from graft and special privileges. They well know that their criticism of this measure is unjust, and that the falling off of the revenue since July last is the result of the radical disturbance in commercial circles abroad. The European war is the greatest and most universal calamity known to man. The disturbance in the business and financial countries of Europe is much greater than in America.

The nations in the war zone are bankrupt and compelled to float loans frequently in order to bring sufficient revenue to defray the ordinary expenses of Government. Their business is paralyzed and their commercial relations with us is such that imports to this country from these sources has dropped down to a mere bagatelle. This being true no man of ordinary sense would dare to attribute the falling off of the revenue to the Underwood bill, because tariff revenues depend entirely upon imports from other countries.

It was not intended that the consumer should be taxed as heavily under the new tariff schedules as they had been under high-protective tariff law. We believe that the surplus millions in the hands of the idle and unscrupulous rich should bear at least a portion of the burden of taxation, and acting upon this just and humanitarian principle we provided for an income tax in the Underwood bill so that hereafter the rich will be compelled to pay a tax upon the never-ceasing stream of wealth which flows into their coffers as an income from the labor of the toiling many. I regard this feature of the Underwood bill as one of the safeguards not only to the Treasury but to the people of our country. We were able to incorporate this law in our tariff bill by virtue of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution which was adopted by the various States of the Union.

Mr. Chairman, I have been so impressed with the virtue of the sixteenth amendment that I have embodied a few of my thoughts in some homemade poetry which I desire to recite:

THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The right to levy an income tax
  Had been upheld for a hundred years,
And more; but confronted with some facts,
  Which bore evidence of many fears,
Lest their dividends might be impaired,
  Should such tax be perpetuated,
The rich, in their wrath, boldly declared
  That it must be exterminated.
The sixteenth amendment, hail, all hail!
Its triumph, resplendent, hail, all hail!

Such tax in the past had been confined
  To cases of national distress,
But after it was clearly outlined
  That tariff rates were used to oppress
The toiling many for the rich few,
  It was clear that a change must be made
In our plan of raising revenue;
  So wealth, its taxes could not evade.
The sixteenth amendment, hail, all hail!
Its triumph, resplendent, hail, all hail!

In our state of civilization,
  It would be natural to expect
That no fraud or intimidation
  Would be used at the polls to reflect
On elections by majority;
  Yet, a rule, hatched up by party cliques,
Boldly claimed, without authority,
  That ev'rything's fair in politics.
The sixteenth amendment, hail, all hail!
Its triumph, resplendent, hail, all hail!

Capital, by this base rule inspired,
  Sought to corrupt the electorate,
And for this purpose secretly hired
  An army of men, most desperate.
Their corrupt dealings with the voter
  Coined such terms as "slush fund," "scoop the dive,"
"Ward heeler," "we have the dope," "floater,"
  "Booster, "two-dollar bills," "blocks of five."
The sixteenth amendment, hail, all hail!
Its triumph, resplendent, hail, all hail!

The States, in righteous indignation,
  Passed laws vote selling to disfranchise,
Which acted as a stimulation,
  Honest elections to aggrandize.
The long struggle to enforce these laws
  Slowly molded public opinion
In favor of the party whose cause
  Promised reform in our dominion.
The sixteenth amendment, hail, all hail!
Its triumph, resplendent, hail, all hail!

The people, wrought up to a high pitch
  During the campaign of ninety-two,
Mustered their forces against the rich,
  Electing their ticket through and through;
Down went tariff rates in ninety-four,
  With a righteous law, taxing incomes,
Which created a tremendous roar
  Among proud masters owning big sums.
The sixteenth amendment, hail, all hail!
Its triumph, resplendent, hail, all hail!

For thirty years, the profits of toil
  Had been reaped by capital combined,
But through bitter struggles of turmoil,
  A new policy had been outlined,
Shifting the burden of taxation
  From the backs of the unsupported,
To incomes on wealth valuation,
  And on luxuries, when imported.
The sixteenth amendment, hail, all hail!
Its triumph, resplendent, hail, all hail!

Having been vanquished by the masses
  In their fight for Federal control,
Appeal was taken by the classes
  To the high court, the death knell to toll
